"Al right, my son. You are to work well during the next eighteen months, then, if we make a good crop of wheat from these two fields, you shall have a fair share of the proceeds toward a college education." That was my father's proposition.

The west field was the most desirable bit of land on our Illinois farm. It grew the heaviest crops of red clover to be found in that part of the country; and it never failed to give a good account of itself whenever seeded to wheat. The field to the east of the house was larger, but the soil was not so fertile nor was it so well suited to the production of wheat.

We usually summer-fallowed for wheat. Breaking the land in late spring—especially a pasture sod after a good rain—was a most delightful task. I always enjoyed following the plow, turning a straight, clean furrow. Fitting the land was not so pleasant. Through the long dry, and sometimes exceedingly hot, summer days I followed the team and harrow over those fields—east and west, north and south, and then diagonally. At times horses and harrow and boy were completely enveloped in great billowy clouds of dust. Two good things were accompliched: 1. All the weeds and grass were killed out. 2. Just beneath the dry surface of the dust mulch the soil was filled with moisture.

At the proper date father started the drill—he always did the seeding. When this work was completed the fields were a beautiful sight. The drill marks were straight and even, and the entire surface of the land looked like a garden. A few weeks later those fields were certainly pretty, dressed out in their velvety coats of living green.

Winter in south-eastern Illinois is not, as a rule, friendly to young wheat plants.. Snow is uncertain in its coming and does not usually remain on the ground long at a time. Freezing and thawing alternate, heaving out the slender roots. Winds carry off the moisture and often play havoc with the loosened soil, leaving wheat roots almost bare.

At the coming of spring our wheat fields looked only fairly well. A favorable spring and early summer season, however, more than evened things up, so that the crop was above the average of the years.

Three things contributed to make wheat harvest a pleasant time for me: 1. Mother always saw to it that we had an abundance of extra good things to eat. 2. I was not too old to enjoy chasing young rabbits in the stubble. 3. The Fourth of July picnic immediately followed wheat harvest.

Getting the crop into the stack-yard was an agreeable task, for I was proud of my father's statement that I could pitch as much hay or wheat as any hired man he had ever employed. By exchanging work with neighbors the stacking was soon done—and the big, long ricks and egg-shaped stacks certainly looked fine. Threshing was a short job, using the steam thresher, as compared with the old days of the horse-power machines.

It was now time to start for school—in case the price of wheat was high enough to provide sufficient funds.

Preparations were made, my trunk was packed and put on the wagon with a load of wheat, I said "good-bye" to mother—this was the last time I ever saw her, for she died before I returned—and father and I started for a market town, twenty miles away, where I was to take a train for Michigan to enter Adrian college.

On reaching the market we found ourselves up a stump. The buyer did not offer a satisfactory price for our wheat. As we went to a hotel to spend the night father acted as though the situation was quite serious, and my courage suffered a decline. He said, however, that in the morning he would go to a larger town three miles farther on and see what could be done.

After breakfast, much to my relief, we went to the rail road station—though father still seemed uncertain about the money. When he took out his purse to pay for my ticket my eyes naturally, and with no small interest, followed every movement of his fingers. Taking the strap from the loops and unfolding the flaps there was disclosed to my eager eyes a considerable layer of bills—Vs, Xs, and some XXs. With a smile he handed me the bills I was to carry with me. As I took them I could not help noticing how flat and hard pressed they were. Closer inspection showed here and there spots of mould. Evidently they had been carried in his pocket for weeks—some of them for months—subject to dampness from perspiration and to considerable pressure, folded as they were in the purse.

That was my father. All along he had meant to be forehanded in this matter. He was greatly desirous that I haye educational opportunities that had not been for him, and he had not be willing to stake our plans, his and mine, on the returns from a single load of wheat at a particular time.

As I rode on the train that day my thoughts dwelt much on my father. I recalled with pleasant appreciation how companionable and friendly he had been during the past several years—since we had come to understand each other. In imagination, I could see him going with his load of wheat to the other market, selling it at a fair price, then taking the long ride home alone. His work on the farm would be heavier because of my absence, and I believed he would miss our frequent friendly conversations, as I certainly should. More than once during the day I slyly took those folded mouldy bills from my pocket and looked at them gratefully.

My father was not much given to tears. But I sometimes think he let fall a tear of satisfaction on the way home. He was no hand to squander money on himself; but he did like to make it accomplish his good purposes concerning his children. The starting of a second son toward a higher education would stir his emotions. The shades of evening came on before he reached home that day, and for a moment, with no eye but God's upon him, the fountain of tears must have opened.

It was some years after my graduation from college, while I was a student in one of the professional schools of Yale university, that my father died after a very brief illness. I have always regretted that I did not have the privilege of ministering to him in his last sickness; he had so faithfully cared for me whenever I had been ill. He was only fifty-eight years old. Had he lived longer it would have been an increasing joy to have shared with him more largely the educational enjoyments that have come to me through his hard-earned money which—though flat and mouldy when the first of it was handed to me—was always morally clean and good.

HIS OWN ALMONER

Russel H. Conwell, founder of Temple University, Philadelphia, and also the founder of two hospitals, lived an active and useful life. During his day he made nearly $11,000,000 by his books and lectures, not the least among these being the famous lecture, "Acres of Diamonds." He was a man who lived industriously and frugally, yet he left less than $9,000 at the time of his death. The rest of the millions of dollars which he made he invested in education and mercy. He had the great joy of seeing his money bearing fruit even during his own life. This was evidently a great joy to him. The miser would say: "He saved nine thousand out of eleven million dollars," but the wise would say that "He saved all but $9,000 out of his life's earnings." He invested according to his own best judgment and he, and multitudes of others, enjoyed the investment to the full.—World Evangel.

STONEWALL JACKSON: THE NEGRO'S BEST FRIEND

By H. H. Smith

In all his dealings with the colored race, Stonewall Jackson showed himself to be their sincere friend, and for their uplift he gave of his time, his talents and his means.

"The first slave owned by Stonewall Jackson was allowed to buy his freedom in the following manner: He worked for wages in a hotel and turned over his earnings to Jackson until the latter received a sum equal to the amount given for the servant. The next servant under Jackson's control was an aged woman who appealed to him to purchase her. After the war began this woman became an invalid, but Jackson sent money from the field to pay for mediral attention and every physical comfort. She died a Christian, her last message being an expression of gratitude for the kindness of her benefactor."

From 1855 to 1861, he conducted a Sunday school for the negroes of Lexington, and the surrounding country. "Every Sunday afternoon he and his wife were in their places giving instruction to the colored people." "It was pleasant," writes Mrs. Preston, "to walk about the town with him and see the veneration with which the negroes saluted him, and his unfailing courtesy toward them. To the old gray-haired negro who bowed before him he would lift his cap as courteously as to his commander-in-chief."

Dr. J. William Jones says: "During the six years I resided in Lexington, I found that the negroes held in highest esteem the memory of Jackson, and always spoke with grateful affection of his work among them. It is a very pleasing incident that the first contribution towards the erection of the beautiful bronze statue, which now decks the hero's grave, was from the Negro Baptist Church of Lexington, whose pastor and some of whose prominent members belonged once to Jackson's negro Sunday school."

The following incident will show with what veneration Jackson was regarded by the colored people of Lexington and the surrounding community:

"When Hunter's army was marching into Lexington, the Confederate flag which floated over Jackson's grave was hauled down and concealed by some of the citizens. A lady who stole into the cemetery one morning while the Federal army was occupying the town, bearing fresh flowers with which to decorate the hero's grave, was surprised to find a miniature Confederate flag planted on the grave with the verse of a familiar hymn pinned to it. Upon inquiry she found that a colored boy, who had belonged to Jackson's Sunday school, had procured the flag, gotten someone to copy a stanza of a favorite hymn which Jackson had taught him, and had gone in the night to plant the flag on the grave of his beloved teacher."

"I am very confident," says his wife, "that he would never have fought for the sole object of perpetuating slavery. He found the institution a responsible and troublesome one, and I have heard him say that he would prefer to see the negroes free, but he believed that the Bible taught that slavery was sanctioned by the Creator Himself, who maketh all men to differ, and instituted laws for the bond and free. He therefore accepted slavery, as it existed in the South, not as a thing desirable in itself, but as allowed by Providence for ends which it was not his business to determine."

"At the same time," says his wife, "the negroes had no truer friend, no greater benefactor. Those who were his servants in his own house he treated with the greatest kindness, and never was more happy or more devoted to any work than that of teaching the colored children in his Sunday school."

On the day following the great struggle at the First battle of Manassas, he wrote to his pastor as follows:

"My dear Pastor: In my tent last night, after a fatiguing day's service, I remembered that I had failed to send you my contribution to our colored Sunday school. Enclosed you will find my check for that object, which please acknowledge at your earliest convenience, and oblige, Yours faithfully," etc.

FRIEND TO FRIEND

It ain't success I'd rather have,
And praise don't satisfy;
For after all is said and done
They hardly get you by.
The world may honor, laud or praise,
Or grant respect of men,
But I would rather have them say,
"My Good Old-Fashioned Friend."

It ain't the wealth that thrills me thru
And makes my heart ring true;
For all the riches in the world
Can't make it beat true blue.
The only wealth that brings real joy
And makes my heart strings bend,
Is the wealth I feel when I am called
"My Good Old-Fashioned Friend."

My heart goes out to any man,
Who thru his words and deeds
Exemplifies that friendship true
My heart so sorely needs.
Of all the honors worth the while
Of noble, honest trend,
The noblest title of them all
Is "Good Old-Fashioned Friend."

THE CHURCH TREASURER'S EXHORTATION

Forget the slander you have heard,
Forget the hasty, unkind word,
Forget the quarrel and the cause,
Forget the whole affair, because Forgetting is the only way.
Forget the storms of yesterday,
Forget the chap whose sour face
Forgets to smile in any place.
Forget the trials you have had,
Forget the weather, if it's bad.
Forget the knocker, he's a freak,
Forget him seven days a week.
Forget you're not a millionaire,
Forget the gray streaks in your hair;
Forget the coffee when it's cold,
Forget the kicks, forget to scold.
Forget the coal man and his weighs,
Forget the heat in summer days;
Forget to ever get the blues,
But don't forget to pay your dues.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

With this issue of our Church papers I take up the pen of him whose pen for years was active in the great cause of Foreign Missions but is now dormant forever. With this beginning of a new year of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church I take up the work that was so suddenly and so unexpectedly laid down by our earnest, consecrated, self-sacrificing Executive Secretary of the Board, Dr. Fred C. Klein.

Dr. Klein wrought well. While he did not live so long, yet he lived largely and put much into the few years allotted to him. How much credit is due him for our largest and best Foreign Missionary work—Japan—will possibly never be fully determined. He was our first ordained Foreign missionary; the organizer of our largest and best Church in Nagoya; the organizer of our largest attended educational institution we have at home or abroad.

Do we not stand ready, then, to show our highest appreciation of this great man of God in some tangible way. How shall it be done, By making our Children's Day offerings for the Klein-Coulbourn Memorial Church at Nagoya College, in Japan, the largest in the history of our denomination. Dr. Klein's devoted life ought to be an incentive for every one who made a pledge for this Church at our last General Conference to pay that pledge 100 per cent and to pay it now.

May I urge the members of the W. F. M. S. to carry out the excellent suggestions offered by Mrs. Lida K. East in her "Tribute to the Memory of Dr. Fred C. Klein" in the April 23rd issue of the Church papers. May I, also, urge every Sunday school, large or small, to use the Children's Day Service prepared in Memory of Dr. Klein and then to make the call for the largest possible offering. Easily can the amount of $50,000 or more be realized by a united effort on the part of our constituency. Begin right now to plan for your Children's Day service and then work your plan. If you have not sent in your order yet, please do so at once.

Uncovered Territory

While I am writing there comes to me a very keen sense of the vast territory of human life that is still untouched by the gospel of our Christ. Now and then we hear it suggested that the Foreign missionary work has been so enlarged that the native workers ought to carry on the work now in their respective lands. No one can say this and have knowledge of the vast "unoccupied territory" in the mission fields. I quote from the April number of The Student Volunteer Bulletin: "The China Survey reveals the fact that there are 333 counties in China, with 166,500 towns and villages and a population of over 38,508,306, without a single evangelistic center or a single Christian. Of the area of China now claimed and supposed to be worked by foreign missionary societies, over 300,000 square miles are still relatively unworked."

Says Dr. Robert E. Speer, "One looks out over the generation of which we are a part and there are probably more people in the world today who do not know Christ than there were when the modern missionary enterprise began. There are three areas of the earth as untouched and uninfluenced today as when William Carey first went down into that mine of India. Even in great centers where you would think the missionary forces were adequately massed, there are great bodies of folk to whom Christ is stranger still. I suppose in Tokyo alone today there are more people who do not know the Gospel than there were people in the city of Tokyo when Christian missionaries first went to Japan.

"Some of our Presbyterian mission stations in Shantung, China, have each a population to evangelize equal to the population of California, Indiana or Michigan. Would these States be deemed adequately occupied by Christian forces on this basis? In India there are single missionaries who have districts of three-quarters of a million people and five hundred villages. To talk of the evangelization of these regions as the business of the native Church's is the language of sheer uninformed formularists."

This same bulletin further points out there are more ordained Protestant clergymen in Iowa than in all South America, Central America and Mexico combined. There is this vast unoccupied territory in the great missionary field. What are we doing to have it occupied?

GREETINGS

Just a few words of greetings to the many Methodist Protestant friends I already know and to the many others whom I hope and expect to know as I take up and continue in the work of Executive Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church.

Keenly do I feel the great responsibility of the world-wide task that is before me and yet I appreciatively realize that it opens up immeasurable opportunities for service. To me it comes, not only as an election by the unanimous vote of the members of the Board, but it comes, also, as a call of the Master. Very humbly, therefore, do I enter upon the work.

I recall, with joy, the character, the earnestness and zeal, the untiring efforts, the consecration and unselfish sacrifice of my beloved predecessor, the late Dr. Fred C. Klein. His mantle has now fallen upon my shoulders. With full consecration and willing sacrifice I must wear it the best possible. A faithful worker has fallen but the work must go on.

The work is so new to me and there is so much to know and to do. But the work is no more mine than yours. Together we must work and together bear the responsibility. As Jesus "came not to be ministered unto but to minister" so I want to be among you as one who serves and give my best to our whole beloved Zion, both at home and abroad. For this I crave your continuous prayers and faithful cooperation. May I have them?

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE

No doubt many are wondering about the registration campaign for the Young People's Conference. I regret that it has not yet been launched, but circumstances alter cases sometimes. At a meeting of the Young People's Board, Rev. N. M. Harrison was asked to put on this campaign. Since that time Brother Harrison has completely changed his plans due to the death of his father and now he is in an entirly new field, doing work which is entirely new. This is the reason why the campaign has not yet been launched.

But there is ample time to register every member of our conference and with this notice please consider the campaign now on. I am asking the pastors to appoint a registration agent in each church. I ask for the earnest co-operation of all—especially pastors, Sunday school superintendents, Christian Endeavor presidents. I further ask that all work to make this the most successful conference in the history of our Young People's work.

Who will be the first to register? Let's register 1,500 people for this conference!

Send your registration fees to Rev. N. M. Harrison, Littleton, N. C., Route No. 1. Adults 50 cents; children 25 cents.

Yours for a successful conference,

F. W. Paschall,

President of Young People's Board.

STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

With the records showing a total registration of 1,482 people, including pastors, superintendents and Sunday school teachers, from 42 counties of the state, the 1927 session of the State Sunday School Conention came to a close in Burlington on Thursday night, April 28. Enthusiasm ran high throughout the meeting, which was pronounced the best convention in many respects ever held under the auspices of the North Carolina Sunday School Association. Among those attending the convention were 901 delegates outside of the city of Burlington, which broke all past records for the number of out-of-town delegates.

Taking part on the program of the convention were four out-of-state Sunday school specialists, and more than thirty of the best Sunday school workers in the state. The convention was greatly pleased with an address by Dr. H. E. Spence, professor of Religious Education in Duke University, on the subject, "The Sunday School and Good Citizenship." Dr. Spence filled the place of Governor McLean on the program, who was detained on account of illness.

The report of the chairman of the executive committee, the state president, and the general superintendent, showed that the state association had done more work and accomplished better results in the past year than any year in the history of the association. All of the 100 counties in the state are now organized into County Sunday School Associations, each holding a convention during the past year.

The report of J. B. Ivey, state president, showed that in the past year 562 township Sunday School Conventions had been held in the various counties, and gave the following figures to show the increase in such meetings each year for the past five years: In the convention year of 1922 and 1923, 196 township Sunday School Conventions were held; the next year 203 were held; the next, 365; the next, 474; and in the past year 562 were held.

The reports further showed that during the year approximately two-thirds of the Sunday schools in the state had been reached in meetings held under the auspices of the State Sunday School Association, and that many Sunday schools were showing increase in attendance and better organization as a direct result of the work done by the State and County Sunday School Associations. The report of E. B. Crow, treasurer of the State Association, showed that the association had met its obligations for the year and was free from debt.

THE WRONG USE OF LIBERTY

This is an age when liberty is invoked by men of every profession and advocates of every cause, so that one is reminded of Madame Roland, who, when about to be guillotined, exclaimed, "O Liberty! Liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name!"

Liberty is claimed by the man who insists upon making a beast of himself and becoming a nuisance to his neighbors.

It is claimed by men whose salaries are paid by the taxes of the people, who, notwithstanding, claim liberty to teach doctrines that undermine the faith of many.

It is claimed by men in theological seminaries, when they teach doctrines contrary to the views of those who endowed the various chairs.

It is claimed by the modern girl who shocks us with her short skirts and her imitation of masculine habits.

It is claimed by the theaters and moving picture houses, when they debase the minds of the young and wreck the lives of many.

All of them take refuge behind what they claim is liberty, when in reality liberty has nothing to do with it.

Take prohibition, for example—liberty has nothing to do with prohibition.

The law does not forbid a man to get drunk. If he can find pleasure in it, no one can complain.

When, however, his being drunk makes him a nuisance in public, and causes others to suffer, then the law forbids it, just as it does when he makes his wife and children suffer by spending his money on drink.

I can fire my gun in the country and no one can interfere with my liberty; but when I do the same thing in a town or city, the law forbids, not that it would interfere with my liberty, but because it would keep me from interfering with the liberty of other people.

The trouble about whisky is that the drinking man is never content to keep within the bounds of his own liberty. If he would, there would never have been any Volstead amendment; but because he is always interfering with the liberty of other people, the law had to be enacted.

In like manner, we have to deal with the abuse of freedom of thought. Each man thinks as he pleases. If he thinks that there is no God, or that he has ascended from Simian ancestry, no one can forbid him. He is merely indulging in freedom of thought. If this freedom reduces him to a beast, the Lord will deal with him in due time.

When, however, he tries to teach such a view to my child, and I am paying his salary, I can forbid such teaching, without being charged with interfering with his freedom of thought.

This plea of being controlled in thought appeals to the ignorant, who are not accustomed to look below the surface of words—and that explains its popularity with those who are restricted in their teachings.

These would-be scientists are really not sincere in raising the cry of persecution. They know better, but as it is a plea that will deceive many of the multitude, they do not hesitate to use it.—The Presbyterian Standard.

GRATITUDE FOR OUR THORN

My God, I have never thanked thee for my thorn. I have thanked thee a thousand times for my roses, but not once for my thorn. I have been looking forward to a world where I shall get compensation for my cross, but I have never thought of itself a present glory. Thou divine love, whose human path has been perfected through sufferings, teach me the glory of my cross; teach me the value of my thorn, show me that I have climbed to thee by the path of pain. Show me that my tears have made my rainbow. Reveal to me that my strength was the product of the hour when I wrestled until the break of day. Then shall I know that my thorn was blessed by thee; then shall I know that my cross was a gift from thee, and I shall raise a monument to the hours of my sorrow, and the words which I shall write upon it shall be these: "It is good for me that I have been afflicted."—Cumberland Presbyterian.

GOD IS OUR REFUGE

God is our hiding-place. Many in the world are feeling today that there is no sure refuge except in God. A man in Europe some time since wrote: "World courts have failed; treaties have broken down; governments have collapsed; the sword has proved futile to save us. There is no safety, nor certitude in the earth. God is the only refuge left us now." God will instruct, teach, and guide the good man. The only thing is to confess our sin, get close to God, and then He will lead us by the hand. Many sorrows shall come to the wicked—one calamity after another. But he that trusteth in God shall be saved out of them all.—Christian Work.

The WORK and the WORKERS

Sunday, May the first, dawned bright and beautiful, and we were on our way to Asheboro in time to sit with the Men's Bible Class and hear the lesson taught. They have a splendid group of men in this class and the lesson was well presented. When we went in the class was making up money to pay for a sewing machine for the Children's Home. Two men had already bought the machine and vouched for its payment, but the class wished to share in the gift, and did it liberally.

There were 183 present in Sunday school. This school makes a monthly offering to the Children's Home of $56.50. A fine example to follow.

The preaching service was well attended and the people seemed to hear the Word gladly. This was my first visit to the Asheboro Church since they put in the new pews and the new carpet. These add so much to the attractiveness and beauty of their splendid church auditorium.

I was glad to see and greet Mr. J. S. Lewis in the audience, and to note that he is looking so much stronger than when I saw him last.

I do not remember ever preaching in this church before when Mrs. R. R. Ross was not present. I missed her greatly, and I am sure she is greatly missed in all the activities of this church. At this time Sheriff R. R. Ross is not so well, and was not able to be at church. His presence was greatly missed, and we sincerely hope that he will soon regain his accustomed health.

Rev. J. E. Pritchard and his good wife are rendering splendid service here, as they have in every pastorate they have served.

High School Commencement

On Sunday evening I did my best to deliver a gospel message to a large audience in the auditorium of the Bessemer High School in the eastern section of Greensboro. There are 24 graduates in the class of this high school this year.

Budget Leaflets

Last week we published in the HERALD the mid-year report on budget receipts up to the first of May. And the HERALD office ran off 1,000 copies of this report for us, and I am this week mailing these leaflets to our pastors, and am asking that they place them where they will do the most good. They are intended for families who do not take the HERALD.

Study them a bit and you will see that there are 36 charges which have not paid anything yet on the Annual Conference Budget. And there are 34 charges which have not paid anything on the General Conference Budget. And there are 43 charges which have not paid anything on College Assessment, and this College Assessment should certainly be paid by all the charges by May 20th.

One-half of the year is gone. Some of us will have to do some splendid hustling if we do a whole year's work for the Lord. The raising of these budgets is a privilege and not a burden, if we can only come to see it that way.

Next Quarterly Reports

The next quarterly report will be printed about the first of August. Let us see if we cannot fill up every blank in it, especially in the first three columns. The women's societies are doing fine where they are organized, and the women are going to renew their efforts to organize in all the churches. Some of our reports would be poor indeed were it not for the last two columns, which represent our women's work. Come on, all of you, and help fill up the blanks in the first three columns during the third quarter.

Summer Conferences

We are expecting every day to hear something about that Registration Campaign for the Young People's Summer Conference. The call will come before many days. At least 1,000 of us should be ready to send in our 50-cent price and register just as soon as we are told where to send the money. We are planning a good program, and we are planning for and expecting the largest attendance we have ever had at such a conference in the High Point College.

Remember the dates, July 18 to 25, and plan to have two or more delegates attend from each local church.

Also please let all pastors plan to spend the entire week there with their young people. All of us need what we can get at this Summer Conference, and the Summer Conference needs us. If we are of any account where we are, then we ought to be an inspiration to each other; so, come on, let's go!

Pastor's Report Blanks

Last Friday, I mailed second quarterly report blanks to all pastors with the request that they be returned by an early mail. This, Monday morning's mail, brought six of these report blanks back properly filled out. These came from Anderson, Mount Hermon, Orange, Pleasant Grove, Reidsville, and First Church, Winston. Each one brings a good report. The mails this week will return nearly all these reports. Why not all of them? If yours has not already been mailed when you read this, you can help by filling out and mailing at once.

—Our governor approves the principle of the Citizens' Military Traing Camps maintained by the Federal Government, and expresses the hope that North Carolina will be represented in these camps by its full quota. There are people who object to these camps on the ground that it is encouraging the war spirit and antagonizing the spirit of peace. It is a two-sided question, and both sides should be heard with due consideration. Aggressive wars are also most certain to be wicked wars; but defensive wars seem to be necessary at times, and when they are necessary it is well to be prepared for them.

THE IMMUTABLE CHRIST

"Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever." Heb. 13:8.

The writer of Hebrews has been giving emphasis to the fact that the believer is represented at the right hand of the throne of God by One who still has a human heart (although He is God) and so can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. This union of human and divine is forever indissoluble in Christ. Without that permanent manhood, He could not succor those who are tempted, and have compassion on them.

In the yesterday of His life on earth, in the today of His priesthood, and in the tomorrow of His coming as King, He remains both Son of God and Son of man.

His earthly robe of human tenderness did not, like Elijah's mantle, drop off as He passed into the skies. He has not, as one religious sect teaches, taken on a spirit form, no longer human. Unto all eternity we have one Mediator, The Man Christ Jesus (1 Tim. 2:5) the Godman. Were He suddenly to appear now at your side, it would be that same Jesus whom the disciples knew, with the same warm heart beating in His breast. This "same Jesus" is coming back again for His own (Acts 1:11).

What a rock for our wave-tossed souls is this truth concerning the unchanging Christ! Is not the phenomenon of the abiding power of Christ in the lives of men after these 1900 years an unanswerable testimony to this truth?

Dr. Maclaren once said: "All other men, however, burning and shining their light, flicker and die out into extinction and but for a season can the world rejoice in any of their beams; but this Jesus dominates the ages and is as fresh today, in spite of all that men say, as He was centuries ago. They tell us He is losing His power; that the mists of oblivion are wrapping Him around as He moves slowly to the doom which awaits Him in common with all the great names of the world. But Christ is not done with yet, nor is He less available for the necessities of this generation with its perplexities and difficulties than He was in the past."

Stand on the seashore and think that those waters have been rolling and dashing for thousands of years, yet they show no signs of waste. Watch the sun rise above the hill-crests and think that its beams have melted the snows of thousands of winters and renewed the verdure of as many springs, painted the flowers of as many summers, ripened the fruits of as many autumns. Yet it is not dimmed, nor is its power in the least abated.

These are but images of the immutable Christ. It was Dr. Guthrie who said: "When judgment flames shall have licked up the waters of the sea and the light of the glorious sun shall be quenched in darkness or veiled in the smoke of the pit, the fullness of Christ shall surge on throughout eternity, in the bliss of the redeemed."—Selected.

USE WHAT YOU HAVE

"What is in thine hand, Abel?"

"Nothing but one ewe lamb, O God, taken from the flock. I purpose offering to thee a willing sacrifice."

And so he did. And the sweet smell of the burning has been filling the air ever since, and constantly going up to God as a perpetual sacrifice of praise.

"What is it thou hast in thine hand, Moses?"

"Nothing, but a staff, O God, with which I tend my flock."

"Take it and use it for me."

And he did; and with it he wrought more wondrous things than Egypt and her proud kings had seen before.

"Mary, what is that thou hast in thine hand?"

"Nothing but a pot of sweet-smelling ointment. O God, herewith I would anoint thine only one called Jesus."

And so she did; and not only did the perfume fill all the house in which they were, but the Bible-reading world has been fragrant with the memory of this blessed act of love, which has ever since been spoken of "for a memorial of her."

"Poor woman, what is that thou hast in thine hand?"

"Only two mites, Lord. It is very little, but then it is all I have, and I would put it into thy treasury."

And so she did; and the story of her generous giving has ever since wrought like a charm prompting others to give to the Lord.

"What is that in thine hand, Dorcas?"

"Only a needle, Lord."

"Take it and use it for me."

And so she did; and not only were the suffering poor of Joppa warmly clad, but inspired by her loving life, many others even now continue their benign mission to the poor throughout the earth.—Unknown.

A PRAYER FOR TRUST

"What time am I afraid I will put my trust in Thee." Help us so to do, oh, our Father, who art the God of our life and the guide and keeper of all our days. We know that we are untrue to Thee, that we utterly misrepresent and libel Thee, when we have anything of fear in our hearts toward Thee. Thou art our Father, and we will trust and not be afraid. There are very many things in life that tend to put that fear in our hearts, but we ask Thee to help us to cast them aside and to take to ourselves a spirit of all-conquering courage. We do not understand how it can be but we know that even our little lives never get from under Thy hand, and that therefore nothing can come to us to surprise Thee or to prove utterly tragic to us. We are sure that in all of life Thy grace and sufficiency will be all about us and Thy power to help and comfort and strengthen ours for the taking. And so we would ask Thee to help us never to run away from life, and if we find something of fear in our hearts to stand loyally to our tasks until fear leaves and hope and trust and courage are born within us once more. We ask this in the name of our great Exemplar in faith and trust and courage, Jesus Christ. Amen.—The New Outlook.

IT'S YOU

It isn't the preacher's flowery prayer
Or the way the choir sings,
Or the size of the coin your neighbor gives
Or the help your brother brings.
It isn't the size of your favorite church,
Or the cost of your favorite pew,
Or the style of the clothes the members wear;
For it isn't the church, it's you.

It isn't the way the work is done,
Or the way the money is spent,
Or whether the gospel's all brought in,
Or whether there's some that's sent.
It isn't the kind of creed they love,
Or peculiar things they do,
Or whether the doctrine suits your taste;
For it isn't the church, it's you.

For a chain's as strong as the weakest link
And it breaks with a heavy load,
But a church that's full of the links that pull,
Can level the roughest road.
If you get in tune with the Master's will,
With your heart and your labors too,
You will love your church, though it has its faults,
For it isn't the church, it's you.

AN INCONVENIENT PROMISE

"Harry," said his father sternly, "did you play in the new houses today?"

Harry looked his father straight in the eye and answered: "No, sir."

"I'll have to take the children down and get them shoes today," said the mother.

"I hope you'll get me some patent leather pumps," said Margaret, Harry's sister.

"All right," agreed Mother.

"But I did yesterday," said Harry.

"Eh?" his father inquired. "What's that?"

"Just a simple declarative sentence," replied Harry.

"A propos of what?" demanded his dad.

"Ahem!" Harry coughed. "Er—Mommer, are you going to get me shoes, too? I hope you'll get them good and big."

Harry's father continued to look or rather glare at him, but Harry was too hard-boiled if you know what I mean, to mind a little fatherly glare. He knew the old man knew that he knew what he had meant by his remark was "I played in the new houses yesterday."

"Now see here, you young Indian," said Harry's Dad at last, seeing that looks couldn't make a dent in the boy, "you got to promise me on your word of honor that you will never go into those new houses again."

"I'll promise I won't go in unless it's necessary," said Harry.

"Gee!" cried his father. "You'd make a good politician. No loopholes now. Promise!"

"Do I have to!" said Harry, mournfully.

"You have to!" replied his father.

So Harry promised and that afternoon his mother took him down town and bought him a large shining pair of shoes.

When they got back home, there seated on their front porch was an old gentleman wearing a wide-brimmed black hat, and near him was the oldest-looking valise Harry had ever seen.

"Why Uncle Jerry!" cried Harry's mother.

The old gentleman proved to be the old Uncle Jerry about whom the children had heard so much. He had come to pay a visit, and after greetings had been exchanged and everything the old gentleman said:

"Well Minnie" (that was Harry's mother's name), "I've always meant to do something for you, my dear. Now while I was sitting there waiting for you I seen some new houses going up. Thinks I to myself, 'I'll go take a look at 'em.' This I done, and having been in the contracting business myself, I seen right off that they was well-built houses. Thinks I to myself, 'A house like one of these here would make a nice home for Minnie. She was always a little home body and the children will be big enough to keep things nice.' So I walked over to the agent's office across the street and seen him about buying one of these here houses. Well, we made a dicker and here's the deed for the end house. It's all finished and the best of the lot."

"Why UNCLE JERRY!" cried Mrs. Minnie, turning white then pink with excitement. "Oh, thank you! But you do take my breath away!"

"Why, it's like a fairy story!" exclaimed Margaret, grasping the old gentleman's hand and jumping up and down like a fairy herself.

"Oh, I'm so thrilled!" cried Mrs. Minnie, wiping her eyes. "You are the kindest, dearest thing! Thank you a hundred times. Let's go right over and look at it!"

They all started over to the new house, Margaret dancing on ahead and Harry lagging along behind. He had just remembered his promise to his father.

The house was of red brick, very neat, with a porch painted white, the rooms inside looked so bare and sounded hollow when you walked through them. Margaret ran in and then stood in the doorway saying: "Come right in, folks, and make yourselves at home."

"Aren't you coming in, Harry?" inquired his mother, as her son halted at the door.

"Can't!" mumbled Harry. "Didn't you hear me promise Dad I'd never go into any of these new houses?"

The other stared a moment.

"That's right!" said Margaret.

"Well. I won't urge you," said his mother. "Daddy will be home soon. He'll release you of your promise."

Harry sat down on the step, feeling very gloomy, but he never thought of breaking his word to his father. He could hear the voices of his family inside exclaiming over the different things in the house.

"Oh, a built-in bookcase! What a sweet fireplace! Oh, look! A closet in the vestibule for our wraps!" Oh, this and Oh that!

"Well, poor Harry," smiled his mother as they came out at last. "I'm so sorry you had to stay out. It's the dearest place! There's a lovely room on the third floor for you with a private bathroom. You can take your friends there when they come to see you, your Boy Scouts and so forth. I can hardly believe that it belongs to us! Uncle Jerry, thank you a thousand times!"

Uncle Jerry smiled as he listened to Mrs. Minnie and Margaret talking about the house and stopping now and then to thank him a thousand or a million times. He was a kind old gentleman and quite wealthy, and he liked to do unexpected things for people he liked. Harry followed them home mournfully.

When they reached their door, they saw a messenger boy just leaving on his bicycle. They called to him and he handed them a message. Mrs. Minnie tore it open. It was a note from Dad.

"Tried to get you three times on the phone but could get no answer. I have been called out of town and have to go at once on important business for the firm. This may mean a lot to us! Wish me luck, dear. Expect me when you see me. I will write you the details tomorrow."

"Why, what a surprise!" cried Mrs. Minnie. "Oh, let's do something to surprise him! Let's move to the new house and when he comes home we will give him a very pleasant and astonishing welcome!"

Uncle Jerry approved of the plan. He loved unexpected things, and Margaret was thrilled. Only Harry looked sad.

The next day they all pitched in and started to move. The children stayed home from school and helped.

"Only please leave me a bed and some blankets," said Harry.

"Why?" demanded his mother. "Oh, yes, I remember! Your promise! Well, that's too bad!"

They got all moved in one day—all but Harry. My how bare the old house was that night! He wondered how long he would have to live there alone, and he had eaten supper on the porch of the new house.

In the middle of the night he was awakened by a sound. My, he was scared! It was the sound of a key in the latch. Then he knew it must be Dad. He jumped up from his bed and ran down, switching on the lights as he ran. Down the stairs pell mell, and just then his father opened the front door and stepped into the bare hall.

It was funny to see him stare! First he looked at the walls, then the floor, then at his son in his pink striped pajamas. Then he peeked into the front room swept clear of all furniture and fixings.

"What in Sam Hill—?" he cried.

Harry took his time about explaining. He said: "Well the family had moved. Yes, that day. A gentleman had come and helped. No, a strange gentleman. Yes, they had got the note and Mommer had been excited. Pretty soon Dad began to get so wild-looking Harry decided to keep him in suspense no longer. So he told him the whole story.

"Kid," said his father, "you gave me a good scare! Not that I doubted your mother. I was afraid she had been tricked by some one. Well, well! What a surprise! And why did you stay here? To welcome your old dad I suppose."

"No, sir," replied Harry. "It was that promise you made me make. I hope you'll let me off. If you don't I'll be a boy without a home."

Dad certainly laughed when he understood. Then he sobered and shook Harry's hand and called him a sport and then he kissed him and called him sonny and said he was proud of him. Then Harry dressed and the two went to the new house.

"The boy stood on the burning deck!" quoted Margaret. "Say, isn't Harry the honorablest kid you ever heard of!"—Selected.

THE LITTLE BROWN COAT

It was a beautiful afternoon, and little children and big children, all dressed very neat and clean, were walking home from Sabbath school.

Two little girls were sauntering along when one of them exclaimed: "There's that new pupil, Mamie, who started to day school last week," she said, pointing to a little girl who sat alone on a doorstep.

"Yes, she looks kind of lonesome, doesn't she?" returned Mamie, gazing across to where she sat. "I wonder if maybe she'd like to come to Sabbath school with us next week."

"Well, let's go and ask her," said the other little girl, whose name was Belinda, and so away they trotted across the street.

As Mamie seemed to turn shy all of a sudden, it was Belinda who did most of the talking.

"Say, little girl," she commenced, rather slowly, hardly knowing just how to start, "we thought perhaps you'd like to come to Sabbath school with us next Sabbath. We'll call for you if you do, and I know you'll just love our teacher, 'cause she's as nice as can be."

The little girl on the steps grew rather red, and she didn't say anything for quite a while, then she blurted out:

"I'd like to go, but my coat is nearly in rags, it's so old; but I hope, if father gets well and is able to go back to work, that I'll be able to get one."

"Oh, I hope so, too," said Belinda, sympathetically, and presently the two little girls went on down the street toward their homes.

While they were walking slowly along, Mamie, who seemed to be deeply thinking, suddenly stopped.

"Why, Belinda, there's that brown coat of mine that Aunt Ruth gave me last year. I've grown so that I can't even get into it, and it's not nearly worn out. I wonder—"

"Now, what are you wondering?" put in Belinda, curiously.

"I was just wondering if that little girl would like it," answered Mamie. I know it would fit her, 'cause she's not nearly so big as I am. Mother was only saying the other day she wished she knew of some little girl who really needed it."

"Well, let's go and tell her we've found the little girl," put in Belinda, hastily, and away they hurried as fast as their little feet could carry them.

Mamie's mother was only too pleased to hear of somebody who could really make use of the little brown coat, and as they were going down the steps with it she called her little daughter back.

"Here, Mamie, is the little tam to match. I almost forgot about it. You might just as well take it along with you, too."

"It's only the next street over," remarked Belinda, as they started out again. "I do hope she's still there." And, sure enough, when they turned the corner there she was, and my, how surprised she looked when she saw the two little girls again.

"I wonder if you would like this coat and cap," said Mamie, with a pretty little shy way she had. "It used to be mine," she added, "but you see I've grown so that it won't fit me at all, and mother said it will do you lots more good than hanging up in the cupboard."

The little girl's face fairly shone as she took the coat and cap. "Now I'll be able to go to Sabbath school next week, after all, won't I?" she said, very happily.

"Yes, and don't forget that we'll call for you," said Belinda.

"No, I won't," promised the little girl, as she went into the house to show her mother the nice, warm coat that had been given her.

And Mamie and Belinda went on their way with the happiest of hearts. I wonder now what made them so happy. I think maybe it was because they made that other little girl happy. Now, really, don't you?—Helen Boyd.

A LITTLE BOY WHO FELT DISGRACED

Once we went into the Juvenile Court Detention Home to visit the little boys and girls. As we were going through the department of the home where the boys were kept, the matron asked us if we would like to hear the boys sing. Of course, we said, "Yes," as we always like to hear children sing.

The children formed a half circle and at the signal of the one in charge, with only one exception, they started to sing.

The one little boy that did not sing, hung his head and would not look at us the whole time we were in his presence. But when asked by the matron why he acted as he did, he said that one day he visited the place where we had recently come from and he was afraid that we might recognize him, and he felt so bad because he had been such a bad boy and the court had to send him to such a place.

We wonder when our little readers disobey their mamma and papa, or are naughty in school, or unruly in Sunday school and church, if they feel bad like this little boy did. If so do you know there is One who wants to be a real friend to you and keep you from doing such naughty things, so that you will not have to hang your head in the presence of mamma, papa, Sunday school teacher or public school teacher. And you will know that you have been doing the things that are pleasing to Jesus.—Selected.

WHY THEY WERE MIGHTY

The story is told that when Martin Luther's Bishop tried to quiet him in his protest against the dead formalism and wicked practices of the Church and his heralding of "Salvation by faith," and failed, he wrote to the Pope for advice and assistance, and that the Pope wrote back to the Bishop, "Stop his mouth with gold." To which, the Bishop replied thus, "The German fool does not love gold." Thank God, the love of Christ and the love of human souls had mastered Martin Luther and crowded the love of gold entirely out of his heart. No one ever accused John Wesley, Charles Finney or Dwight L. Moody of loving money, and yet they lived, loved Christ, loved men, wrought powerfully, fell on sleep in great peace and no one doubts but they are at this time with their blessed Lord. Their work abides. The influence of their lives spreads abroad in the earth and they will be remembered, their sermons read and their words heeded long after millionaires have been forgotten.—Dr. H. C. Morrison, in the Pentecostal Herald.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Riley

Yancey B. Riley died April 30, 1927, aged 55 years, four months, 27 days. November 14, 1897, he was married to Emma Sykes. To this union four children were born. Two are dead; two, Mrs. Virgil Albright and Mrs. George Lancaster, and his companion still survive.

Brother Riley first joined the Baptist church. About eight years ago he transferred his membership to Chestnut Ridge M. P. church, where he remained a faithful member until death.

The following ministers had parts in the funeral services: T. M. Johnson, Edward Suits, and the writer. The Junior Order also had a part in these services.

Funeral services were conducted Sunday afternoon, May 1st, as follows: First, a short service in the home, then Chestnut Ridge church and cemetery. An extra large congregation attended the services.

May God's richest blessing attend the bereaved ones. B. M. WILLIAMS.

Pickett

The funeral of Mrs. James E. Pickett was conducted at the residence on Pearson street, Greensboro, Monday afternoon at 2:30, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Roger, pastor of Baptist church at Proximity.

Mrs. Pickett was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Laughlin. For a number of years they had lived in Greensboro. A few years ago they moved to Burlington where they united with the First M. P. Church, where Mrs. Pickett held her membership when she died. For the past few months she had lived in Greensboro.

She leaves a husband, one little son, a sister, and her father and mother. These all have our prayers and sympathy. The large crowd of relatives and friends and the numerous floral offerings showed the high esteem in which she was held. The burial took place in Green Hill cemetery. The hearts of the sorrowing ones are comforted in the fact that she gave the assurance that all is well with her. "Ye sorrow not as others who have no hope." L. W. GERRINGER.

Lackey

Buna Brint (Reed) Lackey was born June 11, 1893; departed this life March 19, 1927. She was united in marriage to Robert John Lackey, and to this union were born four children. One child died in infancy, and three survive, Nathalie, Cerelda, and Imogene. Buna leaves also a husband, father and mother, Rev. and Mrs. W. D. Reed, of Brown Summit, N. C.; two brothers, G. M. and C. R. Reed, of Reidsville, N. C.; one sister, Mrs. C. A. Cooper, of Greensboro, N. C.

At nine years of age she gave her heart to the Lord, and joined Friendship church, Fallston, N. C., under the pastorate of her father. She remaind a faithful member of said church till death relieved her of her suffering, at the Lincolnton hospital. She had the advantage of fine medical skill by her brother-in-law, Dr. F. H. Lackey, and the surgeons of the hospital. But the time had come for her to say goodby to her sweet children, affectionate husband, kind brothers and sister, and a dear, loving father and mother. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. M. Morgan, her pastor, assisted by Rev. J. D. Morris. The congregation was unusually large, and the floral offering was beautiful indeed. After the services, we tenderly laid her body to rest in the Friendship cemetery, near the church.

Buna was well known by the writer for many years, even before her marriage, while a small girl. Since marriage we have known her married life very intimately. Now, we speak from knowledge when we say she was one of the best mothers, and a devoted wife. She willingly shared with her husband in every trial and difficulty that came to him in making a good home. She loved her children, but did command them to obedience, which we deem is Godliness. She was so much concerned in rearing her children for usefulness. Buna counted a sacrifice a pleasure, if it would help her home. We wish we might cheer and comfort her parents by being able to testify to such a fine life in so good a daughter. Her husband has lost a supporting hand and a voice of cheer. The small children have lost a mother's comfort, a mother's advice, and a real mother's love. The father and mother may be comforted by the fact they reared so good a daughter. The husband may be comforted by the fact he had so good a wife. The children, they had so good a mother.

Friendship church has given up one of her best members, which shall remain a great loss, until the church militant unites with the church triumphant.

J. D. MORRIS.

Watson

Brother Vade G. Watson died April 2, 1927, aged 79 years and four months. He professed faith in Christ and joined the M. P. Church at Mount Zion in 1874, and remained a member until his death. He was a member of this church more than 50 years.

He was first married to Mary Spainhower, December 21, 1869. To this union were born seven children, five boys and two girls. He was married the second time February 24, 1909, to Mrs. Mary Eads, who survives him, with one brother, six sisters, seven children and a number of grandchildren and many other relatives and friends who are left to mourn their loss.

Brother Watson was one who provided well for his family, was a kind and obliging neighbor, and thought well of by the entire community, and will be greatly missed.

Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. T. V. Crouse and Rev. H. M. Wellman, both of the M. E. Church, after which the remains were laid to rest in Pinnacle cemetery beneath a mound of beautiful flowers.

The bereaved have our heart-felt sympathy.

A. L. HUNTER.

Kallam

Ellen Spainhower Kallam died March 14, 1927, making her stay on earth 77 years, six months and three days. She was married January 6, 1874, to Thomas Kallam. To this union were born eight children, seven now living.

She was a member of old Crooked Run M. P. Church, where she joined in early childhood, and had never placed her membership anyhere else. She was a beautiful character, kind, patient, unselfish and a devoted mother.

She reared a large family, mostly alone, her husband having died 34 years ago.

She was calm and gentle as the softest breeze and yet you felt her influence for good when in her presence. She leaves a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn their loss.

While we know Sister Kallam's life was one of great responsibility, we should think of her now as being at rest from all these earthly burdens and responsibilities, and may we all press forward to meet our departed Christian friends, where all troubles and trials will be ended.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Walter Grabbs, of the Moravian church, and Rev. H. M. Wellman, of the M. E. church. The remains were interred in Mount Pleasant burying ground to await the resurrection.

We extend our sympathy to all of the bereaved. A. L. HUNTER.

McPherson

On April 5, 1927 the spirit of Judge Carr McPherson was liberated from this world of toil and care when the gates of Heaven swung ajar to let him in.

He was born the 20th of June, 1875. On November the 9th, 1899 the marriage ceremony was solemized for him and Miss Martha Holt with whom he lived happily till death. To this union were born three children, one of whom, Chase C., preceded him.

He joined the Rock Creek M. P. church early in life and remained faithful to the end. He was a devoted husband, a kind and loving father. In his death we have sustained a great loss.

He leaves to mourn their loss, beside the wife and two sons Paul H. and Russel S., an aged mother, one sister, three brothers and a host of friends and relatives.

We grieve for Uncle Judge but not as those who have no hope.

The funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. A. Burgess, assisted by Rev. S. W. Taylor, and interment was made in the Rock Creek cemetery. A NIECE.

Routh

Alexander Neece Routh was born August 27, 1848. He was married to Martisha Julian in 1868. This union was blessed with five sons and three daughters. He has 39 grand-children, and 27 great-grand children.

Several years ago, he took Christ as his Savior. And for more than thirty years has been a member of Bethany M. P. church, of the Randolph charge.

He came to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Clark Pugh, to spend a few days. While his health had not been good for two years, or more, death was not expected so soon. But on April 13, 1927, he was more cheerful in the morning than usual, in the evening the Death Angel came and called him. He went home quickly.

The funeral services were conducted at Bethany church where his body was laid to rest. May the grace of God comfort the bereaved ones. A. O. LINDLEY.

Fultz

On the second day of April, 1927, the spirit of little Opal went to live with Jesus. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Fultz. It was just a little bud in the early dawn of the morning. Jesus said suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. Little Opal was left in her home here not quite six years, but tongue cannot tell how dear she was in the hearts of those loved ones. She was so delicate, therefore required so much care, but on that date mentioned above, Jesus said, She has suffered enough, come to me and be at rest. May the father, mother, brothers, and sisters be comforted with the blessed thought that God knows best, and say He gave her to us, and has taken her away, blessed be the name of the Lord. On April 3, 1927, the lifeless little body was brought to Porter church where she loved to go to Sunday school so well. Her little class mates were the flower bearers. The funeral was conducted by the writer, then the little body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Granite Quarry. With the poet let us ask ourselves the question:

Why do we mourn for dying friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms.

C. H. HILL.

Lackey

With grieved hearts we learned that the all wise, Loving Heavenly Father had called Mrs. John Lackey to her home not made with hands.

Resolved: That we the members of Mizpah church offer our sympathy and love to her father and mother, Rev. and Mrs. W. D. Reed, and commend them to the comfort of the Heavenly Father, feeling that their loss is her gain, yet when death visits our homes it leaves a wound that no one save the Heavenly Father can heal.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, also a copy be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald.

MRS. FRED E. JONES,
MRS. M. L. WAGONER,
MR. ROY STEWART.

Jones

Sister Alexander Jones, born January 6, 1850, departed this life April 11, 1927. In the year 1875 she was married to John R. Newell, who lived only one year after their marriage. To this union was given one son. In 1877 she was again married to Alex Jones; to this union were given two sons and one daughter, John W., A. D., and Bertha Jones who went home 14 months ago. She gave her heart to God at the age of 18, and joined the Methodist Protestant church and was devoted to it until the end came.

For years she was a patient sufferer. Human hands and medical skill ministered to her unstintedly but to no avail. The great Physician came and gave her relief.

Sister Jones was one of a family of 14, all of which she survived except one sister, Zilpha Wheeler, who lingers on the brink.

To this sister and her aged husband and relatives, the sympathies of the community go out.

May a Loving Father comfort them in their sadness.

The funeral was conducted by her pastor, assisted by Revs. W. F. Ashburn and George R. Brown. Her remains were laid to rest at Mizpah church. W. D. REED.

Pugh

Thomas Kelly Pugh, the son of the late Jesse and Kissiah Pugh, was born October 16, 1848. Early in life he accepted Christ as his Savior, and joined the M. P. church at Grays chapel where he remained a faithful member till death.

On March 9, 1868, he was married to Martha Sylvania Julian. This union was blest with six girls and five boys, three of whom preceded their father to their Eternal Home.

He left his wife and the following children: Julius Baseum Pugh, Charles Amick Pugh, Mrs. T. W. Wilson, Alfred Kelly Pugh, Mrs. C. W. Hockett, Mrs. H. T. Kirkman, Mrs. J. W. Brown, and Mrs. C. P. Barker. He left also 41 grand-children, and seven great-grand-children, and an unnumbered host of friends who mourn his going away.

He was a devoted husband, a kind and loving father, a good citizen, a friend to all, and a true servant of God. He had walked with God for more than 50 years. He is not here on earth with his loved ones. For on March 30, last, he went home to be with God in Glory.

His funeral services were conducted at Grays Chapel by the writer assisted by Rev. W. F. Ashburn, where the body was laid in the cemetery. A. O. LINDLEY.

THE SLEEP CURE

I worried all day yesterday
About the tasks that lay before me;
Obstructions cluttered up the way,
A sharpened sword seemed hanging o'er me.
Night after night they'd kept me out
Where jazz was loud and art forgotten;
I'd reached my limit—just about—
And, as they say, was feeling rotten.

And last night when I went to bed
A batch of heavy cares beset me;
"As soon," I thought, "as I am dead,
My foolish friends will all forget me.
Life's nothing but a bunch of woes,
Unless a man is rich or clever;
The lucky ones are those that close
Their eyes and go to sleep forever."

This morning I awoke to hear
New voices calling me to duty;
My vision, blurred before, was clear,
And all the world seemed filled with beauty;
Hopes that I sadly had resigned
Came back to cheer me and entreat me,
And I had ceased to be inclined
To think that all men tried to cheat me.

How often foolishly we fret,
Permitting petty cares to haunt us;
How often we decide to let
Imagined difficulties daunt us;
How prone we are who burn the weed
To think the paths of life are rocky,
When sleep enough is all we need
To keep us full of cheer and cocky!

COLUMBUS

Behind him lay the gray Azores,
Behind the Gates of Hercules;
Before him not the ghost of shores,
Before him only shoreless seas.
The good mate said: "Now must we pray,
For lo! the very stars are gone.
Brave Adm'rl, speak; what shall I say?"
"Why, say: 'Sail on! sail on! and on!'"

"My men grow mutinous day by day;
My men grow ghastly wan and weak."
The stout mate thought of home; a spray
Of salt wave washed his swarthy cheek.
"What shall I say, brave Adm'r'l, say,
If we sight naught but seas at dawn?"
"Why, you shall say at break of day:
'Sail on! sail on! and on!'"

They sailed and sailed, as winds might blow,
Until at last the blanched mate said:
"Why, now not even God would know
Should I and all my men fall dead.
These very winds forget their way,
For God from these dread seas is gone.
Now speak, brave Adm'r'l, speak and say—"
He said: "Sail on! sail on! and on!"

They sailed. They sailed. Then spake the mate:
"This mad sea shows his teeth tonight.
He curls his lips, he lies in wait
With lifted teeth, as if to bite!
Brave Adm'r'l, say but one good word:
What shall we do when hope is gone?"
The words leapt like a leaping sword;
"Sail on! sail on! sail on and on!"

Then, pale and wan, he kept his deck,
And peered through darkness. Ah, that night
Of all dark nights! and then a speck—
A light! a light! a light! a light!
It grew, a starlit flag unfurled!
It grew to be Time's burst of dawn.
He gained a world; he gave that world
Its grandest lesson: "On! sail on!"

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Mt. Carmel, South Lexington Charge.—Our Christian Endeavor met at the home of Brother J. T. Swicegood and held our regular weekly meeting on Wednesday evening, April 27th, with Miss Vivian Walser as leader; a good program.

Brother Ridge filled his regular appointment May 1st with another of his great and forceful sermons. He pointed out the fact that the Christian life is no burden when we are willing and ready to take Christ as our companion and as our only safe guide.

Since our last report Mrs. C. A. Berrier has gone to the hospital for treatment. She is getting better and we hope for her a speedy recovery.

We are glad to learn that Brother R. M. Fritts is some better also. We have missed them and their families in Sunday school and church services so much.

H. V. S., Reporter.

Second M. P. Church, Charlotte.—We are glad our pastor was able to be with us Sunday. He delivered three good sermons. A large crowd from our church went with us to Indian Trail for the three o'clock service, which was attended by a nice congregation.

We are planning to be in our new place in just a short time.

We are sorry that our Easter program had to be postponed on account of some sickness among the children. But, each child was presented with a nice full Easter basket on Easter morning.

Friends, and readers of the Herald, we wish to thank all those who have contributed anything toward this worthy cause.

REPORTER.

West Forsyth Circuit.—The second quarterly conference convened at Harmony Grove Saturday, April 23rd. Dr. Dixon preached at 11 a.m. After a bountiful dinner the business of the day was transacted. A spirit of earnestness and harmony prevailed. Five churches were represented. There were more members present than usual. There might have been twice as many. Nominees for delegate, Brothers Henry Doub and C. G. Hunter. The president preached five times in as many churches in the two days, to fair-sized congregations. His presence and preaching were a blessing to pastor and people.

C. H. WHITAKER.

Liberty-Siler City.—Daily school duties and sickness at home have kept me from reporting as often as I should; however this spring I am going to make the reports longer and fuller.

Rev. W. M. Pike preached a good sermon Sunday morning, filling the appointment for our pastor.

The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor departments are getting on well along all lines.

A number of our college girls have been spending the spring holidays, of one week, at home. Among those visiting at home are: Misses Pauline Elkins, Nettie Stuart, and Lillian Buckner from High Point College, Miss Helen Long Hanner, from Greensboro College, and Miss Margaret Reitzel from Elon College.

A number of our members are going to attend the North Carolina Sunday school Association in Burlington this week.

Let us pray that much good may be accomplished during our special meeting which will be in session in June.

Rev. J. D. Williams will assist Mr. Gibbs in this meeting. Let's remember the words of the poet: I shall not pass this way again, If there is any good, therefore, that I can do, or any kindness that I can show let me do it now, for I shall not pass this way again.

BERTINE SHEPARD, Reporter.

Corinth, Littleton Charge.—Our pastor filled his appointment here yesterday with a very inspiring sermon.

Memorial service will be held at this church on the fifth Sunday afternoon in May at 2:30. We hope the friends will take much interest in the service.

We note that Mrs. Howard Insco has had a nice iron fence and tomb stone put at her husband's grave. Also other graves have been fixed up and squares laid off, which is much improvement to the cemetery.

M. J. Morris and son Bonney were absent from church service yesterday on account of the illness of Mr. Lawrence Morris.

Miss Fannie Barns is spending some time in Newport News, Va., with her brother.

Mr. and Mrs. Uran Cox and little daughter and Miss Clyde Cox of Greenville, N. C., were visitors at Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Morris's Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Nubron Whitley of Bailey, N. C., while passing by on their honey-moon stopped over to see Mrs. B. F. Morris Friday. Mrs. Whitley has many friends in this community who are extending best wishes.

Mr. Morris says that Mrs. Hettie Caster is a better steward to collect money for the preacher than he is.

We extend our sympathy to Mr. Marks (who lives just back of our church) in the loss by death of his wife on Friday, April 22nd.

REPORTER.

Union Chapel, Granville Charge.—We did not have an Easter service, but an offering was taken for Home Missions at the regular preaching service the second Sunday afternoon.

The Christian Endeavor Society held their meeting at sun-rise Easter Sunday morning, with seventeen present. This was a very good attendance considering it was raining at the time of the meeting.

He were delighted to have Rev. and Mrs. C. W. Bates of Asheville stay with us for a few days after Branch meeting, and we were glad indeed to have Mr. Bates preach for us the fourth Sunday morning. Mr. Polk Garrett sang, "Hark, Hark, My Soul." The offering which goes to the Children's Home amounted to $17.00. We had a large congregation and many were present from the other churches on the charge.

Friday evening, April 29th, the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies met at the home of Mrs. S. V. Floyd. Miss Leah Davis, president of the foreign society, presided. After the business was transacted, our delegates to Branch meeting, Mrs. L. E. Barnes and Mrs. Leah Davis, gave splendid reports. I am sure we will profit by what they learned, and we have to do more work this year than we have ever done before.

REPORTER.

West End, Greensboro.—The pageant, "There's Hope of a Tree," which was given by our Sunday school on Easter Sunday morning, was pronounced a great success. The offering amounted to $44.00.

At the evening service, the church choir, under the direction of Mr. L. M. Foust, presented a beautiful cantata, "The Prince of Life." The audience was very appreciative. Palms, ferns and lilies were used in decorating, with splendid effect.

One Sunday recently, the Y. P. S. C. E. had charge of the evening service. They held a debate on the query: Resolved, That the United States needs the gospel as much as any other nation. Miss Gladys Routh and L. W. Routh upheld the affirmative, while Mrs. McFadyen and O. F. Stafford spoke on the negative. Both sides brought out some good points, but the judges, Messrs. Black, Burns and Mrs. Eldridge, rendered their decision in favor of the affirmative.

The Foust Bible class is conducting a campaign to increase the membership of the class. The captains are Mrs. C. A. Cooper and P. A. Burns. The losing side will give a chicken supper to the winners. The class has already outgrown the class room and has had to move into the auditorium.

At the second quarterly conference, Messrs. L. W. Routh aand O. F. Stafford were nominated for delegate to annual conference. They are fine young men, and are among the most active members of our church.

Next Sunday evening, Dr. Williams will preach a special sermon to the police force of the city.

We think we have one of the best preachers in the conference. He puts his whole soul into his sermons and he certainly holds every one's attention.

Please say for the benefit of Mr. D. H. Hunter, that my grandmother, Mrs. Margaret Ledbetter, will be 100 years old in November and she has been a life-long Methodist Protestant. She is a member of Shiloh church, on Randolph charge.

C. L. COX, Reporter.

Cid, Denton Charge.—Rev. M. C. Henderson gave us Sunday a soul stirring sermon. There were not so many out owing to sickness and two funerals, one on each side of us. Mrs. Bert Byerly and infant of Thomasville were buried Sunday, at 3 o'clock and Mr. Henly Hendricks, an uncle of Mrs. M. T. Wright, at Hedricks Grove, at 3 o'clock.

Mrs. Molie Hunt, one of our sister members, is critically ill. We are hoping for a speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Delk and two lovely children came and worshipped with us Sunday.

While I hate to say this, in a sense, but am so glad to say, that we had a man and one son (small) to worship with us Sunday that had never been in Cid church before in 20 years that I knew of. He had lived about two and half miles from here. This was brought about by the faithful prayer meeting that has been going on for three years. Oh! what good can be accomplished by a faithful few.

The second quarterly conference was well attended, business good; three churches represented. The third one comes to Cid, (so glad). It was agreed upon to put electric lights in our parsonage at Denton. There has been $391.00 paid on pastor's salary this year.

We are looking forward for a good revival at Cid in the near future. Pray for us, brethren. There were five converts at the Kinley Baptist meeting recently. We are hoping to get some of the converts.

The prayer meetings are having good success. It will be at Mr. Virgil White's next Saturday night. And also the West prayer meetings have started up again. It will be at Mr. Claude Wilson's on the farm of Leonard Wilson. Our superintendent, Mr. Ben Parrish, is giving us good talks in the spiritual way. Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Wright spent Sunday evening with their little grandson, Max Wright, who is quite sick at Thomasville. It got a piece of trash in its lungs over two months ago, and was taken out by a Charlotte specialist, and it's believed that probably is causing a Bronchial trouble, but we hope for a recovery.

So glad to hear of the good results at Roberta. Great sympathy is going out by many for the stricken sufferers in the Mississippi flood. N. W. L.

Roberta.—The wave of sickness is receeding and things are turning to normal again. There have been several deaths which have caused heart-aches, loneliness, and grief. These passing loved ones are missed at the church, in the sick rooms and other places where their presence brought cheer and good will. Among the number of whom we have been bereaved are the following: Brother John Garmon, Uncle Henderson Dulin, Aunt Frances Furr, Aunt Froney Barber, Aunt Nealy Linker, and a Brother Hockens.

Among the sick who are still in danger are Mrs. Canup, Mrs. Dulin, the little child of Brother Robert Cochran, and Mrs. Charlie Verble, who is very ill in the Presbyterian Hospital at Charlotte. She is a dear and precious little woman, wife and mother. We pray that she may soon be back in our midst, give cheer and sunshine.

Next Sunday we trust will be a red letter day in our church and community. We are planning for an all-day service, with dinner on the ground. There is to be a Mother's Day sermon, decoration of the graves, and an address in the afternoon by a noted speaker. We are expecting a real good time in the Lord. Come, and bring a basket of flowers, on one arm and one full of dinner on the other, but don't forget to bring mother, she may not live to see another occasion like this.

ROBERT SHORT, Pastor.

High Point.—At the 11 o'clock service Sunday morning Rev. P. E. Lindley delivered an excellent and helpful sermon on "The Paths that Lead to God." He mentioned six paths which if followed carefully and faithfully, will lead us into close communion with the Savior, the path of the temple or church, the path of action or service, the path of trial or affliction, a notable example of this one being the blind hymn-writter, Mrs. Fannie J. Crosby, who gave to the world some of our most beautiful hymns after losing her eye-sight. Another path is that of the printed page or reading, then comes the path of piety or purity in thought and deed, and lastly the path of prayer.

A beautiful custom of furnishing flowers on Mother's Day to all those who attend Sunday school and church services, has been adopted by the First church, and will be observed next Sunday, May 8, a red flower for all the fortunate whose mothers are still with us, and a white one for those who are motherless. In the absence of Rev. P. E. Lindley, who will on that day deliver the Commencement sermon at Kernersville High School, Rev. T. C. Johnson, Professor of Journalism and Philosophy, in High Point College, will occupy the pulpit.

The two missionary Societies held their monthly meeting on Monday, May 2, in the home of Mrs. B. F. Montgomery with a good attendance. Interesting reports from the Branch meeting at Henderson were given. Our budget in the Foreign Society has been increased to $600. Pledges for Scholarship Loan Fund in the College were taken, since May is the month designated for this purpose. We have decided to invite the Executive Board of the Foreign Society to meet in High Point in May, 1928.

The Workers' Council of the Sunday school will meet at the church this (Tuesday) evening.

The Men's Club or Brotherhood will meet Thursday evening, and supper will be served to them by a group of the Ladies' Aid Society.

The Juniors of High Point College will tender an elaborate Banquet in compliment to the Seniors Wednesday evening in the College dining-hall.

Mrs. E. L. Ballard will leave next week for Pittston, Pa., to attend the annual Executive Board meeting of the Foreign Missionary Society and will be accompanied by Mrs. Geo. R. Brown of Reidsville.

The Junior church has made a pledge of $100 to the building fund of the church, and a May Carnival will be given on May 13th by the little folks for raising funds for this purpose.

Mrs. R. T. Pickens and a number of others went to Kernersville last Monday to attend funeral services for their old teacher, Prof. J. M. Weatherly, who was the Principal of the far-famed Jamestown High School in the 80's. He was a splendid type of the old-time schoolmaster, and was most thorough and painstaking in instructing his pupils. The news of his passing will bring sorrow to many hearts, for he spent 61 years in his profession, and thousands of men and women, now in adult life, owe to him the foundation of their education. He wielded an influence for right thinking and living, that will be felt for generations to come. He will live enshrined in tender memory in the hearts of countless former pupils, who are scattered over many states. To him they owe a debt of gratitude, which can never be repaid. Six years ago this coming June a reunion of his former pupils was held in his honor at Jamestown, and it proved to be a never-to-be-forgotten day. He delivered an address with all his former vigor, and his old students presented him a handsome gold watch as a token of love and esteem. How glad they now are that it was done in life, and not delayed until too late! May every one of his former pupils meet their old master in the mansions above, and as he said, answer "Adsum" to the roll call!

Pleasant Grove.—Brother Reynolds preached a good sermon Sunday morning, also at night, using as a subject, "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." In this discourse he laid much stress on the fact that these disciples like the church of today differed in talents, but agreed in the teachings of the Bible and were willing to put Christ first in everything. I feel that if we, the church, were as loyal to our church and Christ as were the disciples our power would be much greater.

The second quarterly conference was held Friday night. The nominees for delegate to the annual conference were Mr. F. H. Clark and Mr. B. E. Kennedy.

The Christian Endeavor societies and prayer meeting meet every Tuesday night and are doing very well, especially the Juniors under the direction of Mrs. L. F. Honeycutt, to whom we are very grateful. We also appreciate the service of Mr. Braxton from the High Point College in the Senior Society.

The second Sunday in May there will be an all-day service at the church. Mother's Day will be observed in the morning and the memorial service in the afternoon.

REPORTER.

Jerusalem.—This little church is still on the map and we desire to be heard from occasionally. We have two appointments each month and the next two Sundays will bring the little band together for worship. Next Sunday morning the pastor expects to deliver a Mothers' Day sermon if his mind is not directed to some other subject before the time for the sermon. It is this pastor's privilege in life yet to wear a red rose in memory of a dear, loving mother who has passed the 69th mile-post on the highway of life. Many will wear the white rose in memory of their best friend who has finished her task on earth and is resting and enjoying the blessings of eternal joy and happiness with the Saviour and the Father and all of the redeemed of the Lord.

Mothers' Day should be a day of much thought and meditation and expression of appreciation for our dear mothers who have toiled unceasingly for us. Remember the words of Jesus as he said, "Behold thy mother!" May we not only behold our mothers who are living, but may we remember them and honor them with a day of genuine worship of the true and living God and give expression of our high appreciation for the unfailing love and care of our mothers.

C. B. WAY, Pastor.

South Lexington.—There were 182 in Sunday school last Sunday; previous Sunday there were 203.

The Sunday night service was fairly well attended and Pastor Ridge easily maintained his reputation by delivering a good sermon. At the close of the sermon the matter of securing new books for use in the Sunday school and church services was presented by the pastor and within a few minutes nearly enough money was raised to purchase 100 new song books for the church.

Before the sermon last Sunday night this writer, who was the only representative from South Lexington Sunday school at the State Sunday School convention at Burlington last week, was called upon to make a brief report of the convention.

Next Sunday morning the pastor will preach a special Mothers' Day sermon and at the night service a Mothers' Day pageant will be presented by members of the Sunday school and church. Pastor Ridge is directing the preparation of the pageant which will be presented under his supervision.

This writer enjoyed a visit to a Baptist Sunday school last Sunday morning and also worshipped with a Baptist pastor and congregation. It was a delightful experience. I was called upon to teach a class of young men and young women and also to participate in the church service. This incident reminded me of the passing of the day with some pastors and churches where the spirit of selfishness prevails. It is both a beautiful and commendable thing for the Methodist and the Baptist to worship together in this life, because they will be as one in the eternal world, and know no marks of distinction; so why not practice it a little as we journey along through life. This writer has some good friends in the Baptist ministry as well as in some of the other denominations.

C. B. WAY, Reporter.

Whitakers Charge.—The work moves forward. We could do greater things, there is room for improvement, there are many problems; still the work moves onward. With our goals before us, we are striving to reach them. The interest in kingdom service is not as earnest as it should be, yet the attendance upon the church services is rather gratifying. It would be a happy day for a pastor and his people if all church members had the interest in the work of the church which they should have.

The Sunday school in the Whitakers' church is having the largest attendance since I have been on the work. For a while it seemed that the attendance could not be increased, but we kept on trying and with some effort the attendance has increased considerably.

During the first two weeks in April we held a series of evangelistic services in the Whitakers church. Rev. J. D. Williams did the preaching. The community has never heard the Gospel preached in a plainer and more powerful way than Dr. Williams preached it. It was real Gospel preaching all the way through and every one who heard his messages was inspired to live a better life; if they heeded the truths presented. The result of this meeting was not what we had hoped and prayed that it would be, yet we never see the full results. Five people united with the church, all are young in years, and who knows what these lives will mean to the kingdom?

Yours in His service,
F. W. PASCHALL, Pastor.

Davidson Circuit.—The second quarterly conference was held at Pine Hill church on Saturday, April 23rd, at 2 p. m. The churches were all represented but one and the business of the conference was transacted in a spirit of love and harmony. The reports were very encouraging. Sunday school is going with good interest at all the churches. Prayer meeting is held regularly at most of them Financial report was the best ever. Alleghany church has just recently built a recess pulpit and added two large windows. This we appreciate very much. The congregation at Pine Hill is building a new church. They are trying to complete it ready for special meeting the fourth Sunday in July. Perhaps it will be the best church building on the charge when it is finished.

I don't know a more faithful little band of Christians anywhere than we have at Pine Hill. Plans are under way now for our Circuit Rally to be held under the big Tabernacle at Chapel Hill the third Sunday in May. Services will begin strictly at 10 o'clock and the program will be interesting throughout the day. Both young and old will have a part in this rally and the singing will be a special feature.

We rejoice that Dr. Dixon and Mrs. Dixon have planned to be with us. Dr. Dixon will preach to us at 11 a. m. Mrs. Dixon will address us in the afternoon. I trust that all who attend will be greatly benefited.

I am serving perhaps one among the oldest charges in our conference and they are still carrying on for the Master. They are a delightful people to serve. Brethren, pray that I may be so directed by the Holy Spirit that I may be a worthy leader of the flock.

C. E. RIDGE, Pastor.

Denton Church.—Our pastor, Rev. Mr. Henderson, preached a fine sermon for us yesterday. Last night he gave us another great message. The attendance was good. Our people are working more now for the church and Sunday school than they have in the past. The Sunday school attendance yesterday was 101; year ago yesterday, was 88. Our offering for the Children's Home at High Point, $4.40.

We are glad to say that our Sunday school attendance has not run under year ago this spring.

We were glad to have with us last night Mrs. A. A. Hill, from High Point. Come again.

People, come to Sunday school. Don't let our good pastor and other workers have to come after you. REPORTER.

First Church, Spencer—We were glad to have our pastor and Rev. J. M. Braxton with us Sunday. Mr. Braxton gave us two good sermons. His subject was "Service, Doing Our Best for Our Lord." If we want our lives to count. Even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and give His life a ransom for us. A very interesting and helpful sermon.

Three members were received into the church: Mrs. D. R. Coble, Josephine and Philip Coble. They have been working with us as faithful as members for some time.

I see in the report of W. H. M. S. that Spencer paid $15.60. We paid $25.00. I guess we were too slow in sending in or rather getting up our last payment.

We have made another $100 payment on our church lot, so we now owe $100 and hope to raise that by the first of June. And we are growing both in number and interest; and our people are looking forward to the day when we can have a church home of our very own here in Spencer, and it will be a glad day indeed when we can build.

MRS. A. L. MOORE.

Fountain Place.—We had a good day yesterday. The attendance at all the services was very good. The Sunday school has organized an orchestra which is adding greatly to the building up of the Sunday school. Mothers' Day will be observed next Sunday. A special program will be rendered by the Sunday school Sunday morning.

The Lord's Supper was observed at the 11 o'clock service yesterday, after which the doors of the church were opened and 10 new members were received into the church: Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Glenn and their son, Howard, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Hornaday and H. E. Gibbs, by letter, Misses Syble Glenn, Nellie Lee Amick, Joye Fogleman and Vivian Parrish, on confession of faith. We are very proud to have these good people join with us. They were already members of our congregation and were doing a very splendid work in the church and Sunday school.

The Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society will hold their regular monthly business meeting at the church this evening at 7:30 o'clock. We are looking forward to the time (which is only a month) which our pastor will be with us full time. We are hoping the work in general will take renewed interest and co-operate with our pastor so that we all together may accomplish great things for the Master. REPORTER.

She was buried in the city cemetery.

THE SKUNK TO CLEAR BRAZIL OF SNAKES

The skunk is that little white and black creature so well known in America that no description seems necessary. While many think of this cunning little animal in terms of fur coat, thief, or smell, a few see him as a great benefactor, not only as a ravenous eater of destructive mice and insects, but of the dreaded rattlesnake.

It is frequently asked how it happens that rattlesnakes multiply no more rapidly and what are their natural enemies. The skunk is the answer. Science knows no other animal immune from rattlesnake poison. Hence, anyone who dreads snakes should hesitate to kill a skunk. As skunks should not be killed for fur, and only rarely for their raids upon hen nests and tiny chicks, the only objection left would be the odor emitted when molested. This may be avoided by not disturbing the skunk while it slowly waddles through field and orchard searching for food.

Brazil has a pest of poisonous snakes. There the snake is a national problem. Each year more than twenty thousand persons are bitten and five thousand die annually of snake bites. While a serum has been discovered to save the people bitten, Brazil has no animal which preys upon the snakes multiplying rapidly in the cultivated areas where man has overturned the balance of nature. No doubt in the jungles there are snake-eating animals, but they do not follow into the cleared regions where the poisonous snakes go to feed upon mice and other creatures upon which snakes thrive. Thus it happens that in Brazil snakes menace the land most desired by man.

The Brazilian scientists have turned to America for relief. They have chosen that little smell-maker, the skunk, to help them rid their country of their dangerous snakes and to keep down the creatures upon which the snakes thrive.

For years Brazilian scientists experimented with various animals to find an enemy of the venomous snakes so abundant there. Two birds, the emu and the jaburu, eat snakes as does the wild pig. A pet skunk at a Brazilian snake farm pointed the way. It wandered about at will, frequently receiving snake bites, but whenever it was hungry, it simply picked out a choice rattler, bit off its head, and at it. That caused the Brazilians to turn to the skunk for relief.

The knowledge of the use of the skunk should cause one to hesitate when this provoking little creature makes a raid on a hen nest or turns a pet dog into a temporary odoriferous abomination. The offending skunk may have been hunting for a fat rattlesnake in the hen roost, or clearing the mice out of the garden when it was molested by that favorite dog.—George Ballard Bowers, in Our Dumb Animals.

—Exhaustive laboratory experiments have at last resulted in the discovery of a process by which rayon fibre may be made from corn stalks on a commercially profitable basis and the product is said to compare well with the artificial silk hitherto made from wood pulp and cotton linters. In view of the enormous supply of this particular raw material, manufacturing costs will be low.

—Nineteen twenty-six witnessed a material shrinkage in the cost of living, according to statistics compiled by the National Industrial Conference Board.

Reduction for the year, despite a temporary peak in August, approached six percent.

Present levels, according to the same authority, are about 73 percent above those of 1913 whereas in 1920 such items as food, clothing, housing, fuel and light, house furnishings, etc., ran up to 116.5 percent above the 1913 levels on which the computations are based. The general downward trend is expected to continue well into, and perhaps through, 1927, inasmuch as it will be three to six months before recent changes in wholesale commodity prices find their way to the ultimate consumer.

Great Service of Joseph of Arimathea

Joseph of Arimathea is spoken of in the New Testament as an honorable counsellor who waited for the Kingdom of God, as a good man and a just, as a rich man, and as a disciple of Jesus, but secretly for fear of the Jews. The statement that he was a disciple of Jesus implies not only that he believed in Jesus, but also that he had been with Jesus and learned of him. It may be that, like Nicodemus, he visited Jesus by night. At any rate in some manner he managed to take his lessons of Jesus and at the same time evade the vigilance of the hostile Jews. When Jesus came to trial before the body of which Joseph was a member, Joseph did not vote with the great majority against Jesus, but it seems that he remained silent, saying not one word in defense of Jesus. It may be that he was so timid that he allowed simple fear of the Jews to seal his mouth, or it may be that he thought defense unnecessary, expecting Jesus by his own power to deliver himself from the hands of wicked men. After Jesus had actually been nailed to the cross, he must have profoundly regretted that he had not made strong effort to save Jesus from such a fate. With his conception of what Jesus was, he realized the horribleness of the crime that had been committed. He could not now do anything to restore Jesus to life, but he might be able to save the body of Jesus from disgraceful burial. Under Roman law in general, crucified men were left on their crosses for the vultures. To the Jews this practice was so revolting that they secured a modification of the law in their own country. Instead of being left on the cross, the law prescribed that the bodies of the crucified men should be dumped together in a common pit or grave and buried as one mass. Joseph saw what would occur in the case of Jesus. His body and the bodies of the two thieves crucified with him would be thrown into a pit and hastily buried together. This was so monstrous that Joseph could not endure the thought of it. He threw off his timidity, his fear of the Jews, and went boldly to Pilate and asked to be permitted to give Jesus a decent burial. The request was granted, though not until Pilate had been assured that Jesus was already dead. Nicodemus came to the help of Joseph, and they gave Jesus not simply a decent burial, but an honorable burial.

In view of the resurrection to follow and the proofs of it, how important was the part taken by Joseph of Arimathea. And the whole Christian world will applaud Joseph for rescuing the body of Jesus from the horrible fate devised by the laws of men.

The Book of Nicodemus reports that the Jews arrested Joseph and put him in prison to await trial after the sabbath was past. The one door to the prison was sealed. But when they sent to bring Joseph out to trial, they found the prison empty and the seal unbroken. Joseph had been miraculously delivered from Prison and had returned to his home in Arimathea.

The Love That Surpasses Mother's

Among human affections there is no love equal to a mother's love. Mother's love has been declared the most beautiful thing on earth. Not only is mother's love beautiful, but it is strong and enduring. What amazing sacrifices it provokes! What will a mother not do for her boy or girl. The object of her love may show no appreciation of it, may even show contempt for it, but her love is only deepened and strengthened. Her love does not depend upon virtue in her children, but is poured out without stint upon the most unworthy. Even crime and public shame will not quench a mother's love. Statistics show that when a man is imprisoned in punishment for his offences, his mother continues to visit him after wife and sisters and brothers have ceased to go. Mother's love is amazing to all but mothers. To them it seems the most natural and proper thing in the world. It cannot be too strong, it cannot be too enduring, it cannot outdo itself. It is not surprising that a day has been set apart to do honor to mother's love.

Yet there is a greater love than mother's. The psalmist knew about it when he wrote: "When my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." Even a mother's love might fail. But God's love will never fail. It is an everlasting love. It is a love infinitely deep and strong. The outcast may take refuge in it, the worst of sinners may turn from his evil ways and find consolation and strength in the mighty love of God.

College Trustees Meeting

The trustees of High Point College met last Monday and organized under the new charter. Heretofore the board has been operating in subordination to the Board of Education. Under the new character it will be independent of the Board of Education except that it will hold the college property by lease from the Board of Education. The following were added to the board of trustees of the college: J. M. Millikan, of Greensboro; Charles Robbins and George T. Penny, of High Point, and Wiley Ward and Joseph D. Ross, of Asheboro. Bro. R. M. Cox, of Winston, was elected chairman of the Board of Trustees and Mrs. J. M. Millikan was elected secretary. The meeting adjourned to convene on Tuesday, May 10th. A finance committee consisting of G. T. Penny, J. M. Millikan and J. Norman Wills was constituted whose business it will be to consider the financial budget for the year and to devise ways to meet it. The officers of the college, including the faculty, will be chosen at the meeting next Tuesday.

WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Forty-Fourth Commencement

On Sunday morning, May 1, a large congregation gathered in the Methodist Protestant church to hear President Elderdice preach his thirtieth annual Baccalaureate Sermon. For twenty-six years he chose his subjects in alphabetical order, beginning with A and ending with Z. For the last four years he has followed no particular order in selecting his themes, but they have been unique and the discussions have been interesting.

The subject for this year was "The Greatest Commencement Address." The text was Matthew 28:18-20. After giving the time, place, and occasion of this great address, Dr. Elderdice called the roll of the first graduating class of Christian ministers and gave a few characteristics of each member. A few words of tribute were spoken concerning the first Great Christian Teacher, who delivered the first great commencement address. The address was then read and analyzed. It was a brief address, containing but three sentences. When analyzed it is seen to contain: First, A Colossal Claim; second, A Comprehensive Commission; and, third, A Paradoxical Promise. After discussing each of these three divisions and showing what they must have meant to that first graduating class of Christian ministers, President Elderdice directly addressed the graduating class then before him and impressed upon them the unique authority of their Lord, His great commission to them and His blessed promise to be with them always.

The Alumni Sermon was preached by Rev. Gideon I. Humphries, A. M., S. T. B., D. D., pastor of Bethesda Methodist Protestant church, Salisbury, Md. His text was "Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it." His subject was "Our Promised Land." It was pointed out that for each of us there is a promised land. Our first duty with reference to this land is to explore it. Upon making this exploration we will find that the land is a good one. We will also discover that there are many and great difficulties in the way of our possessing it. Faithful and heroic souls are well able to overcome all the difficulties and to take full possession of the goodly land.

On Monday night the Junior Class presented a splendid literary and musical program. The general subject was "An Evening With the Circuit Rider." The heroic life and labors of the pioneer Methodist preachers in America were vividly sketched and the old Methodist hymns were enthusiastically sung. The script of the sketches was prepared by Miss Dorothy Elderdice. The songs were selected and the singing directed by the writer of this article. The program was as follows:

The Pioneer Prophet of Methodism, Arthur V. Garvin; Hymn, "Amazing Grace;" The Parish of the Backwoods, Harold McAdow; "The Meeting Place," Mrs. Frank Shaffer; Hymn, "Palms of Victory;" The Prophet of the Long Road, Louis Bangerter; "A Voice in the Wilderness," Frank Shaffer; Hymn, "Title Clear;" Proselyting in the Early Days, William Wade; Arousing the Risibilities, Harvey Mitchell; Crossing Jordan, Mrs. Vera Gibbons; Hymn, "The Land of Beulah." The hymns were lined in the old style and were sung by the congregation with the old-time Methodist fervor.

On Tuesday morning at ten o'clock, the Board of Governors met in the Seminary Library. All members, but one, were present. The regular business was soon transacted. Then the Board did two things that will be of interest to all friends of the Seminary. First, they authorized the addition of another full-time professor to the Faculty. Second, in recognition of the thirty years of faithful and efficient service by President Elderdice, the Board granted him a few months' leave of absence and appropriated funds to pay the expenses of a trip to Europe. While in Europe, President Elderdice will attend the World Conference on Faith and Order, which meets at Lausanne, Switzerland, August 3-21.

The address to the Graduating Class on Tuesday night was delivered by a distinguished layman, Prof. Thomas C. Miller, of Fairmount, W. Va. For sixty years Professor Miller has been engaged in educational work. During eight years he served as professor in the University of West Virginia. For an equal number of years he was State Superintendent of Education in West Virginia. For twelve years he was President of Sheperd College, Sheperdstown, W. Va. During the last fifteen years he has been an honored member of the Board of Governors of the Westminster Theological Seminary. Professor Miller is a lover of history. In his address it was natural for his thought to run along historical lines. He urged the young men to acquaint themselves with the past of their church, especially with its great leaders. He spoke enthusiastically of the founders, in 1828, of the Methodist Protestant Church, and of those great leaders who, in 1877, were active in reuniting Methodist Protestantism. His counsel was wise and his advice was fatherly.

The Charge to the Graduating Class was delivered by Rev. Frank W. Stephenson, A. B., S. T. B., D. D., of Pittsburgh, Pa., Secretary of the Board of Education of the Methodist Protestant Church. In clear language and fitting symbol he charged the members of the class to be diligent, sincere, enthusiastic, and honest. Under each of these heads timely and wholesome advice was given. Dr. Stephenson made a good impression.

Diplomas of graduation were given to the following: Stephen Galley, Manboro, Va.; Harry G. Hager, Baltimore, Md.; Dennis G. Raynor, Speonk, N. Y.; Earl W. Slayton, Ellamore, W. Va.; Dorsey K. Sturgis, Lynchburg, Va.; and George E. Wunder, Cumberland, Md.

Diplomas bearing the degree, Bachelor of Sacred Theology, were given to the following: Hugh C. Burkins, A. B., S. T. B., Baltimore, Md.; Jesse P. Dawson, A. B., S. T. B., Baltimore, Md.; Herbert E. Hudgins, A. B., S. T. B., Lewistown, Md.; William C. Wachter, S. T. B., Boonsboro, Md.

A diploma conferring the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology was given to Paul Otterbine Shettel, A. B., B. D., S. T. B.

This commencement closed a good year for the Seminary. There was a fine body of students, and a good spirit prevailed. With an enlarged Faculty next year and with President Elderdice fresh from his European trip we are expecting even better things for the coming year. Let all who intend to prepare for the Christian ministry write President H. L. Elderdice, Westminster, Md., for a catalogue and any information which they may desire. The next session opens September 20.

REAPING THE WHIRLWIND

My desultory mining operations in the magazine and current literature field for the past few months have unearthed the following black diamonds: 1. The idea of literature, not as an art, but as one of the amusement trades. 2. The substitution of the standards of beauty and ugliness for the moral standards of right and wrong. 3. "Relatively the youth of today are the wisest, most moral, the most hopeful that the world has ever seen." (Judge Lindsey). 4. "Happily, this younger generation, so much wiser, franker, cleaner-minded and more moral than the older generation, will soon be in command." (Judge Lindsey). 5. "There is no such thing as an illegitimate child." (Judge Lindsey). 6. The present evils in America are a sign that the people are seeking after God. . The true way of life is to follow our desires and passions, and do as we please.

One would think that the mere statement of such perverse absurdities would prevent their authors from ever getting a hearing. How is it, then, that such ridiculous nonsense is seriously put forth, and solemnly published? Simply because many persons today are testing everything in heaven and on earth by the base touchstone of Darwin's theory of the origin and evolution of species. They apply the doctrine of evolution to everything, even to the eternal verities of religion and morality. But history clearly shows that all reformations in religion have gone back to the past for the truths they taught. Religious reformers have taught nothing new. Christ simply brought together the old truths of the law and the prophets that had fallen into abeyance. His teaching of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and many of His words and miracles are found in the Old Testament. He Himself said: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." There is no teaching of evolution here. Luther, also, brought about a new order of things in religion, not by teaching anything new or evolutionary, but simply by bringing into notice again the old evangelical truth. The same can be said of Wesley, Fox, and other religious reformers. They drew their teachings from the Bible, a work of the past. To reject the Bible is like rejecting a spring of pure, life-giving water simply because that spring has flowed down to us from the past. The future is a blank. Whatever good comes to us must come from the present and the past. As Christ said: "Every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." A man may accept whatever good there is in his own generation; but it is certain that fundamental religious and moral truths can never change. They are the same forever. Progress in religion and morality consists, not in discarding the ideals of the past, but in living and growing up to those ideals. It is certain that fundamental religious and moral truths can never change. They are the same forever. Progress in religion and morality consist, not in discarding the ideals of the past, but in living and growing up to those ideals. It is certain that in this life we can never attain to those noble ideals of the past, much less surpass them.

Suppose Darwin's theory be true. What of it? Multitudes of things are true that we care nothing about. The important matter is not the mere fact that a thing is true, but the value of a truth. The truth (if it be a truth) that men come from animals is worth nothing. But the truth that a God-fearing, righteous man will become an angel in heaven is worth a good deal.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES HOOPER.

SIDELIGHTS ON THE DRESS QUESTION

It is quite interesting to read some things written or spoken 40 to 50 years ago on the dress question. It shows the contrast between the thought of people then and now touching the question of modesty.

Sam Jones used say in his denunciation of decollete dress for women, that if he were to enter his wife's room and find her dressed (?) as some of the fashionable ones did then, he would "feel like asking her pardon." But how would he feel today were he to come on the scene?

And what would Mark Twain think, were he to rise from the dead? In his Innocents Abroad he tells how he was shocked beyond measure at the dress (?) of the women he saw at a fashionable suburb of Paris, at a dance. The unusual that shocked the great humorist and drew from him some of his most withering adjectives would be regarded as a "matter of course" today by many and denounced by few of our public speakers. Have we improved since 1868, or have we degenerated? Or it is just a "reversion type"? As Sam Jones used to say, "Going back to monkeys"? It reminds one of Pope's lines:

> "Vice is a monster of such frightful mien
> That to be hated, needs but to be seen;
> But seen too oft—familiar with her face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

The following extract from The Americanization of Edward Bok, an autobiography, which appeared in 1923, is refreshing, showing the attitude of the great Henry Ward Beecher toward immodest dress. Edward Bok is known to the great mass of the people as the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal; but when a young man he was intimately associated with Henry Ward Beecher, and gives the following in his autobiography: "Mr. Beecher was rarely angry. Once, however, he came near it; yet he was more displeased than angry. Some of his family and Edward (Bok) had gone to a notable public affair at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, where a box had been placed at Mr. Beecher's disposal. One member of the family was a very beautiful girl who had brought a girl friend. Both were attired in full evening decollete costume. Mr. Beecher came in late from another engagement. A chair had been kept vacant for him in the immediate front of the box, since his presence had been widely advertised, and the audience was expecting to see him. When he came in, he doffed his coat and was about to go to the chair reserved for him when he stopped, stepped back, and sat down in a chair in the rear of the box. It was evident from his face that something had displeased him. Mrs. Beecher leaned over and asked him, but he offered no explanation. Nothing was said.

"Edward (Bok) went back to the house with Mr. Beecher; after talking a while in the study, the preacher, wishing to show him something, was going upstairs with his guest and had nearly reached the second landing when there was the sound of a rush, the gas was quickly turned low, and two white figures sped into one of the rooms.

"'My dears,' called Mr. Beecher. 'Yes, Mr. Beecher,' came a oice from the door of the room in question.

"'Come here one minute,' cried Mr. Beecher.

"'But we cannot,' said the voice. 'We are ready for bed. Wait until—'

"'No; come as you are,' returned Mr. Beecher.

"'Let me go downstairs,' Edward interrupted. (This was Edward Bok, the young man).

"'No; you stay right here,' said Mr. Beecher.

"'Why, Mr. Beecher! How can we? Isn't Edward with you?'

"'You are keeping me waiting for you,' was the quiet and firm answer.

"There was a moment's hesitation. Then the door opened and the figures of the two girls appeared.

"'Now, turn up the gas, please, as it was,' said Mr. Beecher.

"'But, Mr. Beecher—'

"'You heard me?' said Mr. Beecher.

"Up went the light, and the two beautiful girls of the box stood in their night dresses.

"'Now, why did you run away?' asked Mr. Beecher.

"'Why, Mr. Beecher! How can you ask such a question?' pouted one of the girls, looking at her dress and then at Edward.

"'Exactly,' said Mr. Beecher. 'Your modesty leads you to run away from this young man because he might possibly see you under a single light in dresses that cover your entire bodies, while that modesty did not prevent you all this evening from sitting beside him, under a myriad of lights, in dresses that exposed nearly half of your bodies. That's what I call a distinction with a difference—with the difference to the credit neither of your intelligence nor of your modesty. There is some modesty in the dresses you have on; there was precious little in what you girls wore this evening. Good night.'"

"You do not believe, Mr. Beecher," Edward asked later, "in decollete dressing for girls?"

"No, and even less for women. A girl has some excuse of youth on her side; a woman none at all."

A moment later he added: "A proper dress for any girl or woman is one that reveals the lady, but not her person."

We need some more "haulings over the coals" in this day, as Edward Bok witnessed the great Plymouth pastor administer to the two girls that night in Brooklyn. The silly inconsistency of being squeamish and prudish in one place—just because it's the fashion—and devoid of all modesty in another—just because it's the fashion—deserves severe rebuke.

The scriptures say little about dress, further than to insist on modesty. Paul and Peter both insist on modesty. This is seen in the direction to the priests: "Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar, that thy nakedness be not discovered thereon." Ex. 20:26. Modesty, modesty insisted on!

And in Rev. 3:18, we have the words of Jesus Himself to the effect that it is a "shame for one's nakedness to appear."

"I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, and that the "shame of thy nakedness do not appear."

Look at the two words, "shame" and "nakedness." A "shame" for one's "nakedness to appear," says Jesus.

While Jesus is teaching a spiritual truth, the force of His teaching is in the strict meaning of the literal, that it is a shame for one's nakedness to appear." But in this, as in many other matters, we are scouting the Bible, and reverting to paganism.

The thirty-fourth annual meeting was held at the Alvan Drew Mission School, Pine Ridge, Ky., from the fifth to the eighth, inclusive. The theme of the devotionals throughout the Board Meeting was "Light," treated from the different angles. This meeting was held in connection with the graded and high school commencement. Twenty-three pupils graduated from the grammar school and eight from the high school. From this graduation class, one expects to teach next year, one to enter training for a registered nurse, one of the young men expects to enter Wetsern Maryland College, another will take up the study of medicine. The others plan to continue their education at various colleges.

This was the largest attended Board Meeting ever held, there being representatives from 18 states, approximately 65 delegates registered and a number of visitors. Five states had their full quota of representatives—Maryland, Iowa, Ohio, West Virginia and Pittsburgh. North Carolina had four representatives but two were listed as executive officers. Five of the eighteen states had never been represented at a Board Meeting before. They were Mississippi, Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Iowa. The reports, as given by these representatives, showed marked increase along every endeavor.

The first evening session was given over to an unique community service in which citizens of the community, patrons of the school, teachers and pupils expressed gratification and appreciation for the school and the opportunities which it affords. It was explained to the visitors that it was the wish of those in charge to make Pine Ridge the center of the community not only in school work, but also a demonstration center for farming, poultry-raising, and stock-raising. Pine Ridge is now one of the three high schools in Wolfe County, and is one of the righ ranking schools in Kentucky.

One of the most impressive services during the meeting was a memorial service in honor of the late Jane A. Gordon, who was for many years corresponding secretary of the Woman's Board of Home Missions. Mrs. A. G. Liebelt, of Pittsburgh, was elected to succeed Mrs. Gordon.

Many interesting plans were discussed during the hour which was given to "The Best Things Our Auxiliaries Have Done." Work from our active fields was presented by various ones. Miss Mabelle Shaffer, the field secretary, gave a full report of her work. She gave the number of miles she had traveled, the states visited, talks made, and work accomplished. She has organized more than 50 new adult societies and eight Young People's Societies. Mrs. E. A. Craig reported for the Central Committee. This report showed that they had been active throughout the year. Dr. T. R. Woodford gave a full report for Pine Ridge, in which he contrasted activities the first year with that of the present. Among the many things that he said were: The general expense the first year, which included board, room, tuition, was $440. This, the eighth year, was $10,392.50. Sale of second-hand clothing the first year was $48; this year, $2,144.55. Dr. Woodford stated that in October and November was the greatest need for clothing. Miss Emily Grace Brown reported for the mission work in Ohio. She made it clear that the need was urgent for more workers. The society appointed a committee to go to Dillonvale, Ohio, and investigate the conditions. The Pittsburgh Mission continues to go, Mrs. F. W. Cooke reports, and states that there is added interest each year. The cherished hope of the Maryland Branch is soon to be realized, so reports Mrs. E. A. Craig. The opening of a Home for Business Girls in Baltimore has long been hoped for and now the outlook is encouraging. The report of the Children's Home, (N. C.) was made by Mrs. D. S. Coltrane. There was universal interest manifested in the Children's Home, as the Board met in North Carolina last year and visited the Home. The announcement of the accident in which one of the boys of the Home was killed and others injured was deplored by all present.

Mrs. W. H. Mair gave a brief report of the work at Bethel Home. All the Board members could well imagine themselves in the hills of North Carolina where Bethel Home is located. The fact that Mrs. Jane Gordon, a former member of the Missouri Branch, had accepted work at the Home probably added to the interest of the Middle West delegates. Mrs. Gordon's son, Marvin, is in school at Pine Ridge. Post-card pictures of the Bethel Home were distributed.

One of the new branches, Missouri, presented Miss Minnie Byrd, a teacher in the high school, a quilt in appreciation for her work. This quilt had made for the Missouri Auxiliary something over $70.

The reports of the various committees were interesting and instructive. The detail of each will be ready for distribution early in July, and may be had by applying to Miss Pearl McCulloch, Greensboro, N. C., Secretary of Literature.

The young people of the denomination will have an opportunity to participate in the prosecution of the work along various missionary lines. A standing committee was appointed by the Board to formulate these plans. All the Branches will contribute to each of these various missionary enterprises.

Each year has not only added interest in Pine Ridge, but many improvements have been made. The high school building was completed last year. In this building there is an auditorium, class rooms on both first and second floors, and a library. In the library is a piano which Miss Lizzie Copps left to the school in her will. She also left her farm in Ohio to Pine Ridge school. This is estimated to be worth between $5,000 and $6,000. The school will probably receive this money sometime during the next two years. This money will probably be used to start a fund to build a boys' dormitory which is badly needed. In the basement of the high school building is a very well equipped printing shop, a science room and a heating plant.

The Board recommended many improvements, some of which were providing a more adequate water supply, enlarging upon agriculture plans, improvements in the laundry, planting of an orchard, and the erection of a cottage to be occupied by Mr. W. A. Suiter and family, head of the agriculture department. There will also be provisions made for enlarging in the Department of Manual Arts, such as making chairs, baskets, brooms, stools, magazine racks, etc.; and weaving and rug making for the girls. Some beautiful rugs which have been made by the girls were exhibited and put on sale. Most of these were sold to the visitors. The delegates were asked to assist in the sale of these products.

Mrs. A. G. Dixon, of Greensboro, was re-elected president. The Board was invited to meet in Washington, D. C., for its next session.

Pine Ridge is beautifully located in the Eastern Kentucky Mountains. The new Appalachian Highway, which extends from Detroit, Mich., to Jacksonville, Fla., passes through our mission school property. This is especially gratifying since the Mountain Central Railroad has practically discontinued trains on its line. Slade, which is eight miles distant, is the nearest station, and can be reached easily in one-half hour when the roads are good, but in case of rain it is very hard to get over the road. Due to a heavy rain, some of our Baltimore and New York delegates, who were anxious to get home, had to take the drive to Slade in a spring-wagon.

While the modern conveniences are not at Pine Ridge there is altruism, self-sacrifice that one forgets the conveniences to which they have been accustomed. Especially was the spirit of co-operation manifest among the young people who are working part of the time to help pay their expenses.

The meeting at Pine Ridge will long be remembered by those present because of the unbounded hospitality extended by Dr. and Mrs. Woodford, their splendid corps of teachers, the students, and the community citizens.

MRS. D. S. COLTRANE.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE

The Young People's Summer Conference will be held at High Point College July 18-24, inclusive. Plans are being made to entertain the largest and best Conference ever held in our church.

The leaders of the various groups, speakers for the evenings, as well as the other conference workers, have been secured, and will be given in a later issue. Watch the HERALD for this information.

The time of the Conference is just a little less than three months off. We need to be planning, and arranging our vacations now in order to be ready when the gong sounds to go. Don't be left out—start to making your plans now.

The Registration Campaign is now under way. You will be called on, possibly, in a few days by the representative in your church. Find out who the Registration Agent is in your church, and be the first one to register.

The registration list will be published each week after the last issue of the HERALD for this month. We will give the agents that much time to build up a good long list.

Registration fee 50 cents for adults; 25 cents for children under 12 years of age.

FERTILE SOIL

The hearts of children and young people, those who are reached most easily and effectively by means of the Sabbath School, are fertile soil for the seed of God's Word. In the parable of the sower and the soils, the good ground which brings forth 30 or 60 or 100 fold, may represent the minds and hearts of those who are young. Children and young people are curious and eager to learn new things. They are therefore ready for the good news of the kingdom. They are also ready for new friends, and those who seek to introduce them to Jesus Christ, the friend of sinners, and the elder brother of all the saved, will find them easy to approach and warm of heart. The character of youth is in the process of formation and is not hardened into indifference or cynicism or worldliness. It is only a step for the tender feet of children from the way of death to the way of life. Here, then, are hungry minds and hearts, responsive wills and easily molded characters, waiting for the shaping hand and witnessing voice of the teacher of the Word. This is the golden opportunity of the teacher.—Selected.

The WORK and the WORKERS

Friday evening, Saturday and Sunday, May 6 to 8, were spent with Rev. H. L. Isley and his people at the centenary celebration of Salem Church on Saxapahaw charge. The early records of this church show that "An Associated Methodist Church" was organized here in 1826, so the church, so far as Methodist Protestantism is concerned is over 100 years old. We find by consulting Paris' History of the Methodist Protestant Church that the first session of the North Carolina Annual Conference was held "at Whitaker's Chapel, December, 1828," and that the second session was held "at Solomon's Meeting House in April, 1829." We also find that "Moriah Church in Guilford County was organized in April, 1829."

The date of the organization of Whitaker's Chapel is not given. If someone can give this date we shall be glad.

In May, 1928, we will celebrate our one-hundredth anniversary as a denomination in suitable services, in St. John's Church, Baltimore. Doubtless we will be called upon to give some dates and facts relative to the organization and development of churches in this Conference. We shall be glad to hear from anyone who can give real facts concerning our oldest churches. These churches, as we understand it, are in Halifax County, Granville County, Washington County, Guilford County, Randolph County and Orange County before it was divided into several counties.

In the 1919 Conference Journal (see page 74), we are told when and where the first and second sessions of the North Carolina Annual Conference were held. Then we skip to the sixty-second session, which was held at Flat Rock in November, 1887. Is there any way to get at the when and where of the sessions from 1829 to 1887? If anybody can give these facts, please do it through the HERALD.

Salem Centenary Celebration

Someone in the community, I am sure, will write up this wonderful meeting, so I will not say a great deal. The program was well planned and the meetings were well attended, and the facts presented were exceedingly interesting. The location of Salem Church is beautiful for situation. The church stands in the midst of a beautiful grove, and both the church and the grounds are well kept. A marker stands by the roadside telling the passing traveller that "This is Salem Methodist Protestant Church."

It was delightful to mingle with Revs. D. A. Highfill, T. F. McCulloch, G. W. Holmes, W. F. Kennett, J. D. Williams and H. S. B. Thompson, former pastors, and to listen to each of them as they presented most interesting facts concerning the people who have carried on for the Master here during the past hundred years. It was also a joy to sit and listen to some of the older laymen as they told of the past, and laid plans for the future. Revs. S. W. Taylor, R. M. Andrews, and J. Elwood Carroll also brought stirring messages looking to the future. The pastor presided over all the meetings very gracefully, and added his word betimes.

I had the privilege of preaching on "One Hundred Years of Christian Service" to a packed house on Sunday morning.

It was a very delightful occasion, and I trust others of our churches which are approaching, or may have passed the one-hundredth milestone will plan similar celebrations.

Eli Whitney High School

I reluctantly slipped away from Salem at noon on Sunday, and by three o'clock was at the Eli Whitney High School for the commencement sermon. The services began promptly on time, and it was a real joy to preach to eighteen fine-looking young men and young women graduates of this school, and to a large audience of interested parents and friends.

High Point College Commencement

Announcement is made of the High Point College commencement, May 20 to 23. This is the first commencement of the High Point College with a graduating class. Our hearts rejoice with those of the faculty and students of the college in this event. All who can should aavil themselves of the opportunity of visiting the college during these days. I take it that a full program of commencement will be published in the HERALD. Watch for this, choose your time, and go.

The College Assessment for each charge should be collected and sent in soon. It is now due.

Children's Day

May or June is the most appropriate time to hold the Children's Day serices. This year these services are planned with a view of raising a memorial offering in honor of Rev. Fred C. Klein, D. D., who, for nearly 19 years, was the zealous and consecrated secretary of our Board of Foreign Missions. We can thus do honor to the memory of this great man, and at the same time help to advance the cause of missions which was so dear to his heart. Surely every Sunday school and church will plan to hold Children's Day services.

We are directed to order supplies for Children's Day from Mrs. F. C. Klein, Berwyn, Md. Send in your orders early.

Rev. S. W. Rosenberger, D. D., is the new secretary of this Board, and he will keep us posted about the work.

Summer Conferences

Of course pastors are looking forward to the Pastors' Summer Conference as a time of splendid fellowship that none of us can afford to miss.

And we trust that many of our young people and workers are already planning to be in the Young People's Summer Conference. The important thing now is to register. Do it now. We are directed to send our names and 50 cents each to Rev. N. M. Harrison, Enfield, N. C., R. F. D. Let us cooperate in this and quickly help Brother Harrison to roll up the largest possible list. We thus show our interest and we help to put on a good program. Remember the dates—July 18 to 25. Plan to be there for every session.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

Cheerfulness is a valuable asset in business and religion. The man with a smile will defeat and control his enemies; an unhappy or vexed nature loses with friend or foe. In the hallway of a noted hospital hangs a notice which reads, "Never utter a discouraging word in this hospital! You should come here for the purpose of helping. Keep your hindering, sad looks for other places, and if you cannot smile don't go in." No doubt the statistics of recovery there are high, and the motto is at least illuminating. The world needs sunshine. Nothing impresses the traveler in the Far East more than the wrinkles and colorless faces of heathendom.

Joy seems frequently to be an unknown quantity, an undiscovered virtue. Christianity rolls up the curtain of universal sadness and depression with the text, "The joy of the Lord is your strength." The angels sang to the Bethlehem shepherds, and began their story to the world with "Behold we bring you good tidings of great joy." Joy is the second "fruit of the Spirit." First comes love, then joy.

An unhappy Christian is a stigma on the very word itself.

Modern science and practice have asserted that sunshine kills more disease germs than all other remedies combined. Radium itself has been described as "Sunshine Condenser." The coal of the earth, the geologist asserts, is stored up sunshine.

Far more muscular effort goes with a frown or wrinkle than with a smile. The corners of the mouth turned up show a happy face, turned down an ugly one. The laughter and smile of a little child will dispel grief from the sorrowing, and wipe the eyes of those who weep.

The "abundant life" Jesus came to bring is introduced by the "fullness of joy." A rose or flower pot in the window of an invalid is worth more than terraced gardens on the estate of a grouch.

Sir William Osler, the great medical authority, once said to a group of physicians, "Learn to consume your own smoke. The air is darkened by the murmuring and whimpering of men and women over non-essentials, over trivial vexations and discomforts that are inevitable incidents in the hurly burly and strain of every-day life. Things cannot always go your way.

"Learn to accept in silence life's aggravations, cultivate the habit of taciturnity, do not talk about your troubles, consume your own smoke with an extra draught of hard work, so that those about you may not be annoyed with the dust and soot of your complaining. We are here not to get all we can out of life ourselves, but to try to make the lives of others happier."

Robert Louis Stevenson was an invalid most of his life, but he is known as an apostle of sunshine. What home will not be joy-filled where the philosophy of his "Little Tin Soldier" is followed,

> "While here at home, in shining day
> We around the sunny garden play,
> Each little Indian sleepy-head
> Is being kissed and put to bed."

A joyous childhood is the very best heritage to give a child. Home and happiness should mean the same thing to a growing child.

Humor in literature has often erased bitterness and illustrated good will. That is why the cartoonist is frequently paid a higher salary than the editor. Lincoln is loved today for his kindness and wit as much as honored for his insight and rugged character.

The frosts and snows of winter melt into saturating moisture and nourishment of spring flowers and autumn harvests when Old Sol begins to show his strength.

The smile is a reaction of sunshine evidenced in human faces, and concentrated in loving character.

The Savior of men drove away the false ambitions of envious followers by introducing smiling children into their midst and saying "Except ye become like unto a little child ye shall not know my kingdom."

As the spring begins to smile upon us may we all take heed and value the worthiness of good cheer.—Advance.

THE HEART

How careful we ought to be of our heart! Some people spend a great deal of time in cultivating their head, attending to their business, looking after their health, and minding their store, but neglect to nurture their heart. What a blunder! The heart is the core of a person's being. In it cluster our thoughts, plans, purposes, desires, aspirations. It is the heart that determines our disposition and makes life radiant, happy, and useful, or dull, gloomy, and burdensome. It is the heart that brings success or invites failure. It is the heart that makes marriage a lovely thing or an ugly thing. It is the heart that makes a home or mars it. It is the heart that determines our destiny here and hereafter. We must take time and thought in training and graduating the heart, "for out of it are the issues of life." The result is worth more than all the care we can bestow upon it.—Northern Christian Advocate.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

The Latest Word From China

Of course, we are all interested alike in all three of our Mission fields. But an intense interest and concern centers in our China work at this particular time because of the war conditions prevailing there. Anxious as we are to get the very last word possible in the hope that it might be a word indicating the end, or at least its approach, of this terrible internal strife and that our own missionaries, as well as all others, are safe and that the Kingdom work is still going on.

The war clouds are still overhanging this great nation with its teeming millions. And these teeming millions are still contending and struggling for their rights, their privileges, their freedom. This, like most freedoms, must be won through suffering and bloodshed. In the end right will overcome and prevail.

Many have been the missionaries who have been forced to leave their posts of duty, reluctantly, for the safety of their lives and under the order of their respective National Consuls. Until about one month ago our own work was not interfered with as much as many other mission stations and our own missionaries were able to "carry on." In the first quarter's report for 1927, just received, Rev. Mr. Soderbom says: "We are glad to be able to report that, with the exception of some banditry, we have had a few months of comparatively quiet conditions in our district, and we have been able to hold our annual conference from March 6 to 12." But in a letter dated April 29, Dr. J. C. Williams writes: "A letter just received from Horace states that he and Mrs. Soderbom left Kalgan on April 6 and arrived at Tientsin at noon, April 7. Rev. Mr. Soderbom remained at Kalgan. Horace was at the station at Kalgan ready to go when a special letter came from the American Consul directing him to leave at once. He thought they might have to go to Japan." So the war clouds have become heavier and more dense around our work at Kalgan. Let us pray daily that all may go well.

The Growth of the China Work

In the face of the war conditions the work in China has been going forward commendably, as shown by the reports. I have mentioned the convening of the annual conference from March 6 to 12. This is the first session of the conference held in two years, owing to the war conditions. With the exception of a few who were unable to attend, all the helpers were present.

The conference opened on Sunday morning with a service in Tung Kuan Chapel. At the close of this first service ten people were baptized, six of whom were from the girls' school. Encouraging reports were received from all of the out-stations and the report states that, "because of the danger through which the workers were passing, in consequence of which the work suffered some, yet at present writing all seem to have gotten in tune with their work and are now looking hopefully forward. Most of the work that is done in the different departments, in normal times, has gradually all been resumed." Of course, this has all been reversed since the first of April.

The statistics given at the conference since the 1925 conference shows 237 baptisms—178 men and 59 women. This added to the 1925 conference statistics gives a total of 1,827 baptized adults. (Children are not included in the above figures). This, it seems to me, under present conditions is very gratifying.

The week of prayer was observed the first week in January, following the program of the Evangelical Alliance. Daily services were held in Kalgan. One service was a union service held in conjunction with all the other missions in Kalgan. Quite American.

Medical Work

The report of the medical work is also very gratifying. This is now carried on by Dr. Tsui Shih Feng and his three helpers, Dr. Fleagle being on her furlough. During the past year Kalgan dispensary has given 11,143 treatments. Of these 1,402 were for men and 150 for women; 450 visits have been made to homes, and 22 operations were performed under anæsthetics. So the work goes forward. More anon.

S. W. Rosenberger.

EASTER REPORTS FROM THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

The reports that have come to my office, and those noted in the news columns of the Methodist Protestant Herald, are very encouraging. They indicate that the Easter celebration was more generally observed in the North Carolina Conference than in previous years. There has been at least a gradual increase in the number of churches participating each year. There is, however, still room for improvement.

The Annual Conference Minutes show 89 charges and 231 churches. We sent Easter supplies to 103 churches of the Conference. I presume that a few churches that did not order supplies from our office held an Easter service, with reception of members and took an Easter offering for Home Missions. From this we can see that a large number of the churches did not co-operate in our Easter program. This is to be regretted, not only for the loss sustained by the General Conference Interests, but in that those local churches lost the blessing and inspiration which come in having a part in such a great work.

We wish to express the gratitude of our Board to Dr. Dixon, President of the Conference, the pastors and the church people, for the splendid aid given in carrying forward the Easter program of the general church. We appreciate also the courtesies of the publisher of the Herald in kindly offering space in their paper to present the work.

It is necessary that we have a report from every church of the number of members received, and the amount of the offering. Return postals were sent to all pastors, with the request that they give the information as quickly as possible. To date only 26 churches from North Carolina have made a report. If you have misplaced the card sent, please send to this office another stating the name of the Annual Conference, local church, and pastor, with the number of members received on Easter Sunday and amount of the offering. Please send offering to your Annual Conference Treasurer marked Easter offering for Home Missions.

OUR STORY PAGE

UNCLE BOB

Everyone knew the Marsden twins, and everybody loved them. They certainly were a pair of "limbs," as Martha, their nurse called them, but they soon won forgiveness for their pranks, with their winning ways.

However they had to be on their very best behavior now, for they were staying at Uncle Bob's house, while Mother and Dad were away. Mother had been ill with a touch of the "flu," and the doctors had ordered her to Florida for a time, and they had been sent to stay with Dad's brother, who was a college professor, during their parents' absence.

Uncle Bob was "an old bachelor," to quote Martha again, and all his spare time was spent shut up in his library among his books, and the children were left entirely to Martha. They very seldom saw him, and their general idea of him was a very thin, tall man, with great big round glasses on, over which he looked at them, as he went through the same performance each time. "Are you both well? That's right. Now run away to your nurse, I'm very busy."

Claire used to imitate him sometimes, which, of course, was very naughty of her, but when Martha scolded her for it she would say, "We must have some fun, Marthy, I can't be good all the time, it hurts."

They were both in the garden, waiting for Martha to fetch them for their usual walk.

"No letter from Mother again today," said Daisy. "I did hope she would write and say when she was coming home. It's our birthday next week too."

"Yes, I know," said Claire. "Of course, it will be a perfectly horrid birthday without Mother and Dad."

"It won't be any birthday at all," said Daisy, dolefully. "Uncle Bob doesn't even know that we're going to have one."

And if he did, it wouldn't be any good. He doesn't understand girls, perhaps because he never was a girl."

"Neither was Dad," answered Daisy, "Mother says she always knows what girls want, and Dad seems to also, but Uncle Bob!!!!"

"I wonder if he knows when Mother is coming. Let's ask him."

"Oh, I wouldn't dare," cried Daisy. "I always want to run away when I see him. I'm sure he doesn't like us, and will be glad to get rid of us as soon as he can."

A loud cough started them, and looking up, there stood Uncle Bob, glasses and all, gazing at them in a funny way.

They stared at him in horror, eyes and mouths wide open. He must have heard every word they had said. Daisy started to run, but Claire held her hand tightly.

"So Uncle Bob was never a girl, eh! That is certainly so."

It seemed to be a different Uncle Bob somehow, with his face all wrinkled up in a smile.

"Oh Uncle Bob, did you hear us?" gasped Claire, "I'm sorry."

"That's all right, little girl. Perhaps I have been too much of an old bookworm. But we'll change all that."

"We're both very sorry," said Daisy, "but of course we didn't know you were there."

"Of course you didn't, I just came out to tell you I'm going away for a few days, when I return you'll see, and I'll be back in time for the birthday too. Bye-bye," and off he went.

They stared at each other in astonishment, and both started to tell Martha about it at once, for she had just arrived to fetch them.

They heard nothing of Uncle Bob, but the day before the birthdays Martha told them he was returning late that night.

It was a beautiful morning, as Daisy peeped out of the window, and the branches of the old elm tree all glittered with frost seemed to nod at her in a friendly way.

"Hurry and get up, Claire," she called, "it's our birthday."

When they ran in to breakfast they stopped in surprise.

Their plates were piled up with packages, two extra chairs were at the sides of theirs, on each of which was seated a lovely big doll with blue eyes, and long golden curls. At the very top of the pile of bundles was a pink envelope. Quickly opening it they read as follows:

"PLEASE COME TO YOUR OWN PARTY, THIS AFTERNOON AT 3 O'CLOCK."

"What does it mean?" cried Daisy.

"A happy birthday, girlies," said Uncle Bob, entering the room. "I hope you intend accepting your own invitation."

They certainly did.

And it was a lovely party with ice cream, cake and all the rest of it, and what do you suppose?

Just as they sat down to the table, in walked Mother and Dad to surprise them. So, as Daisy said, "Instead of being the horridest, it was the very happiest birthday they had ever had."

"We do love you Uncle Bob," they both cried, hugging him.

"And I love you too, and you can't go home till you promise me that you will come and stay with me very soon again."

"We promise," they both cried together.—Selected.

THE NO-CANDY CLUB

"Don't eat pep-mint drops right in front of me Dora, please!" begged Kathie Dunlop comically; "it's perfectly maddening."

"As if you didn't have all the peppermints you wanted!" said Dora, staring. Kathie's father always gave her plenty of pocket-money, and all the girls knew Kathie's sweet tooth.

"No, I can't" said Kathie, shaking her head. "No matter why. No, I won't let you give me any. That would be mean, when the other girls are doing without like soldiers. But I'll be glad when the 'No-candy week' is over—and it's the truth I'm telling you."

"What is it?" asked Dora, now thoroughly curious. "A 'No-candy Week' and the other girls are doing without! What does it all mean?"

"Oh, nothing," said Kathie, a little shamefacedly, for she didn't mean to tell of her good deeds. "Only we went to visit those poor little hospital children the other day, and I felt so bad for them, and I said, 'Girls let's give one of them a Country Week'—just our class. I thought it would be lovely to do, you see, and never thought how all of the girls haven't quite so much money to spend as papa gives me, being the only one. And then I had a thought. You know what piles I spend on candy every week. I told them I believed we could save up enough by going without candy for a week, and every girl spends some, you know. So we agreed to, and 'tisn't any fun! But it will be fun when we go and see that dear little girl off for a whole week of nice times. We've picked out the girl already, and we are each of us making something pretty for her to take for a keepsake. We are so happy in feeling we are helping some one else."

"'A No-Candy Week' is lovely!" said Dora. "I'm going to tell my class about it."—Selected.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Oak Grove.—On April 30th our second quarterly conference met at Kistlers church. At eleven o'clock Pastor Morris preached a fine sermon. In the afternoon the quarterly meeting was held as usual. Brothers Charlie Grantt of Oak Grove church and Seth Ivester of Kistlers were nominated for delegate.

We are glad to learn that one of our young men of Kistlers church has been called into the ministry, Brother Seth Ivester. We hope for him success in this great work.

We are now planning a Children's Day service which we hope to give before long, with the cooperation of the children and parents.

Our Sunday school is improving and we hope to accomplish more this summer than ever before.

Our Society is doing splendid work in every respect. REPORTER.

Fountain Place.—Sunday was a good day at Fountain Place. Had a good attendance at Sunday school.

At the eleven o'clock service, Brother Loy made a short but helpful talk, after which the Lord's Supper was observed, in a spirit of prayer and quiet. The quietness of the service was very impressive, and a goodly number partook of the elements.

Following the communion service, the doors of the Church were opened, and ten were received into membership, as follows: Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Hornaday, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Glenn, Howard Glenn, and Mrs. H. E. Gibbs, received by letter, and four little girls, Sybil Glenn, Nellie Lee Amick, Joy Fogleman, and Vivian Paris, received by confession of faith and baptism. This makes our membership 102. (Brother Dixon, we already have our 10 per cent increase in membership, and hope to have another 10 per cent before the year is past.)

A few interesting facts brought out from the United States Census of Religious Bodies report, which was made out this week, as of October 30th, the end of our 1926 Conference year. Male members, 38; female, 52; total, 90. Under 13 years of age, 11, over 13 years of age, 79. As this report now reads: Male members, 42; female, 60; under 13, 15; over 13, 60; total 102. A Summer Vacation Bible School was held last summer, and about 85 children reached. I hope that every church in our conference will file this report with the Bureau of Census, that our church may show its true standing.

Sunday being Mother's Day, a special program in the Sunday school will be held. Our revival meeting will be held next month, after our pastor gets moved into our midst. The date and help will be announced later.

H. W. WADE.

P. S. We wish to take this method of thanking those who contributed to our church, in response to our recent appeal. More than $100.00 being received, as a result of the letter sent out. May He bless you for it.

Fair Grove, Why Not Circuit.—Last Sunday, 1st, was the annual Memorial Day at this church. Pastor Garner preached one of the best memorial sermons to my mind that have been at this church. Subject: What is My Country and Where Am I Going.

We were very glad to have several from High Point, Bisco and Star worship with us.

As we failed to hold an Easter service an offering for Home Missions was taken.

The two Missionary Societies met with Mrs. M. A. Cagle last week and elected the following officers: Home—President, Mrs. H. D. Smith; secretary, Mrs. M. C. Auman; treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Auman. Foreign—President, Mrs. C. E. Stuart; secretary, Mrs. J. E. King; treasurer, Mrs. D. J. Johnson.

As the members of the society live so far apart it was decided to have a Seagrove Circle and a Why Not Circle, have the monthly meeting separate but have a meeting together each quarter. The society has sent its mite to add to the Auman Baby Fund.

The pastor, Rev. D. I. Garner, and Mesdames M. C. Auman and L. A. King attended the Sunday School Convention in Burlington.

The Bible Study Class conducted by the pastor was well atended Sunday night. About 10 new ones in attendance.

MRS. C. E. STUART.

Burlington.—The revival, which has been in progress at the First Church during the past week, will continue through Wednesday night of this wek. Rev. R. A. Hunter, who is doing the preaching, and Mr. Nelson Miles, our evangelistic singer, were each absent from the service yesterday morning. Mr. Hunter had to return to Henderson to hold his morning service there, and Mr. Miles was kept away on the account of the illness of his father. Both were back for the service last night, and will continue with the meeting to the close.

The attendance in the services yesterday was large, and the interest in the meeting is growing. Mr. Hunter's sermons are forceful and pleasing, and the singing is inspiring. The sermon last night was followed by expressions of reconsecration and requests for prayer. Announcements for the meetings this week are as follows: To night (Monday night) is membership night. Every member of the church is urged to be present and to bring a friend. Tuesday night is family night; Wednesday night, Sunday school night. And in addition to these special delegations, each night is everybody's night. We are hoping, working, and praying for good results this week.

At the service yesterday morning Brother and Sister P. R. Barnhardt were received into the church. They come to us from the Associate Reformed Presbyterian church of Concord. Mrs. Barnhardt is a sister of Brother Hethcock, our pastor at Creswell. We are glad to welcome these additions to our church here. S. W. TAYLOR.

Concord, Saxapahaw.—Brother Isley filled his appointment first Sunday, bringing a good message which was inspiring and was much enjoyed. At the close the Lord's Supper was served. We returned to our homes feeling it was good to have been there.

C. E. Society next Sunday evening. And we enjoyed the talks of Brother C. O. Furgeson and the pastor, on Choosing a Vocation.

We are finishing our planting which started in February. We have wonderful success. Already we are rewarded with blooms.

Our Sunday school is improving in attendance and interest. We are planning children's day service and the Sunday School Convention meets here this Summer.

Rev. A. G. Dixon preached the commencement sermon at Eli Whitney High School yesterday, taking for his text three words, "Learn of Me." He gave not only the graduating class but every one present some good advice and lots of food for thought.

Death entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Guthrie and claimed their darling baby, little Hubert Gray, Thursday, May 5th.

Mrs. Woody, Mrs. Guthrie's mother, continues quite ill.

Mrs. T. H. Moore is improving, glad to say.

REPORTER.

South Lexington.—The Sunday school last Sunday took an upward jump in attendance, there being 214 present. The day was observed as "Mothers' Day."

Pastor Ridge preached a special sermon on mother's influence at the morning service. One new member, Brother Ed Clifton, was received at this service. Brother Clifton is one of the converts at the revival meeting held last month. A large congregation was present at this service.

A Mothers' Day pageant, entitled, "The Ideal Home," was rendered last Sunday night, and the church was completely filled for the program. Every available seat in the church and the men's class room was used, and chairs were placed in the isle of the auditorium to accommodate the large congregation. The pageant was very effectively rendered. Only one week of practice by those in the pageant was spent in the preparation of it. Pastor Ridge directed the preparation and presentation of the pageant.

C. B. WAY, Reporter.

Jerusalem.—We wish to report briefly of our service last Sunday morning. The Sunday school met before the church service. The pastor was accompanied by Brother Lee Myers, of Lexington, who is a musician. Mr. Myers assisted in the music for the Sunday school and preaching service. He rendered a solo on his musical instrument, the clarinet, and a duet was sung by Mr. Myers and the pastor during the preaching service. The attendance was larger than usual, and we were glad to have had some visitors in the service. Our next appointment is next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. C. B. WAY, Reporter.

Chase City.—Rev. C. W. Saunders on Sunday, May 1st, delivered a wonderful sermon. He was accompanied by Rev. G. A. Laughlin who preached two wonderful sermons which we all enjoyed very much. We hope to have him with us again in the near future. Our Sunday school is getting along nicely, and we are planning for a children's day program the first Sunday in July by the help of our pastor, C. W. Saunders,

ESSIE AND JENNIE GURLEY.

Calvary.—The pastor of Calvary church takes this means of saying to the friends and absent members of the church that the work is going well. Our recent evangelistic meeting has greatly helped and encouraged our people in addition to adding a number of new ones to our membership. Members have been received each Sunday since the meeting. Two were received last Sunady, making a total of twenty-five since the meeting began.

The mid-week prayer services have been well attended recently. These meetings are being conducted by the laymen in the absence of the pastor who is assisting in some evangelistic services. The pastor regrets to be away from the work, especially immediately following the revival meeting, and yet the church ought to be better able to get along without the pastor immediately following the revival than at other times. However, while I am missing the mid-week services, I am not missing any eleven o'clock services and very few evening services. Brother W. F. Kennett very kindly and acceptably filled my appointment the fourth Sunday night in April, while the evening appointment was taken up last Sunday with the pageant, "The Spirit of American Womenhood," given by the Christian Endeavor societies and others. These all have our thanks.

The pastor has enjoyed being with Brothers Curry and Bethea in evangelistic services at Maple Springs and Lexington. He will be in another meeting beginning May 16th at Siler City. After that he has no promise out to assist in meeting until August, and of course this is not asking for an invitation, as I want to give more attention to my own pastorate after the Siler City meeting.

Perhaps the question some times arises as to why a pastor will leave his work to assist in meetings when there is more work in his own pastorate than he can do. That is a natural question, but one easy to answer. Ever since I can remember the pastors have done the evangelistic work of our conference. That is one answer to the question. Then another reason for a pastor assisting in revival services is that it is a change from the deadening routine of the pastorate, and it gives new inspiration that assists him in doing better work when he returns to his own pastorate. While I am away during the week days I try to keep in close touch with the work and to look after the sick and those who need a pastor's attention most when I am at home over week-ends and the days between meetings.

The work has been encouraging ever since it was started in South Greensboro, and I think it was never more so than now. All departments of the work are making satisfactory progress, though we are aware that more might possibly be done.

We are sorry that Mrs. E. F. Caudle and Mrs. Otis Campbell are still kept from the services because of ill health. Mrs. J. H. Coble has also been kept from a number of services recently because of illness. We are glad to know that she is very much improved. We trust that all of these may soon be back in the services.

L. W. GERRINGER, Pastor.

Asheboro.—It is not my purpose to enumerate all the things that are taking place here; however, there are some things that are worthy of being mentioned. On Sunday morning, May 1, Rev. A. G. Dixon, D. D., made his official visit to our church. Although there were several families out of town that day, still the congregation was reasonably good and Dr. Dixon preached a splendid sermon from the text, And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me. We were indeed glad to have this official visit from our President.

Yesterday we observed Mothers' Day at the morning hour and had a reasonably good-sized congregation present. We are not going by leaps and bounds, neither are we turning the world upside down, but we are doing the best we can. The Sunday school attendance is very regular, it seldom falling below 180, neither does it often go above 195. Yesterday it was 190.

Our second quarterly conference has been held. Finances were found to be far behind but it seems there is no way of keeping up. Mr. W. L. Ward and Mr. G. P. Pritchard are nominees for delegate to Annual Conference.

On the first Sunday in June all the churches in Asheboro will begin revival meetings. As has already been stated, Dr. T. M. Johnson will do the preaching in our church. There will be a union service in the M. E. church South at 8:30 each morning and the visiting preachers will take turns in doing the preaching. We are trying to make preparation for the meeting.

Ordinarily I do not report donations through the church paper, however, the Philathea class decided that the pastor ought to carry a spare tire on his Ford, so they bought one. Then the other day a man walked up to the writer on the street and informed him that one of his members had authorized the aforesaid man to measure the preacher for a new suit of clothes, the name of the donor not being given even to the preacher. We appreciate all this greatly.

Miss Edith McDowell, the fifteen years old daughter of Mr. J. E. McDowell, and granddaughter of Rev. W. F. McDowell, is in Memorial Hospital here with a badly broken limb, she having been struck by an automobile while standing in front of a car which had been wrecked near her home. At the same time and place Nannie Hopkins received less serious wounds by the same car.

Mrs. W. F. Redding is in the High Point Hospital for rest and treatment. We trust all of these will soon be well.

J. E. Pritchard.

Pleasant Grove.—Our second quarterly conference was held Friday night before first Sunday in May. All reports were written and showed some improvement. Superintendent Teague reported again of 20 in the Sunday school during the quarter. B. E. Kennedy and F. H. Clark are the nominees for delegate to annual conference.

The Church Brotherhood held its last meeting in the home of Brother George L. Hilton. It was a rainy night yet there was a large attendance and good interest shown in the business of the church. The Ladies' Aid has nearly money enough to finish the Sunday school rooms upstairs. The seven rooms on the first floor do not give all the room needed to carry out fully the plans of our class room work.

Last Sunday at the 11 o'clock hour we observed Mother's Day. A large crowd and many beautiful flowers made the service an impressive one. After enjoying another good picnic dinner on the grounds, the congregation gathered in the cemetery and after a few songs and prayer, returned to the church where the program of the memorial association was concluded. In the church, Hon. T. W. Albertson, of High Point, and a Mr. Fitzgerald made short addresses which were enjoyed by all present. Brother Z. B. Morris, president of the association, spoke very encouragingly of the work that had already been planned to beautify the cemetery. The deed to our church property here was made in April 1828, and the first burial was in 1847.

Our special meeting will be held second Sunday in July. G. L. REYNOLDS.

Matthews Chapel, Greenville Circuit.—Our Christian Endeavor Society meets every Sunday night at 8 o'clock.

Last night we had an interesting program led by Miss Pearl Wright. Subject for discussion was, "Elements in Ideal Home Life," which was very interesting.

Our pastor, Rev. H. L. Powell, was with us and gave us a brief talk on the subject.

We were fortunate in having with us a bunch of young people from the Christian church at Gasburg and the occasion being "Mothers' Day" these people favored us with a trio, "Toll the Bells, Dear Mother's Sleeping," which was greatly enjoyed.

We organized our C. E. Society, both Junior and Senior, one year ago next Sunday. The interest is still holding good and we have wonderful attendance every Sunday night. We have about 30 members in our Junior Society and near 50 in our Senior, and we are proud to say we have some members in our society from other churches on this charge and also from the Baptist church.

And through the work of our society we have furnished our church with a gasoline lamp and have also paid for our new organ, and made up a nice purse for Mr. Eddie Balmnr who is blind. He gives us some good talks sometimes.

And Mr. Ben Pearson, a member of our church, has been an invalid for quite awhile; we have also presented him with a purse of $10.00.

We are planning now to curtain off our Sunday school and get a communion set. Both of these will add much to our Sunday school and church.

Best wishes to Herald and its readers.

LOTTIE EDWARDS.

Harmony, Yarborough Charge.—A special Mother's Day service was held at our church Sunday. Brother Cowan was with us and preached quite an interesting sermon on the subject, "Mother," which apparently was enjoyed by all.

We also had special music in which the choir was assisted by visitors from Ware Shoals whose help was greatly appreciated. These beautiful old songs, a tribute to mother, seemed especially sweet to us.

The Christian Endeavor met at the usual hour with about 30 present and Miss Grace Killingsworth as leader.

We are planning an all-day rally service and singing the fifth Sunday. We hope to have a lot of good singers and dinner on the ground.

One of our boys, James B. Hughes, and Miss Margaret Smith of Ware Shoals, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Smith, were married Sunday afternoon. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. G. Cowan at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Hughes.

Liberty-Siler City.—Regardless of the much sickness in our Liberty community we had one of the most profitable days on record in our Liberty church.

Sunday school: 140 present. The superintendent was there but he had nothing to do. Mr. Reitzell has learned to let others work for him. Three of his Junior classes furnished special music, recitations, sentence prayers etc. for the opening and closing of the Sunday school. This is what one would term an "Automatic Sunday school.

Church services: The morning service was spent in paying honor to the name of Mother. The Senior C. E. society furnished flowers for each one to wear. The church was decorated with lovely flowers by various members. Rain interfered with the evening service, but a goodly number were present. "Giving the World What it Needs" was the theme for the evening. The occasion was special since most of the graduates of the Liberty High School were present.

Every organization submitted written reports except one. The interior of the Siler City church has been beautified by the Ladies' Aid. Mr. J. Floyd Deaton and H. Boyd Reitzell were elected nominees for the Annual Conference. College, A. C. B. and pastor's salary paid in full with $98.08 paid on G. C. B.

ABIGAIL COGGIN, Reporter.

Stallings, Mecklenburg Charge.—The monthly business meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was held May 4th with Mrs. S. A. Noles. The attendance was fairly good but we'd like to see it one hundred per cent. The Society is trying to do all it can toward lifting the church debt, so plans for making money were discussed. Most of these will be considered later, but for immediate action it fell back upon the old reliable ice-cream supper, which will be given Saturday night, May 14, on the grounds back of Smith Bros. store, near the parsonage.

The meeting closed with a delightful repast in the dining room.

Our next business meeting will be held with Mrs. P. D. Drye June 9. Our next devotional meeting will be held at the church immediately after Sunday school the third Sunday in June.

Our pastor, Rev. W. T. Totten, has been faithfully filling his appointments at this place. We are becoming more and more devoted to him and his good companion.

Hope, Chatham Charge.—Sunday was a good day. Mother's Day was appropriately observed at the morning service. Our pastor, Brother Isley, was accompanied by Mr. Turner of Burlington who led the service. His theme was "Mother," and he brought a touching and heart-felt message. A feature of the service was the singing of old hymns which our mothers used to sing and still love to sing.

The afternoon service was directed to the young people. The subject was the "Challenge of the New Day." It was indeed a challenge to each of us to do our best to meet the responsibilities of the day.

Mr. Turner rendered a special selection which was much enjoyed by all.

High Point.—Mothers' Day was fittingly observed by the First church last Sunday, when every member who attended Sunday school and church services was presented with a flower to wear in honor of their mothers, either in the flesh or gone to the spirit world. The impressiveness of this sacred day was emphasized by an appropriate sermon, which was delivered by Prof. T. C. Johnson, of the Dep't. of Philosophy and Journalism of High Point College in the absence of Rev. P. E. Lindley, who went to Kernersville to deliver the Commencement sermon for the High School. Rev. Mr. Johnson is a minister of the Baptist church, who has become very popular with High Point people as a speaker as well as a teacher. His splendid sermon was greatly enjoyed by the congregation, and is much appreciated. Many thanks are hereby extended him for his kindness in filling the pulpit. Clarence Schultheiss' beautiful solo, "Mother My Dear" was very touching and unusually well rendered. At the same hour the Junior church enjoyed a Mother's Day talk by Rev. E. L. Ballard. At 8 o'clock in the evening Mr. Ballard conducted another service in memory of our precious mothers.

An enjoyable meeting was held by the Ladies' Aid Society Monday afternoon at the beautiful country home of Mrs. C. C. Robbins, south of the city. The Treasurer, Mrs. C. L. Gray, announced that the sum of $179 was realized from the sale of little aprons sent out, and that the parsonage furniture is paid for. After the transaction of routine business and discussion of plans for making money, the hostesses served delightful refreshments and adjourned to meet in June with Mrs. E. L. Auman and her group.

We are called on to chronicle another sad death, that of Mr. William H. Welch, which occurred suddenly on Thursady, May 5th, of some heart affection. At the same time the A. M. Idol Philathea Class will hold a banquet at the church.

On Friday evening the members of the Junior Church will give a May carnival, at which candy, cake, ice cream, and other good things will be offered for sale. We are much pleased to note that Mrs. W. D. Burgess who has been quite ill for several weeks is improving, and is able to be up and around the house.

Hollister, Halifax Charge.—Yesterday was a red letter day with us. The attendance at all the services was splendid. At the 11 o'clock service the baccalaureate sermon of the Hollister High School was preached in our church by Rev. C. M. Billings of the Baptist church of Woodland, N. C. After the sermon the Junior Orders of Nashville, N. C., presented to the school a Bible and bag to be used in the school. We were glad to have them with us and we hope they will come again. They gave us some splendid talks concerning their work.

At the evening service yesterday a Mother's Day program was given. Our pastor gave us a wonderful message that was enjoyed by all.

Our Sunday school is doing good work. We are expecting to have several new members next Sunday.

The April meeting of our Home and Foreign Missionary societies met with Mrs. W. J. Gallaway. We had a good meeting. We had two new members. Our meeting for May will meet tomorrow afternoon with Miss Kathleen Shearin. We hope to have all the members present. KATHLEEN SHEARIN.

Haw River Circuit.—Our second quarterly conference was held at Mizpah church Saturday before the first Sunday in May. All churches were represented and the spirit of the conference was fine. The financial report was much better than last year; in fact, it was the best for the four years. Midway takes the lead, having overpaid salary to date besides having made an advanced showing on General interest. Fair Grove comes next, having paid salary to date, then comes Mizpah close up. Brown Summit comes next followed by Friendship. Brothers George Diamond and Rupert Butler are the nominees for delegate to conference. Midway is having the best Sunday school for years. Brother Rupert, backed up by the good people is putting life and pep in the work. Fair Grove Sunday school under the efficient leadership of young Brother Bevil is increasing in number and interest. The people are very kind to us while we are being shut in, either looking after pulpit supply or releasing from appointments.

PASTOR.

Piney Grove.—We are still trying to do the best we can. We have a very good Sunday school, are planning to hold memorial and children's day service the fourth Sunday in this month. All day service. Everybody invited to come, especially those that have relatives buried there.

We all like our new pastor just fine. We can have a good year if we will all try to do our best. Our special meeting will begin the fourth Sunday in August. We will have preaching twice a month from now on; the second Sunday at two o'clock p.m., and the fourth Sunday at eleven o'clock a.m. Pray for us that we may have a glorious year.

A MEMBER.

Saxapahaw Charge.—The centennial celebration at Salem church was a success from beginning to end. All the speakers on the program were present except one, Rev. Lawrence Little, who was in a hospital for an operation. It was good to be there and to listen to the splendid addresses, some historical, some inspirational. The Bell Thompson Mission Band rendered a splendid program on Friday evening, and on Saturday evening at eight o'clock the Foreign Missionary society gave a pleasing pageant. Besides those on the program, we were glad to have Rev. and Mrs. B. M. Williams present part of the time. People were there from all the nearby towns and cities. A complete history of this old historic church will appear soon.

H. L. ISLEY.

Anderson.—The past two Sundays have been observed as Mothers' Day and Homecoming on our work. The first Sunday was the regular appointment at Fairview and it was Mothers' Day and Homecoming. It was the privilege of the pastor to welcome both old and new friends to our service. A large crowd that over-filled the church was present and enjoyed the service. Several recitations in keeping with the occasion were rendered by members of the Sunday school. We enjoyed a stirring address by Mr. P. N. Becton of Greenville at the regular hour for the preaching service. A great many spoke highly of the splendid message of Mr. Becton. It being an all-day service the ladies of the church prepared dinner and it was spread on the long table on the church ground. In the afternoon the pastor had the privilege of speaking to a large audience using the words of the Proverb, "Forsake not the law of thy Mother." Proverbs, 1:8. The people heard the word gladly and it was a joy to speak to the large congregation. Friends and former members of Fairview were seen from a great distance and it was a good day for us and the church.

Yesterday was Mothers' Day at Liberty Hill and a larger crowd than the writer has seen yet was present especially for the evening service. The Sunday school was presided over in the usual way by Brother B. A. McClimon. The preaching service was well attended. The pastor delivered a Mothers' Day sermon using as a text, Exodus, 20:12. "Honor thy Father and thy Mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." It was an inspiration to speak to the attentive and appreciative audience that was present for the morning service. Special music was rendered at the morning service by Misses Ruth and Annie Pearson and by Mrs. Harvey McClimon and Miss Sallie McClimon which added very much to the service. The evening service was given over to a pageant, "An Ideal Home." Preceding the pageant several recitations were given, and we enjoyed hearing Mrs. Harvey McClimon sing very beautifully, "Mother's Last Goodbye."

Following a quartette entitled "On Mother's Day," was rendered by Brother and Sister Nick Smith, Miss Annie Myrtle Smith, and the pastor.

It was then the privilege of the pastor to speak just before the pageant on the subject, "Qualities of an Ideal Home." It was again a privilege to speak to an attentive audience that filled the church to its capacity, it being the largest number that the writer has seen present since coming to the work. The pageant was a beautiful and touching scene picturing Home Life with the features that make an "Ideal Home," closing with a Pantomime, "My Mother's Bible."

The work is progressing nicely and the pastor is very much gratified with the increasing interest that is shown in the work. Two meetings are to be held and we are planning for a good delegation to the Summer Conference. May we see you there, Brother Pastor, with your young people for the entire session? Let us make it the best yet. We can. The desire of the officers is, I feel, this: Every pastor there for the entire session and a good number of young people attending the conference for young people from every charge and every church, attending every session. Will you disappoint them or help them?

M. IVEY CRUTCHFIELD.

Littleton Circuit.—We held our second quarterly conference April 18th, Easter Monday. Rev. R. C. Stubbin was with us and preached for us at 11 a.m. and held conference for us in the afternoon. It was a good day for us; everybody seemed to enjoy the day's program. Brother Stubbin's message to us was both interesting and helpful. Brothers Walter Carter and S. E. Rogers were put in nomination for delegate to annual conference.

J. B. O'BRIANT.

Pine Bluff.—Our Sunday school will observe Children's Day in the near future. Much interest is being manifested in our Sunday school, with good attendance each Sunday.

Brother Jacob Vuncannon, the oldest member of our church here, has been sick for several days. Brother Vuncannon is ripening for the grave, which will be our loss and Heaven's gain. He has been a faithful man and in his latter days he is found at church when he is able to go.

Brother J. W. Hulin, our pastor, has been so faithful with us this year. His gospel sermons have been greatly appreciated by all the people. Brother Hulin is no more a young man, but as he grows older he is able to do even more for God in the pulpit.

The meeting was presided over by first vice-president, Mrs. George Harrison. Roll called and minutes read by secretary, Miss Ruth Hill. As there was no business to discuss, the meeting adjourned to meet again in June.

—The pope of Rome has declared war against immoral books. Success to him. Literature is getting to be very rotten in spots. All lovers of decency, not to say morality, should join with the pope in his effort to purify our reading matter. Even our best magazines have let down the bars for matter that formerly would have been unhesitatingly rejected. The best way for the people to help in this crusade is to quit buying and reading the smutty magazines and books. A protest by private letter to publishers would also help.

—The overseas fliers are not succeeding well in their hazardous undertaking, not much better than Walter Welman did several years ago. Two American airmen were preparing to start across the Atlantic when their ship fell, killing them both. Now two Frenchmen are being sought; they tried to sail in airship from Paris to New York and have been lost. About the only remaining hope is that they have been picked up by a passing water vessel.

FACULTY MEMBERS IN DEMAND FOR ADDRESSES

The fact that more than thirteen high schools have invited members of the High Point College faculty to speak at their commencement exercises shows that the institution is recognized in all parts of the state.

Members of the faculty say that they deem it a privilege to be askede to appear in this role.

Dr. R. M. Andrews delivered the baccalaureate sermon at Weaverville. He will also give the commencement address at Welcome High School May 10, and at Churchland High School May 15.

Prof. P. E. Lindley gave the commencement address at Worthville April 22, and has five more engagements yet to be filled. On May 5 will address the graduating class of Farmer High School of Randolph County. On Sunday, May 8, he will preach the commencement sermon at Kernersville, stressing religious education to his audience. Zeb Vance High School, near Henderson, N. C., will be host to Professor Lindley on May 11, and the following day he will address the class at Sumner High School, near Greensboro. His last engagement will be at Haw River High School on June 1.

Professor T. C. Johnson, English and journalism instructor, will be heard at Reid Consolidated School, near Lexington, on May 4. His subject will be "Visions of Youth."

Professors P. S. Kennett and J. D. Hardy will share the honors at Union Grove. The former will deliver the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday, May 3, and the latter will address the graduating class the following day.—Hi-Po.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Gupton

On Tuesday afternoon, as the sun was sinking in the west, Mrs. A. D. Gupton was called to her home beyond. Before her marriage she was Miss Lula Faulkner. She had spent about six weeks of suffering with all done for her that loving hands could do. Had she lived until the tenth of May she would have been 47 years of age.

Mrs. Gupton professed faith in Christ when young but had never united with a church; nevertheless we must believe she lived a good life. She was a good wife and mother and was loved by those who knew her. She will be greatly missed in the community but most of all in the home where her chair will forever be vacant. She is survived by her husband, eight children, one brother and two sisters. May God's richest blessings be with them, that they may be led in the path of righteousness so that they will meet her on the other shore.

She was laid to rest under a beautiful mound of flowers on Thursday afternoon at Liberty Christian church at Epsom. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. John Mitchaner. A large crowd was present to show their last tribute of love and respect to her.

Wife, and mother, we loved you,
But Jesus loved you more;
Now you have gone to a home
Prepared for you on the other shore.
Safe in His arms you are resting,
Safe on His gentle breast,
We know you will welcome each of us
As we enter into the home of the blest.
Then together we will spend the countless ages
On that bright and shining shore;
Where tears and sorrow are unknown
And we meet to part no more.

Each of the family has our heartfelt sympathy for the loss of a friend so true as wife and mother. A FRIEND.

McPherson

Miss Hattie Savannah McPherson died May 2, 1927, age 34 years, 11 months and four days. She professed faith in Christ in early life and joined Rock Creek Methodist Protestant church and was true to the end. The funeral services was conducted by her pastor and her body laid to rest in Rock Creek cemetery.

J. A. BURGESS.

Guthrie

Hubert Grey Guthrie, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Guthrie, died at their home May 5, age eight months and five days. He had been ill for a week but no one, not even the doctor, thought him critcally ill until a few minutes before his departure.

He was such a healthy and lovable babe. Had no fear; but a smile for everyone.

We all will miss him, and how our hearts go out to the grief-stricken parents and brothers and sisters.

May God be very near to heal their broken hearts and cheer the lonely hours. And especially for his mother; taken from her arms they feel so empty. His little body was laid to rest Friday, May 6, in the cemetery at Concord. Service was conducted by the pastor, Brother H. L. Isley.

In the springtime mild and fair.
Saw a flower of wondrous beauty,
Growing in the garden there.

And He stooped and plucked the lily,
Took it with Him home above.
Planted in a fairer garden,
Where it blooms in realms of love.

LOSS

When the hand of justice points to us:
My child, you have justly lost,
The race was won by a braver heart,
By a hand that paid the cost,

I say to you then to lose is fun,
Oh, who could but help rejoice—
Rejoice at a victory of friend or foe,
And give him a cheering voice?

But it isn't so easy to lose my friends,
When our poor hearts cannot agree,
That the price was fully understood,
When our troubled hearts fail to see.

Just cannot see that in deed and truth,
The faith of friends hold true,
True to our trust, to our hopes and prayers,
True to all things that are true.

Oh Father in heaven, take first place away,
If you will in each race that is run,
But give to us faith, perfect faith of friends,
In our losses or victories run.

Faith that is true, unfailing, strong,
Shining through life's darkest night,
Leading us on to gladness and hope,
By its beautiful cheering light.

Speaking in Unknown Tongues

Among the miracles recorded in the New Testament is that of speaking unknown tongues. Such a miracle served two purposes: it gave evidence of supernatural power and it afforded a means of communicating the truth to a wider audience. On the day of Pentecost there was amazement that people who did not know the language of the apostles of Jesus could yet understand the speech of these men. There is some mystery as to how the result was produced. Was the same speaker understood by people of different tongues? Or did different speakers speak different languages, thus accommodating all the varieties of auditors? Both opinions are held. It seems more probable that the latter supposition is correct. Only Peter's speech is recorded, and he seemed to speak especially if not solely to the people of Judea and Jerusalem. The message fitted to them would not fit exactly those who came from a distance and who had no part in the persecution of Jesus seven weeks before. The power to speak in foreign languages seems to have continued in the church for some time and to have been abused in some instances. Paul refers to it and objects to the use of a foreign language when it conveys no thought. Paul's objection lies against those speakers of today who choose big and high-sounding and unfamiliar words and sometimes foreign phrases instead of the simple, plain language of the people. The object of speaking should not be to produce wonder and confusion but clearness of knowledge.

Heart Responds to Heart Across the Atlantic

In our issue of the HERALD for April 14 we published some poems written by Mr. Grenville Kleiser and Mrs. Elizabeth Kleiser, literary Americans now sojourning in France. In the same paper we published an appeal for the new church in Charlotte, N. C. We sent a copy of the paper to Mr. Kleiser. He read Brother Braswell's appeal and sent us a check for $50.00 for the use of Brother Braswell in his church work. Among all the contributions that Brother Braswell has received for the many church enterprises he has forwarded, we doubt whether he has ever received one that he appreciated more than he will appreciate this one coming across the ocean from a stranger. It will touch his heart and strengthen his faith not only in God but in men. We find peculiar pleasure in being permitted to forward this generous and spontaneous offering to Brother Braswell to help him on with the new church movement in Charlotte.

Taking Unwarranted Risks

Last Sunday we saw two automobiles lying interlocked by the roadside. The windshields of both were broken and each in breaking had done violence to a human face. The face of a little boy was terribly cut in several places and a young man in the other car suffered similarly but not so seriously. We arrived some time after the collision and found the case of the little boy absorbing attention. He was in the hands of a physician. If he recovers, he will be badly disfigured. How did the accident happen? One car was trying to pass a Ford when it unexpectedly met a car coming in the opposite direction. It had taken a risk. It had tried to pass the Ford without knowing that the way was clear. We see many drivers take similar risks. They sweep around corners without knowing whether the way is clear for their movement at such a speed. There may be a slow-moving wagon ahead of them and a swift car coming to meet them, producing a situation in which wreck is inevitable. There would be fewer accidents on the road if drivers would cease taking unwarranted risks. And in all departments of human activity the same principle applies. We must take some risks, but we should draw the line at unwarranted risks.

A Word in Season

Rev. W. F. Kennett recently attended church in Orange county. In the congregation was a man who came to him and said: "You scared me almost to death over thirty years ago. You came to me in the woods where I was at work and said to me: 'I want you to lead in prayer in the church service next Sunday.' I replied, 'O, I couldn't do it.' You said, 'Yes, you could, and I am going to call on you.' You went away leaving me greatly perturbed. When the time came you did call on me, and I did the best I could, and I have been leading in prayer ever since." Brother Kennett could not recall the occurrences, but was gladdened to know that he had spoken a few words that had such good results.

"Shortly before his nomination for the presidency, Woodrow Wilson, standing in my pulpit in Dallas, said: 'Gentlemen, the most glorious reality to me is the reality of Christ as the Divine Saviour.' I heard him say, 'The one book that never palls on me is this Divine Book.' And there is your devout mother! What will you do with the testimony of Gladstone, of Wilson, of your mother? You would accept such testimony on other matters. Accept it as reasonably as to the saving power of Jesus."—Dr. George W. Truett.

—Gladstone said it was his privilege to know sixty of the world's greatest minds in his generation and that fifty-four of them "were most faithful friends of Jesus, and I believe the other six, whom I do not know so well, have likewise accepted the Saviour."

THE AMERICANISM OF JOHN DAVEY

First of all, it might be worth while to relate the experience of my good old father. He was born in England at a time when there were no public schools, and he was 21 before he knew his A B C's. This was not unusual at that time, because only the children of the wealthy and the aristocracy had the benefits of education.

He started in as a full-grown young man to learn to read by the slow and painful process of self-education. He had only a little dictionary and a copy of the New Testament from which he picked out one word at a time. Finally he acquired a grammar, so that he might learn to put the words together properly. He showed me one time not long before he passed away the old faded copy of the New Testament from which he had learned to read. On it was a brown spot where a drop of milk had fallen, in the long ago, as he studied while he milked.

Then as a relatively young man he heard the call of America, this great land of freedom and opportunity, and, like millions of other sturdy sons of Europe, he came here to work out his destiny. He pursued his education, studying by night and working by day unti he acquired an education that would do credit to the average college graduate—I think sometimes a more profound education.

But the thing about him which impressed me most was the fact that he became one of the finest Americans that I have ever known. He learned every word of our Constitution—every word. He learned every word of every verse of "America" and the "Star-Spangled Banner," and until old age laid its heavy hand upon him he could sing those songs with a zeal and fervor that were good to see.

He became a full citizen at the first opportunity under our law, and he told me one time of that sacred day when he raised his right hand and foreswore allegiance to the British Crown and swore allegiance to the Constitution and the flag of America. His eyes filled with tears as he described to me that most sacred day of his life. And always, from the time I was a little fellow and long before I could comprehend its significance, I saw him every time he passed by Old Glory tip his hat in veneration.—Extract from speech of Hon. Martin L. Davey, of Ohio, in the House of Representatives.

DRAWING A CROSS

Dr. Robert E. Speer keeps his eyes and his ears open for material illustrative of the Gospel. One of his most appealing illustrations is this: There is a story of a company of men who had been gathered in the earliest days of our participation in the war. The whole group could not be sent over to the other side at once, and every man was eager to go; at last they decided that they would put a lot of paper in a hat, one for every man, and they would put crosses on as many papers as there were men who might be sent, and every man who drew a paper with a cross on it was to be allowed to go. When it was all over one lad who belonged to the group wrote home to his father, "Father, if I ever prayed in my life, I prayed today that I might draw a cross." He wanted the life that bore that symbol and mark and all that it opened up in the possibility of service and of sacrifice. Do we want to find our way into a life that can do in our time what Paul's life did in his, that can leave its deathless scar on the soul of humanity as Paul's life left his, his healing scar? Well, here is the beginning and the foundation of it all for us as for him. "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live."—Selected.

PSALM OF THE GOOD TEACHER

The Lord is my teacher: I shall not lose the way to wisdom.

He leadeth me in the lowly path of learning,
He prepareth a lesson for me every day;
He findeth the clear fountains of instruction,
Little by little he showeth me the beauty of the truth.

The world is a great book that he hath written,
He turneth the leaves for me slowly;
They are al inscribed with images and letters,
His face poureth light on the pictures and the words.

Then am I glad when I perceive his meaning,
He taketh me by the hand to the hilltop of vision;
In the valley also he walketh beside me,
And in the dark places he whispereth to my heart.

Yea, though my lesson be hard, it is not hopeless,
For the Lord is very patient with his slow scholar;
He will wait awhile for my weakness,
He will help me to read the truth through tears.

Surely thou wilt enlighten me daily by joy and by sorrow;
And lead me at last, O Lord, to the perfect knowledge of Thee. —Henry VanDyke.

THE LAYMAN

By Edgar A. Guest

Leave it to the ministers, and soon the church will die,
Leave it to the women-folk—the young will pass it by.
For the church is all that lifts us from the coarse and selfish mob,
And the church that is to prosper needs the layman on the job.

Now a layman has his business, and a layman has his joys,
But he also has the training of his little girls and boys;
And I wonder how he'd like it if there were no churches here,
And he had to raise his children in a Godless atmosphere?

It's the church's special function to uphold the finer things,
To teach that way of living from which all that's noble springs,
But the minister can't do it, single-handed and alone,
For the laymen of the country are the church's cornerstone.

When you see a church that's empty, though its doors are opened wide,
It is not the church that's dying. It's the laymen who have died;
For it's not by song or sermon that the church's work is done,
It's the laymen of the country who for God must carry on.
—Michigan Christian Advocate.

God's word is God's action, and God's action is His word. "He spake and it was done." "And God said, Let there be, and there was." With God therefore, speaking is doing, and doing is speaking. Calvary is God's "Word" to the world. It spoke His heart; it spoke His omnipotent power to save a world sunk in the depths of a fall which was beyond human remedy. . . The world's need is this message of the Cross. Not man's human view of the tragedy—the human physical side—but the Divine omnipotent "Word" speaking the Word of loosing from the guilt of sin; from every chain of sin, and from the thralldom of the devil. "The preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God. —From the Overcomer.

TRAVELING ON A SUPPOSITION

.....I think in the varied experiences of a long life I have sometimes found a church, a splendid building with tower pointing heavenward, a great congregation, with pealing organ, a well trained choir and highly educated minister, pews filled with sober, serious people on Sabbath morning, the services conducted with precision and dignified solemnity, where there was no Christ. Perhaps no one in all the multitudes knew Jesus as a present, personal, gracious Savior, but the years were passing and they were journeying on with a mere supposition that Jesus was somewhere with the kinsfolk, or in the company. If they were warned and admonished they were likely to be resentful, to point to their beautiful sanctuary, their cultured minister, their great organ, their well trained choir, their large gifts of money, and insist that they were doing their duty, that there was no need for a revival of heart-searching repentance and turning back to seek a lost Christ, and not until the darkness of death settled about them did they realize that they had traveled the journey of life without a personal Savior. Jesus Christ is true Christianity. Jesus Christ is salvation. To have Jesus, to know him, to love him supremely, to worship him with a glad heart, to refuse to do what he will not approve, to go where we cannot have his companionship, to believe in what is not in harmony with his teachings, to love what he does not sanction, to hold on to him and crown him Lord of all—this brings abiding peace and rest and full assurance. This is salvation for this world and all other worlds.—Dr. H. C. Morrison, in The Pentecostal Herald.

THE HEART

How careful we ought to be of our heart! Some people spend a great deal of time in cultivating their head, attending to their business, looking after their health, and minding their store, but neglect to nurture their heart. What a blunder! The heart is the core of a person's being. In it cluster our thoughts, plans, purposes, desires, aspirations. It is the heart that determines our disposition and makes life radiant, happy, and useful, or dull, gloomy, and burdensome. It is the heart that brings success or invites failure. It is the heart that makes marriage a lovely thing or an ugly thing. It is the heart that makes a home or mars it. It is the heart that determines our destiny here and hereafter. We must take time and thought in training and graduating the heart, "for out of it are the issues of life." The result is worth more than all the care we can bestow upon it.—Northern Christian Advocate.

ANXIETY

Anxiety is a mental condition arising from fear or solicitude. Back of it may be real or imaginary trouble. Anxiety not only tends to rob us of physical health, but so pre-occupies our minds that constructive thinking is practically impossible. The man who can dispel anxious thoughts has prepared the way for constructive thinking. It is disastrous to cherish anxious thoughts. The only remedy is that prescribed in the Scriptures: "Be anxious for nothing, but in everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God."

Paul was a praying man. His experience leads him to say: "In everything," matters pertaining to our daily work, matters pertaining to our church work should be taken into the secret chamber.

In response to our prayer there will come the gift of peace. "My peace I give unto you." He gives not as the world gives, just barely enough and that rather grudgingly, but he gives us a peace, "that passeth all understanding."—Selected.

CHRIST OUR "ARK OF SAFETY"

After the evening service at the mission,the preacher was hurrying away to a late train. He had just three minutes in which to catch it. Fortunately, the station was close at hand. A gentleman came running after him. "Oh, sir," said he, breathlessly, as he came up, "can you speak to me? I am very anxious about my soul." "Well," replied the missioner, "my train is just here, and it is the last one; but look up Isaiah 53:6. Go in at the first 'all,' and go out at the last 'all.' Good night." The gentleman stood staring after him until he disappeared into the station, and then he muttered, "Go in at the first 'all' and go out at the last 'all.' What does it mean?" When he arrived at home he got down a Bible. He turned to the text and read these words: "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." "Go in at the first 'all.' " he repeated. " 'All we like sheep have gone astray.' 'I am to go in with that 'all.' Yes, I see. It just means I am one of those who have gone astray. And go out with the last 'all.' 'The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.' I see. Yes, I am to go out free with those whose iniquity has been laid on Christ." That short, pithy comment brought by the Holy Spirit light and peace to that man's conscience and heart, and he rejoiced in Christ as his Savior.—Christian Herald.

WHEN THE INFIDEL PRAYED

A missionary traveling through the Canadian backwoods lost his way but presently was rejoicing to see a large congregation of settlers gathered around a fire listening to an able discourse, but to the horror of the missionary he found the orator trying to prove there was no God, no heaven, no hell, and no eternity.

As the man ceased, the missionary stood up and said:

"My friends, I am not going to make a long speech to you, for I am tired, but I will tell you a little story. A few weeks ago I was walking on the banks of the river not far from here. I heard a cry of distress, and to my horror I saw a canoe drifting down the stream and nearing the rapids. There was a single man in the boat.

"In a short time he would be near the waterfall, and be gone. He saw his danger, and I heard him scream, 'Oh God, if I must lose my life, have mercy on my soul.' I plunged into the water and reached the canoe. I dragged it to land and saved him. The man whom I heard when he thought no one was near, praying to God to have mercy on his soul, is the man who has just addressed you, telling you that he believes there is neither God, nor heaven, nor hell, nor eternity."—Rescue Journal.

THE CHURCH CANNOT COMPROMISE WITH MODERNISTS

The whole question at issue between fundamentalists and modernists is not a question of interpretation at all, as the latter seek to make out. It is a question of historic fact....

The peace and purity of the Church are more important than its outward unity.

Better a small Church pure in doctrine and at peace within itself than a large Church divided in doctrine and torn with strife. The Church cannot compromise with the modernists if it would remain Christian. Its slogan must be, "Accept the Christian creed, or leave the Christian ministry." Peace of mind and purity of doctrine can come to the Church only through the withdrawal or the dismissal of the modernists. Then its unity will be the unity of the Spirit, the only unity worthy of the name.—Charles Hill Fountain in The Presbyterian and Herald and Presbyter.

Further Word About China

An aeroplane letter sent to Mrs. Klein by Mrs. Soderbom just reached me. In this letter Mrs. Soderbom states that she and Mr. Horace Williams are safe in Tientsin and will remain there just as long as possible. They are in the International Settlement and will doubtless be perfectly safe. But things are happening so rapidly in China that no one knows how soon they may be forced to leave there. Every precaution is being taken for their safety.

You doubtless have been wondering why Mr. Soderbom remained at Kalgan instead of leaving with the others. He remained there to make all necessary arrangements for the Chinese to take over the work and to care for it temporarily. He is planning to leave it in the hands of a committee of the most trusted workers so that the work will be safeguarded in the best possible way. Mr. Soderbom, however, will remain at Kalgan until it is absolutely necessary for him to leave.

These new developments have made it necessary, of course, to close our schools. Before closing them a short graduating exercise was held for the purpose of graduating those who had so nearly completed the necessary course of study. Five were graduated—three from the girls' school and two from the woman's school.

Not only are our own workers taking every precaution for their own safety but also for the safety of the children in the school under their care. Accordingly, the same day in which Mrs. Soderbom and Mr. Williams left for Tientsin the carts came to take the children to their respective homes.

Certainly the missionary work in China has reached a crisis. What the outcome will be remains to be seen. Those on the field and in immediate touch with the situation are hopeful. Of course there will be changes and differences when it is all over. In the meantime we need to be much in prayer and give encouragement to our workers over there in every possible way.

For instance, Mr. Lobenstine, April 9, writes: "Schools are very largely closed, ordinary evangelistic and preaching work is at a standstill. What is to become of the twenty-five or thirty thousand employees of the Missions and of the Church? In some cases steps have been taken sufficiently in advance so that they are the better prepared to meet the crisis that is upon them. In others they will be as sheep without a shepherd. All of the administrators of Missions have been so terribly busy trying to bring to the coast their missionary staffs that relatively little along constructive lines has so far as I know as yet been done in regard to the Chinese work. Groups are meeting here, (at the coast) however, daily and with increasing frequency of Chinese workers from East China who have come for consultation with their missionary friends in regard to their local work."

Every effort is being made to keep up the courage and to maintain the faith of those who have already accepted. "If the flame of their Christian faith can be kept burning brightly through these dark days the Church will come out of the present period the stronger for the events through which she is called upon to pass." There will be some, of course, just as in our own land, who will drop out and deny the faith. But there are others who are saying, "You may kill us, but we are not willing to surrender that which we have come to find in Christianity."

The present task then seems to be for the missionaries on the field to give every assistance and encouragement to inspire to greater faith and for us at the home base to back them with our prayers and eevry other possible way that Christianity may come through and gain a greater hold than ever upon the struggling millions of China.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS

The final report on the Rally Day offerings for the fall of 1926 is as follows:

Maryland	$ 5,670.33	Illinois	$ 248.39
Ohio	4,111.51	Iowa-Misouri	162.96
Pittsburgh	2,441.33	Alabama	130.00
West Virginia	1,461.32	Michigan	110.00
Indiana	1,091.60	Washiongton Mis.	65.00
Eastern	886.04	Missouri	50.67
North Carolina	536.92	Arkansas	37.75
Kansas	417.05	Louisiana	10.70
Onondaga	397.94	Tennessee	1.00
			$17,830.51

Nine of the 18 conferences reporting show gratifying increases while five report a decrease. Four sending in offerings last year failed to do so this year, but four new ones appear in the list. The increase over last year is $4,213.04.

The returns from the undesignated or open budget again declined. The first year of the quadrennium the Board of Education received $25,442.34, the second year $15,973.69 and last year $13,649.46, a shrinkage of $2,324.23. But the increase in the Rally Day offerings raised our resources over $2,000.

The Board assisted 33 of our ministerial students this year with loans totaling $6,151. The return payments came to over $3,000, the largest amount received the last three years. Many of our pastors are making real sacrifices to meet their obligations to the Board of Education.

Nineteen young people in five different schools were given assistance through the Student Loan Fund. The return payments exceeded fourteen hundred dollars, and we were able to reduce the obligation of $890 inherited from last year by over $300.

A generous gift was recently received from a good friend which helped us to care for two Student Loan Fund beneficiaries who are preparing themselves for the foreign missionary field. It came at an opportune time and was appreciated, not only by the Board, but by the young ladies concerned.

Another good friend contributes $250 to our ministerial fund each year. He has been doing this for many years and it has helped materially to take care of our students. This year it will be possible to place this gift in the permanent fund where it will continue doing good for years to come. The Board of Education has never lost a cent and contributions made over 50 years ago are intact still performing their sacred mission.

Dean J. G. Willis, of Westminster College, Tehuacana, Texas, and Rev. G. O. McMillan, president of the Fort Smith-Oklahoma Conference, spent last week in Pittsburgh studying the Adrian College Campaign methods. Conference were held with the Executive Secretary, the Campaign Director, the Campaign Counsellor and considerable time spent in the field with the solicitors.

The death of Mr. Joseph W. Knott is felt keenly by the members of the Board of Education. Until the last General Conference when he retired voluntarily he had been a member of the Board for something like 25 years. At considerable personal inconvenience and sacrifice he had discharged his duty faithfully, carrying the cause of ministerial education and the welfare of our colleges very close to his heart. Dr. Berrien, Dr. Brown and Dr. Miller learned to depend upon Mr. Knott as much as upon anyone associated with them in this work. They found him a wise counsellor and loyal friend and one deeply interested in the Methodist Protestant Church. The present Secretary was not privileged to fellowship with him in the work of the Board but he has had repeated substantial evidences of an unfailing interest. We have lost a friend and one who had rendered a unique service to his church and the Kingdom.

GROUP REGISTRATION—YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE

In next week's issue of the HERALD I will publish a list of the preachers who have registered for the Young People's Conference, which will meet at High Point College June 18-24 inclusive. It is hoped that every preacher of the conference will meet his registration in the meantime. I have requested them to send their registration direct to me and indicate which church and agent they would like to have given credit for the registration. Come on, preachers, let's set the pace for others.

In the first issue of the June HERALD I want to publish a list of the Sunday school superintendents who have registered. There are several times as many of this group as there are preachers. Superintendents, are you going to let the preachers beat you? Don't wait, give your registration to your agent now. If you don't know who the agent is in your church, ask your pastor. If he will not tell you, write me.

Following the Superintendents I will show a list of the Christian Endeavor presidents.

Other registrations will be published each week, commencing with next week's issue. Watch this space each week.

PASTORS' SUMMER CONFERENCE

The program for the Pastors' Conference will be published within the next couple of weeks. It has been practically completed for sometime.

The President of the Pastors' Conference was charged at the last session of the Annual Conference with the duty of getting the charges interested in financing the pastors' attendance at the Summer Conference. Last year I sent out letters to practically all the Sunday school superintendents, and there was a good response. But that costs a good deal of time and money. I have more time than I have money, but not much of either. So this year I am going to ask through the HERALD for volunteers to help me put it over.

The churches can do themselves no better service than to send their pastors to the Summer Conference. The average pastor is in the same fix spiritually as he is financially—everything going out and not much coming in. He needs refreshing and inspiration to fill up his spiritual life if he is to help those to whom he ministers. I know of no better way than for him to spend a week at the Conferences. Whatever helps the preacher to a larger spiritual life helps the folks to whom he preaches. So, somebody, bestir yourself, and provide the means to get your preacher to the place of refreshing.

Another letter will tell the cost of entertainment and other expense, so you may know what it will cost to get your preacher to High Point.

Fraternally,

C. W. BATES.

THAT SUNDAY SPIN

And so, my boy, you were too tired after a hard week of hard work, to go to church Sunday morning, and mounted your wheel and went on a "country run" for a rest? And got home at 7 o'clock p.m. so tired that you couldn't go to church in the evening. And defending your way of spending the day, you quote the words of the Savior, "The Sabbath was made for man."

So it was my son; so it was. So was the buzz saw.

And not two years ago I saw a man with every one of his fingers and a part of his thumb gone from his right hand just because he made wrong use of a good buzz saw. The good work for a man, to which end it was made. It was fulfilling its destiny. It was doing the thing to which it was appointed. It didn't move out of its place a hair's breadth to do the man harm. It just kept on "sawing wood," and the man could not —or rather did not—wait until the buzz saw was through its work. He transgressed it ("Trangressus"—"trans," across; "grai," step—to step across;) he reached over it, when he should have gone around it.

And when he drew back his hand, which he did immediately, he didn't have the thing he reached for, and he didn't have the fingers he reached with. He had not only not gained something, but he had lost something. And, more than that, he had lost something that he will never get back again in this world.

Ah, my boy, I don't want to shut you up in a dingy boarding house, a hot room, and dusty city, and the smelling, dirty streets all the time. But when you go out into God's country for God's fresh air, and rest of body and peace of mind, don't run over God's Sunday to get these things. He has them for you; no one else can given them to you. But you don't want to trample on some of His greatest blessings to get the lighter ones. I have no more objection to you riding to church than you have to my walking on Sunday. If the Reverend Malachi Ezraman, A. M., D. D., LL. D., drives to church in his carriage, or uses the street cars, there is no reason why you shouldn't spin decorously up to the church on your wheel.

There is no reason why you shouldn't anyhow, no matter what the Doctor does. If he wants to walk to church let him. If I could ride as good as you do, I shouldn't walk unless I preferred it, which I certainly do. But you didn't ride to church. You passed the doors of three or four nice country churches on your spin, and never so much as paused at one of them. You didn't go out for fresh air and rest and peace of mind. You went out because you were too lazy to go to church or too selfish, or too mean, or just because you didn't want to. And the meanest thing in the whole business is that, after running away from church, after denying God the reverence and love and worship on His own day, which is His due, after riding over the Bible, you try to sneak a passage out of it to justify your treachery. Ah, my boy, not half a dozen verses away from the one quoted you will find what use the Lord of the Sabbath made of it for man. Do you use the day for man as He did, and you may write that text across your heart, and have it graven on the handle bars of your wheel, and ride a thousand miles every Sunday if you can, and God and man will bless you for it. But don't go racing and chasing over the whole countryside all Sunday, having a jolly good time all by yourself and all for yourself, and then come back quoting Scripture to prove that you were on a missionary tour all the time.

"The Sabbath was made for man," indeed it was; and so was Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. And it does seem to me that, as God made all of them, He ought to have a goodly portion of at least one of them.

The Sabbath was made for man. So was corn, but not to make whiskey. So was the sea, but not for piracy. The Sabbath and corn and the sea were made for man, not for the devil. Remember that, my boy.—The Christian Union Church.

LUTHER AND THE BIBLE

Luther said that he studied the Bible as he gathered apples. First, he shook the whole tree, that the ripest might fall, then he climbed the tree and shook each limb, and when he had shaken each limb, he shook each branch, and after each branch every twig, and then looked under each leaf. Let us search the Bible as a whole; shake the whole tree; read it as rapidly as you would any other book, then shake every limb, studying Book after Book. Then shake every branch, giving attention to the chapters when they do not break the sense. Then shake each twig by careful study of the paragraphs and sentences, and you will be rewarded, if you will look under every leaf, by searching the meaning of words.—A. C. Dixon.

JOSH BILLINGS ON INFIDELITY

Impudence, ingratitude, ignorance, and cowardice make up the creed of infidelity.

Did you ever hear of a man's renouncing Christianity on his death-bed and turning infidel?

No atheist, with all his boasted bravery, has ever yet dared to advertise his unbelief on his tombstone.

I notice one thing; when a man gets into a tight spot, he don't ever send for his friend, the devil, to get him out.

I had rather be an idiot than an infidel; if I am an infidel, I have made myself one; if an idiot, I was made so.—Selected

LIFE

"Life is a gift to be used every day,
Not to be smothered and hidden away:
It isn't a thing to be stored in the chest
Where you gather your keepsakes and treasure your best;
It isn't a joy to be sipped now and then
And promptly put back in a dark place again.

"Life is a gift that the humblest may boast of
And one that the humblest may well make the most of.
Get out and live it each hour of the day,
Wear it and use it as much as you may;
Don't keep it in niches and corners and grooves.
You'll find that in service its beauty improves."

OUR STORY PAGE

CLEAN HANDS

Mother's checked kitchen apron reached from Phoebe's chin to her toes, and she stood on a wooden stool as she washed the dishes. But even though she was such a little girl, her hands worked so quickly in the warm suds, and the dishes were so clean as she placed them in the rinsing pan that any one would have said, "Ah, this is not the first time that Phoebe has washed dishes for mother. She has learned how by doing it very often." And as Phoebe worked she sang so merrily that any one would say: "Phoebe likes to help her mother, even though the work is dish-washing."

While she was still singing, the door opened and Mabel peeped in. Mabel was Aunt Mabel's daughter, and Phoebe's cousin.

"Oh how can you sing when you wash that greasy pan? Ugh, the thought of how your hands feel makes me creep," and Mabel looked at her own pretty hands. "I will not wash dishes."

"But today is Saturday, and Nora can not do more than the baking. It is mother's busy day, and she needs help." Phoebe polished till the pan shone.

"Well, I wouldn't do it," Mabel cried, and ran away.

When the dishes were all put away on the pantry shelf, the small hands did look a little red, but do you think Phoebe cared for that when mother called: "Thank you, Phoebe, dear. You have made the whole morning easier?" She did not take the checked apron off, for she knew that mother was hurrying to find time to polish the silver. It was a slow, tedious task, but mother had said to Nora, "I must try to do it."

Phoebe knew why. Uncle Matthew was coming to spend a whole week with mother. Uncle Matthew was the brother mother loved so dearly, and had not seen since he went away to a far country to be a missionary. Phoebe was such a tiny little girl that she could not remember the day at all, but mother often told her the story.

In a short time the silver knives and forks and spoons were spread on the kitchen table, and how they began to shine! First, a dab of powder on the soft chamois cloth, then round and round went Phoebe's fingers; not a dark stain escaped her notice.

Suddenly the door opened. "Look at your hands. They are as black as a piece of coal." Mabel had come in. As she spoke, she rolled her own dimpled hands in her white apron.

"It'll all come off," laughed Phoebe.

"Well, I wouldn't do that for any one. I thought you'd be ready to come out to play by this time."

It did take a good deal of scouring to take the stains away from the fingers when the bright silver was laid away in its place, but do you think Phoebe cared after she heard mother say to Nora, "See what the child has done! She is a little treasure!"

The clock on the kitchen mantel warned Nora that dinner time was coming, and she cried: "What shall I do! The vegetables are not ready. The baking and the extra work have made me late."

"I'll peel the potatoes, Nora. Let me." It was little Phoebe who spoke.

"You, child! They'll stain your hands again."

"Oh, the stain will all come off." Soon Phoebe was seated on the low kitchen stool, with a pan in her lap almost as big as herself, peeling potatoes, so that father's dinner should be ready on time.

Again Mabel popped her head through the kitchen doorway. "Well, you're the queerest girl!" she called.

"Queer girl, indeed!" snorted Nora. "Never a wee bit of help have ye given your mother, and she as busy as Phoebe's. Ye ought to be full of shame when you look at your lazy, white hands."

Uncle Matthew came, and Phoebe soon found him to be as dear an uncle as mother had said. He had the strangest way of looking at one. Phoebe said to herself: "I believe he can almost see what I think." Of course, this was not quite true, but certainly Uncle Matthew was very wise. He was so wise that it was not long before he understood just why Phoebe's mother was so gay and happy and rested, and why Mabel's mother sometimes seemed almost too tired to smile.

Both little cousins wondered when, the day before he went away, he caught their two small hands in his big one; side by side they rested; Mabel's soft, dimpled, white ones, and Phoebe's roughened and red, with here and there a stain. Slowly he said:

"'Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest, and brave, and true,
Moment by moment the long day through.'

"It's a big mistake to think that loving work makes them ugly, my dears."

The next day, when Uncle Matthew kissed Phoebe goodbye, he pinned a beautiful gold and pearl pin under her chin as he whispered, "A badge of honor for the little maiden whose hands and heart are pure and clean and good and beautiful, because they are ready to give loving service."—The Canadian Baptist.

MAYSIE'S MISSIONARY CHECK

"Now any one can write a check!"

With these words, Dr. Daniel Hedpeth, the pastor of Greenwood Church, closed his stirring appeal for missions, concluding with the statement that the ushers would pass the plates, on which blank checks would await the pleasure of any one to sign.

"Any one can write a check!" Little Maysie Bates clasped her small hands together, and the light of firm resolve settled on her face. Yes, surely, if she had a chance to help those poor little children, she ought to do it; and the minister, of course, meant just what he said. So, when the plate came to her she carefully took the blank check and pencil, and gravely resting it on a hymn book, proceeded to make out a check. She knew how—hadn't she watched Daddy make a check only last week? So, patiently, laboriously, she wrote first "mister hedpeth," for did not he ask for the money? She would write a good big check, when the banks were so good as to let one send money to the heathen, she felt she ought to write a large one; so "one hundid dolers," came next, then "Maysie Bates."

She leaned back a little breathless over her supreme effort, and when the plate passed again, gravely dropped the check upon it, with a song of happiness in her heart that she had helped the little heathen.

She went home with Rosetta, her colored nurse, with such dancing feet, that Rosetta became impatient. "What ails ye? Can't ye walk like a decent child on Sunday?" But Maysie was unable to be staid and sober, and dancing along singing softly, "A hundid dolers and hundid dolers for cheld-en over the sea."

"How pleased Daddy will be!" she thought; but Daddy would not be there, as usual, to meet her, for he and Aunt Sara, who lived with them ever since her dead Mamma had gone to heaven, had gone to visit a sick relative; and Maysie and the cook and Rosetta were left alone the whole day. That was why Maysie went to church alone. Aunt Sara had said that Maysie could go to church with the minister's wife, forgetting that she had gone to visit her aged mother.

It was evening of the next day before Maysie had a chance to talk with her father. Aunt Sara had a headache, and had gone upstairs to lie down, and Daddy and Maysie sat before the fire, having a good time before Maysie's bedtime.

"What did you do with yourself all day yesterday, Maysie? Tell me about it, won't you?" said Daddy, drawing the little girl closer to him, as they sat together in a big chair, while the fire cast dancing shadows around them.

"I had such a good time, Daddy. I had an el'gant breakfast 'cause cook made little biscuits 'cause there was just me; an' there was strawberry jam—I'd better not tell you all I had 'cause it might make you hungry, an' it's all gone!" And Maysie shook her head and looked roughly at her father.

Daddy laughed and said, "And after breakfast?"

"I got dressed and went to Sabbath school, an' our teacher was away, an' a lady was there an' she had such a pretty dress on. I put out my hands to smooth it, an' she saw me an' squeezed my hand and smiled at me. An' then she told us a pretty story 'bout Jesus an' a little sick girl, an' she had pink roses in her hat."

"The little sick girl had pink roses?" teased Daddy.

"Oh, Daddy Bates! The Bible doesn't tell about people's hats!" and Maysie giggled delightfully.

"But who had the pink roses?"

"The lady, Daddy! The lady who teached!"

"Taught, dear!" corrected Daddy.

"Yes, Daddy."

"Then, what next, Maysie?" continued Daddy, playing with a golden curl which fell over Maysie's shoulder.

"Then I went to church. Mrs. Hedpeth was away, so I went to church myse'f, an'—Oh, Daddy, I sent a hundid dolers to the little heathen children!" and Maysie bounced up on her father's knee, where she could better see her audience.

"You did what?" exclaimed Daddy.

"I sent a hundid dollars to the little heathen children, Daddy!"

"A hundred dollars, Maysie?" questioned Daddy, a little anxiously.

"Oh, I wrote a check!" explained Maysie, "like you do, you know!"

"A check!" breathed Daddy.

"You see, Daddy, the minister preached about the little heathen—some of them their daddies don't want, and they throw them into the river—and, oh, Daddy, I'm so glad you are not a heathen father. Maybe you'd not want me, and what would I do if my Daddy didn't want me?" Tears stood in the violet eyes and the sensitive mouth trembled.

"Oh, come, come, Maysie! You're not a little heathen, and there's no danger of Daddy not wanting you."

"But you see, Daddy, if the little children's fathers knew 'bout Jesus, they'd love their little girls and not throw them in the water. O, Daddy. Just think—"

"But go on dear, tell me about the check," interrupted her father.

"After the sermon, Mr. Hedpeth said the ushers would pass the plates with checks on, and any one could write a check; and there were little pencils on the plate, too, and so people took the checks, and wrote on them, and I did, too, papa! Isn't it lovely of the banks to let you do it? I didn't know they were so good!"

An amused smile crept over the face of the man as he listened to the reasoning of the beautiful child.

"And where is the check now, pet?" he queried.

"Oh, I put it on the plate with the others when it came 'round again!"

"Tell me what you wrote on the check, dear," persisted Mr. Bates.

"Well, don't know whether that was just right, but I wrote Mr. Hedpeth, an' one hundid dolers, an' then Maysie Bates. That's all right, isn't it?" For, with the instinct of childhood, she knew that maybe Daddy was not pleased with her doings, though he was smiling.

"Yes, dear, you did very well, indeed," laughed Daddy. "Don't you trouble your little head any more about the heathen. That hundred dollars will go a long way!"

"Bless her heart!" he mused, "she thought she was doing a big thing!" Again his eyes twinkled with amusement.

"I'm so glad you're not a heathen father!" came the memory again of the sweet little voice.

A heathen father! Some way he could not get away from the thought. A heathen father! But had he any right to the name Christian father? He rose from his chair and paced back and forth, emotion showing on his face.

At last the pacing back and forth ceased, and Mr. Bates went to his desk and took out his check book, and placed it in his pocket. A light in a neighboring house was shining from the window, and within a white-haired minister was bending over his desk.

Mr. Bates went up the walk and rang the bell. A maid answered, and in reply to his inquiry said, "Yes, sir, Dr. Hedpeth is in the study." "Take me to him," said Mr. Bates.

After the greetings were over, Mr. Bates said, "My little Maysie did not understand, yesterday, that she could not send a check to the heathen—" The old man smiled, and reaching over laid the check before him. "The little thing did a pretty good job of it after all, didn't she?" he remarked with a smile. Mr. Bates reached over, and selecting a pen from a rack on the deck, placed his own signature beneath that of the child.

The old minister put his hand on the arm of the young man and said, in a voice full of emotion, "John Bates, would to God it was yourself you were giving instead of your check. The Lord needs men like you in his service!"

Mr. Bates laid his hand over the minister's and answered firmly, "I gave myself before I gave my check!"—Ex.

SING!

A poor little black girl, with bare head and bare feet came into a large Sunday school where the children in their cool, white gowns were singing, "Whiter than Snow." She sat still, with eyes and mouth wide open, pleased and satisfied. No one took any notice of her, and during the lesson she lay down upon one of the seats and fell fast asleep. At the close, the superintendent, who was a physician, upon going to waken her, found she was ill with a fever. The poor child had suffered for days without any attention, and attracted by the singing had crept into the church because she could go no further. She was taken to the hospital and cared for. One of the teachers visited her. She was always pleased when she saw anything white, and in her ravings was always saying "White" and "Snow." One day when the teacher took her some flowers, with her little black hands she picked out a white one and laid away all the rest. At last she became quiet and ceased to rave, and said to the nurse, "Sing, lady." "What shall I sing?" "Whiter than Snow." The nurse began singing softly. The little one interrupted her, "Missus, does that mean me?" "Yes, my child." "Me, a nigger?" "Yes, my child." "Den sing it some more." The nurse sang it again, and then told her how Jesus could wash all our sins, and though her skin was black, her soul could be whiter than snow. She was happy and lay still for a long time. She grew weaker, and one day at twilight she whispered "Once more." "What, my child?" "Sing." And while the nurse sang the only song the child had ever heard, the redeemed spirit of the little black waif who had no home and no mother, went up to live with Jesus and be happy forever, for he had made her "Whiter than snow."—Selected.

THE HAPPY CAMPERS

With eyes swimming in tears against which he manfully struggled, Bobby Dick stumbled up the back steps and into the house. Coming into the room where his aunt sat in a low rocking-chair beside the geranium-filled window darning stockings, he leaned against her comforting knee.

"What is the matter, sonny boy?" she asked, laying down her sewing that she might stroke his soft curls.

In spite of his manful efforts, Bobby Kirk's chin began to quiver.

"The fel-fellows are playin' cowboy," he swallowed, "an-and they won't let me play."

Auntie's hand slid from Bobby Dick's hair to his shoulder, which she patted encouragingly.

"They won't?" she asked. "How is that, dear?"

"They say I don't look a cowboy, an-and anyway I haven't got any red bandana, and all cowboys have to have red bandanas."

"Dear me," exclaimed auntie, "no red bandana! Well, never mind," she went on reassuringly. "Suppose you and I go out in the back yard, make a fire, and play we are campers."

A beam of sunshine broke over Bobby Dick's face, chasing away the tears. "O, auntie," he cried delightedly, "you do think of the bestest things!"

Busily they set to work building an oven with some old bricks and soon had a fire crackling cheerily within it.

"Bobby Dick," said auntie as she bustled about, "you run into the house and get some potatoes, some onions, and that half box of bacon. Jane will give them to you."

As Bobby Dick with arms piled high returned from his errand one of the cowboys, riding his steed at a furious pace down the alley, caught sight of him. Passing, he peered through the panels of the gate. "What you doing?" he asked.

"Playing campers," shouted Bobby Dick as he dumped his burden beside the oven and hastened after more sticks.

With nose thrust between the palings, the rider watched with eager interest. At last he edged into the yard. "Say," he asked, "can I play campers."

"Certainly," came auntie's hearty reply, and, dropping his stick, the boy set to work with a will on peeling potatoes.

A second boy astride a stick horse came to a sudden halt as he appeared around the corner of the house. Wistfully he stood gazing upon the happy campers about the fire.

"O, Jack," cried Bobby Dick, catching sight of him, "we are having such fun! Don't you want to come and play?"

Jack needed no second invitation, but rushed eagerly forward to join in the game.

"Dear me," cried auntie, "we have forgotten the bread! Jack," she added, "suppose you run in the house and ask Jane for a loaf of bread."

My, how busy they were! And how good the smell of the frying bacon, onions, and potatoes! Drawn by this appetizing odor, one by one the rest of the cowboys abandoned their horses to join the campers.

Auntie cut the bread, piling each slice high with bacon, onions, and potatoes, and Bobby Dick passed them around.

"This is lots more fun than playing cowboy," said one of the boys as he reached for his slice. "How did you ever think of it, Bobby Dick?" and he gazed admiringly at the curly-headed lad, who, to his shame, looked nothing like a cow-boy and who, alas! possessed no red bandana.

"Auntie thought of it," cried Bobby Dick, smiling joyfully up at his auntie as she passed on her way into the house to glance over the happy group, "she always thinks of the bestest things!"

And Auntie with a smile playing about her lips repeated softly the following lines which you will have to have mother explain to you:

"They drew a circle and left me out,
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But Love and I had the wit to win.
We drew a circle and took them in."

FEAR

Some things I am afraid of:
I live in constant fear
That thoughtless speech of mine shall reach
A child's retentive ear.

In anger's frenzied moment
I tremble lest I be
So maddened through that I shall do
A wrong a child might see.

And vigilant in pleasure
I shudder lest I may
My watch destroy, and grasp a joy
Which leads a child astray.

For youthful eyes are eager,
And little ears are keen,
And no man knows the trail which grows
To mark where he has been.

And all these fears beset me,
That one may hear and see
My faulty ways and through the days
Come following after me.

For life has boundless reaches,
And all we are survives,
We mold and fill with good or ill
Uncounted other lives.

And so I'm fearful ever
And tremble lest I may Forget my power for just an hour
And lead a life astray.

STOP CRITICISING AND PULL

"It isn't the preacher's flowery prayer
Or the way the choir sings.
Or the size of the coin your neighbor gives,
Or the help your brother brings.
It isn't the size of your favorite church,
Or the cost of your favorite pew,
Or the style of the clothes the members wear;

For it isn't the church, it's you.
For a chain's as strong as the weakest link,
And it breaks with a heavy load,
But a church that's full of links that pull
Can level the roughest road.
If you get in tune with the Master's will,
With your heart and your labors, too,
You will love your church, though it has its faults,
For it isn't the church, it's you."

PRAYER INDISPENSABLE

No church can accomplish its divinely given purpose without the spirit of earnest prayer. There is need in every church for a deep and steadfast prayer life. The power from on High, which comes through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, never just happens. Prayer is now, as it has always been, the greatest power that God has put into the hands of His people. —Christian Observer.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

THE POSTAL CARD

W. F. Kennett, Editor

President Dixon is now calling for second quarterly reports. Here comes ours. Since the last Postal Card appeared the editor has enlarged his field of activities. We have preached twice for Brother Gerringer, once for Brother J. D. Williams, once for Brother Neese, and once in Muir's Chapel M. E. Church, South. Besides this, the editor has conducted one funeral service and assisted in a number of others; also delivered a short address at Salem church during the one hundredth anniversary exercises. So you see we have not been entirely inactive. We have enjoyed supplying for the brethren and appreciate the many expressions of appreciation. Concrete evidence has reached the editor to the effect that the Postal Card is being missed and this has helped to inspire this issue. The address of the Postal Card is 417 North Elm St., Greensboro, N. C.

Note: The editor of the Postal Card is to preach for Rev. S. W. Taylor in the First M. P. Church, Burlington, next Sunday morning.

Information as to Meeting of Conferences

In the Herald of last week the president asked for information as to when and where conferences met from 1828 to 1887. This information can be found in the Table of Annual Conference Sessions in any of the Journals published from 1914 to a number of years afterward. This information was compiled in a way that it might not be absolute but it is believed to be correct in the main.

GEO. L. CURRY.

Forsyth.—The Maple Springs church is now on rollers, being moved to its new location. On next Sunday a New Location Service will be conducted at which time the new grounds will be dedicated to use for the location of what is hoped will be a great church in the Kingdom of God.

The new church at Mt. Carmel is nearing completion and will be formally opened May 29th.

Our third quarterly conference met in the Union Grove church on the night of May 10. Among other business it was found that Brother Frank Evans was elected delegate to the Annual Conference.

Among our sick Brother D. T. Berrier of Union Grove is in the Baptist hospital of Winston-Salem and Mrs. Fannie Lash of Hickory Ridge is at her home. Both are quite sick and we pray for their recovery.

In His name,

GEO. L. CURRY.

High Point.—Examinations are being given at High Point College this week, and commencement exercises will begin on Thursday evening when the Oratorical and Essayist Contest will be held at 8 o'clock in the College Auditorium. On Friday evening a Concert by Della Baker of Metropolitan Opera Co., New York, will be given, this being the last of the Lyceum Course entertainments. On Saturday, at 11 a.m., Class Day exercises will be held on the campus, and at 8 p.m. the Oratorio, "Rose Maiden," will be sung in the Auditorium. The Baccalaureate Sermon will be delivered in First church on Sunday morning by Dr. Thos. H. Lewis of Washington City, President General Conference. At 6:45 p.m. Vesper services will be conducted on College Campus, and at 8 p.m. President R. M. Andrews will hold a farewell service for the Seniors in the College Auditorium. On Monday at 11 o'clock a.m. the Commencement address will be delivered by Judge Isaac M. Meckins of the U. S. Court of Eastern N. C., and diplomas will be presented to the first class of thirteen young men and women who will go out from High Point College. All patrons, friends of the college, and citizens of High Point and community are cordially invited to attend these interesting and noteworthy exercises.

The members of the Junior church gave a Carnival Friday evening, which proved to be a good show. There were booths where candy, cake, ice cream cones, sandwiches and punch were on sale, and several boys gave amusing acrobatic stunts. The orchestra from the Children's Home furnished music. The kiddies were dressed in all kinds of grotesque costumes, and all enjoyed the fun, even staid grown-ups entering into the spirit of a good time. This show was well patronized and the proceeds amounted to approximately $50.00. This sum will be used for payment on the children's pledge of $100.00 on the church debt

The A. M. Idol Philathea Class gave a delightful banquet at the church last Tuesday evening, from which a neat sum was realized. The class has donated $5.00 to the fund for relief of flood sufferers. This class, which comprises Circle No. 4 of the Foreign Missionary Society, Miss Mary Young leader, will hold a meeting Tuesday evening with Miss Gladys Kivett on Kivett road two miles east of the city.

On Sunday morning Rev. P. E. Lindley delivered a splendid sermon on "The Light of Life," and took opportunity to bring a farewell message to the students of High Point College. He told them to take the Master of Light for their guide through the coming vacation days, and assured them that no one knows so well what sin is as the one who stays out of it. We tamper with little sins, and Jesus is needed to tell us that it is dangerous.

A lovely duet, "O Saving Host," was sung by Messrs. Dan Smith and Clarence Schultheiss. At the 8 o'clock service Rev. E. Lester Ballard brought a forceful message on "The Power of the Foolish and Weak. The Male Quartette, Messrs. Koonce, Smith, Schultheiss, and Davis, sang a beautiful selection.

Mrs. E. L. Ballard, who went to Pittston, Penn., to attend the Executive Board meeting of Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, returned home Monday morning, accompanied by Mr. Ballard's mother, Mrs. R. T. Ballard, of Baltimore, who will be a guest of her son at the parsonage for several days. We are pleased to know that Mrs. Ballard and Mrs. George R. Brown of Reidsville had a pleasant trip.

Miss Ailene Marlette has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. P. E. Lindley.

Mr. Theodore Ballard of Charlotte spent the week-end here.

Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Neese and their daughter Margaret Opal and Annette Pickens, went to Tabernacle church last Sunday to attend services and visit relatives. The day in the country was greatly enjoyed.

W. A. Davis is the newly elected Mayor of High Point. Mr. Davis is a member of the First church.

Siler City Church.—The people of Siler City are very glad to learn that Rev. F. L. Gibbs who has been attending school at Westminster, Maryland, has returned to stay.

The revival meeting started Sunday with good preaching by the pastor. There were large congregations at both services.

Rev. L. W. Gerringer will assist Mr. Gibbs in the meeting. He will arrive Monday evening.

At the morning service Sunday Mrs. Duncan Welch and Mrs. Henry Dorsett were received into the church.

Ninety-nine were present at Sunday school. The collection amounted to over $26.00.

The Ladies' Aid have been at work for last few months beautifying the interior of the church.

The woodwork has been painted, the walls papered and six chandeliers have been installed.

Sunday evening the message was brought by the pastor. "Through Man to God.'"

The Christian Endeavor topic: How to become a Leader. The meeting was led by the president and the committee chairmen. This was one of the most interesting topics of the quarter. REPORTER.

State Street Church.—Our revival meeting closed last Thursday night. Brother Gerringer preached his last sermon of the series on Wednesday night. Brother Bethea preached on Thursday night. The meeting was one of great helpfulness to all who attended. There were many conversions, and all Christians who heard Brother Gerringer were inspired to better service. Last Sunday was Decision day in Sunday school. There were four or five conversions at this service.

At the close of the preaching service twelve new members were added and there are several more to come in yet.

Mothers' Day came just in the midst of the revival. So Brother Gerringer went home to conduct a Mothers' Day service in his church.

Borther Bethea preached a beautiful sermon, paying high tribute to all faithful mothers. A most delightful feature of our Mothers' Day program was a song service by a quartet from Lincolnton, Mr. R. I. Wood, Mr. Eugene Hartman, Mr. Eura and Miss Lena Eura sang four beautiful appropriate selections at the morning service and at two o'clock in the afternoon they sang again to a large and very appreciative audience. We thank these good friends much and hope they will come again.

The Vacation Bible School will begin June 6th. There are so much better quarters for the school this year and a larger force of teachers and equipment in general is so much better than we had last summer that the prospects for an instructive and interesting school is good. Last summer we had a fine school in cramped quarters, an insufficient number of teachers and numerous other handicaps that will not have to be encountered this year.

Mr. Bethea will be away from June 27 until July 17th working in Summer Conferences in Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma. He has three classes in each conference and is expecting to be quite busy. REPORTER.

Midway, Haw River Circuit.—Our Sunday school attendance has fallen off some on account of measles, there being several cases in our community. Yesterday there were only sixty-four present, but the interest is still good. The Christian Endeavor society is moving along nicely. We meet every Sunday night at 8 o'clock. Last night the meeting was led by Miss Lucile Dobbs, and it was decided that we have a social next Friday night on Dr. Johnson's lawn.

Pastor Reid was not with us at the last appointment; we are sorry that his health is bad; and are hoping and praying that he and his wife will soon be well again and can be with us.

It is a little late to report our Easter program, but better late than never. The program was good, and was enjoyed by a large congregation, much credit being due to Mrs. Tom Butler and Mrs. E. L. Haynes. Collection, $12.50 We are planning for a children's day program some time soon.

MRS. G. W. APPLE, Reporter.

New Hope, Why Not Circuit.—Pastor Garner preached an impressive sermon Sunday afternoon pertaining to Home and Mother, commemorating mothers' day, his regular appointment being the Sunday following mothers' day.

We are having a splendid Sunday school with good attendance.

We are planning to hold Children's Day exercise the third Sunday in June, which will be our regular preaching day.

We organized a Ladies' Aid Society. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Wm. Cox; vice-president, Mrs. U. R. Williams; secretary and treasurer, Miss Leta Presnell; program committee, Mrs. Nettie Allen, Mrs. J. B. Presnell, and Mrs. C. R. Galey; committee for the purpose of getting new members, Mrs. Melvin Pierce; Mrs. Noah Williams and Mrs. Jasper Vuncanon.

We were glad to have the oldest member of our church present Sunday, Aunt Lanie Tucker. Mrs. Tucker is about 80 years of age and can not attend regularly like she once did.

We were glad to have as visitors Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Dewey Buie, Miss Hester Cox, also Mr. W. C. Hammond of High Point and Mrs. Carnui Macon and children and Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Presnell of Asheboro.

The Bible class taught by our pastor one and two nights each week is being well attended and greatly enjoyed by many of our members. Those not attending don't realize what they are missing.

MRS. NOAH WILLIAMS, Reporter.

Asheville.—Last Sunday was an interesting and helpful day with us. The home-coming day set apart for May 1st was changed to a Mid-year rally, which was held last Sunday. Pastor Bates preached a stirring sermon on "The elements of a successful church." The elements he named are, loyalty, unity, enthusiasm, co-operation, and spirituality. In the afternoon Rev. Geo. W. Belk of the Asheville School gave us a message on Personal Evangelism. He urged that the church return to Apostolic beginnings in soul winning; that a church's success does not depend on equipment in money and numbers, but upon witnessing for Christ. He told plainly how small groups of believers may add to their membership scores and scores by person to person invitation to become christian. After his address, short talks were made by E. C. Fawcett, I. W. Cashatt and Miss Patterson. A number of our members had brought baskets of dinner, and a delightful spread was enjoyed by those who could remain for the picnic lunch and for the most helpful program following the lunch.

Mrs. Bates and her associates entertained the brotherhood on May 2nd. A very good meeting. Our good friend H. O. Charnock was the speaker of the evening. He told us how we may build up the Sunday school and church.

Our Missionary societies will meet with Mrs. C. C. McNeil this Thursday. Mrs. Mcneil is our new president. Mrs. McNeil has the pleasure of a visit from her father, Brother J. H. Stowe. A few of us were happy to see Dr. S. K. Spahr with Mrs. Spahr and their daughter, Mrs. Phillips, in our city last week. They visited Bethel Home in Weaverville, and were much pleased with that institution. REPORTER.

Bessemer City.—The second Sunday was a great day for us after the Sunday school had enthusiastically studied the lesson Rev. E. W. Ferrill of Newton, delivered to us a soul-stirring message from God after which dinner was served. Everybody seemed to enjoy the good ration prepared by the good ladies. Many thanks to you, good sisters.

After all mouths had been filled and all appetites satisfied the old timers gathered and sang the old songs, pastor lining some in old-time way. Many souls were thrilled and memories renewed of the old by-gone days when these songs were sung and fathers, mothers, and grand-mothers shouted the praises unto God. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed and church edified. God help us to get the old inspirational songs back into our churches—away with the jazz music.

One week of revival passed; 40 conversions and reclamations. This is the fourth revival Brother Ferrill has conducted for the Bessemer City people; this is an evidence he has a place in their heart.

We are glad to state that this is the best meeting yet. Not only children but fathers and mothers have found emancipation in the light and power of redeeming grace.

Our Sunday school numbers 117; climbing slowly but surely.

Miss Lucy Blanton has been appointed a booster for the Young People's Summer Conference.

Many thanks to Lincoln choir for service at Bessemer City Sunday night.

W. L. CARSON.

Lincolnton.—The revival meeting closed with about 33 conversions and reclamations. The church has been greatly revived. Brother Bethea did some fine preaching and all who heard him seemed to enjoy his good messages as they were full of truth and saturated with the spirit.

What gives me the greatest joy is our two little boys professed faith in Jesus Christ.

The pastor is greatly delighted with the service Brother C. E. Eury and wife are rendering in behalf of the young people. They are leading on successfully two societies, the Intermediate Christian Endeavor and Junior Christian Endeavor.

A great field is open here for a great work. Pray for us that we may show ourselves approved unto God. W. L. CARSON.

Jerusalem.—Our services last Sunday morning were attended by the usual-sized congregation. Brother Beck, of the Reformed church, is superintendent of the Sunday school, and was present and presided over the session of the Sunday school. We have a union Sunday school which is composed of members of three denominations—Lutheran, Reformed and Methodist Protestant.

The preaching service was attended by some visitors, including Brother Ledwell, of Salisbury, whose mother is buried in the cemetery at Jerusalem. He made an effort to locate the grave of his mother and expects to erect a monument to the grave soon.

We are glad to report that Jerusalem raised the College Assessment last Sunday morning, and we will be on the honor roll in that respect. One lady who is a member of a Methodist Episcopal church but who has been attending our services regularly for several Sundays, gave one dollar to the fund. She resides in the community of Jerusalem church.

Payments have been made on pastor's salary regularly for the past several appointments and we hope to soon begin paying on the General and Annual Conference budgets.

Our next service will be held the second Sunday morning in June at 11 o'clock. A meeting of the second quarterly conference will be held just after the service on that Sunday at which time nominees for delegate to the next Annual Conference will be selected and other business transacted.

C. B. WAY, PASTOR.

Denton Church.—Pastor Henderson delivered a wonderful sermon yesterday morning, and another good sermon last night. The attendance was good morning and evening. Our Sunday school was well attended. Attendance yesterday, 103; year ago, 84; offering yesterday, $2.90; year ago, $2.52. Our Christian Endeavor Society is still doing a great work for our town.

We are having our church wired. We are expecting to have electric lights soon.

The writer is glad to say that everybody here speaks well of our pastor, Mr. Henderson, and family. Those good people are a great help in our town.

They visit all members, rich or poor, and are loved by all.

Prayer meeting Wednesday night 8 p.m.

We ask the prayers of all the Herald readers for our work here. REPORTER.

Mt. Zion, Pinnacle Charge.—Brother Hunter has faithfully and promptly served us at all times. Due to severe sickness in the home of C. W. Allen he resigned as Sunday school Superintendent and Brother S. T. Laine was duly elected to succeed and we are glad to note Sunday school increasing in attendance under Brother Lane.

On the third Sunday in June we will have a children's day program. In order to avoid conflict with our Young People's Conference the date of our special meeting is changed from third Sunday in July to fourth Sunday in June.

We held our second quarterly conference at Mt. Zion and Pinnacle were only churches represented. Mt. Zion as usual is considerably behind with finances and there seems to be no way to help it. Shoals, like usual, reported paid up to date with Pinnacle and Pilot doing fine financially.

We have a lot of sickness throughout the membership generally.

Brothers R. S. Spainhour of Pinnacle and J. A. Allen of Pilot were duly elected as nominees to annual conference.

Pinnacle high school closed with several students graduating including one of our members—Norman Culler, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Culler. Norman has the pep and is planning to go on to college, and we are hoping for him to go.

May the Lord add this blessing to one and all is our prayer. REPORTER.

P. S. We want to take this opportunity of extending our very heartest thanks to our neighbors for their untiring efforts to help during the sickness of our little boy, Junior. Junior has been confined for three months with "White-swelling" and will be confined for some time yet; however we think he is on the mend. We ask the prayers of all Christians. C. W. ALLEN.

Calvary.—When I wrote my report last week I was away from home and wrote hurriedly, and in my hurry left out one item that is worthy of notice. I refer to the Mother's day service. Mother's day fittingly observed in both the Sunday school and the preaching service. At the close of the study period of the Sunday school Elizabeth Williams and Morris Campbell each recited selections appropriate to the occasion and Agnes McPherson and Elizabeth Williams beautifully sang an appropriate duet.

At the eleven o'clock service the choir gave us the best music we have had at Calvary. The music was featured by an anthem by the choir and a solo by Mrs. Heritage. The pastor tried to preach on the subject, "An Appreciation of Mother." I want to take this means of expressing my appreciation of the good work being done by the choir. Under the leadership of Mrs. M. H. Allred and by the fine cooperation of the other members the choir is continually improving. A "Service in Song" is being planned for the first or second Sunday evening in June.

The commemoration of Mother's Day came to a fitting climax in the evening service when the young people of the church presented the pageant "The Spirit of American Women" written by our Pine Ridge Mission School. I was away and did not see this presentation but have heard many favorable comments. There is some talk of repeating it. As pastor I appreciate the very fine cooperation that is being given by all departments and organization of the church.

L. W. GERRINGER.

Rockingham.—Our Sunday school is steadily growing. We have a very good attendance about every Sunday. We are putting on a special effort to make our attendance much larger yet.

Our mid-week prayer meetings are of much interest. We have a good number present each week and the majority seem to be deeply interested in the work.

Our boys are taking great interest in their work as a prayer circle. We rejoice to see them growing in interest and number.

Our pastor has been holding prayer meeting in a home with a group of people at Entwistle.

The smaller boys of our community have a prayer meeting of their own on every Friday night. The leaders of this work report of the excellent work and interest of the little fellows.

Brother Trollinger, our pastor, has delivered a very inspiring sermon and given us a good Bible Study since we last wrote. He will preach at our church Sunday, May 15.

Class number five, of our Sunday school, will give a candy boiling Friday night, May 13th, at the home of the writer. This class will invite class number six and the teachers and officers of the Sunday school. We hope this will be a pleasant time for the young people.

The teachers and officers of our church had their regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Dora Jenkins on Tuesday night, May 3rd. The meeting was very inspiring to all present. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served by the hostess. The next meeting will be held in the home of our pastor, Rev. J. H. Trollinger.

Best regards to the Herald and its readers.

The annual Sunday School Convention to be held at Smithwood church on Sunday, May 29th, promises to be one of unusual interest. There will be special music throughout the day, and a number of interesting addresses. The president, S. A. Alexander, has arranged a most excellent program. Among other features, Dr. W. T. Whitsett of Whitsett, will deliver a special address on the subject of "Christian Heroism" at 11 a.m.

Smithwood church is near Kimesville, just north of Liberty, and easily reached by fine roads from every direction. A cordial invitation has been extended to all to attend, and the crowd is expected to be the largest that has ever attended a session of the convention.

—"I had been warned to look for booze and bunk. I have found ice-water and straightforwardness, gentlemen and interesting people, prosperity, efficiency, sobriety and politeness. Physically I have seen no finer specimens of young manhood in any of the numerous countries I have visited."—Suzanne Lenglen.

—The big Tabernacle Campaign held recently in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., which for seven weeks stirred the entire Wyoming Valley is still going on in many churches and in the towns round abount. The closing Sunday of the campaign will long be remembered. There were four great meetings during the day, when more than 20,000 were in attendance, the evangelist, George T. Stephens, preaching.

HEALING PRAYER

By Grenville Kleiser

Healing Mind of Christ supreme,
Be Thy thoughts my daily theme;
Teach me how to do Thy will,
Know the Truth and just be still.

Healing Power of Christ profound,
More and more in me abound;
From self-seeking make me free,
Build my life alone in Thee.

Healing Love of Christ divine,
I would make Thee fully mine;
Dwell within me now, I pray,
Keep me strong and brave today.

Healing Word of Christ so dear,
Speak to me that I may hear;
Let my daily life express
Truth and Love and Righteousness.

—A missionary in telling of Christian Endeavor in Arabia, writes: "I am trying it (Christian Endeavor) for the wild and irresponsible Arabs of these parts every Thursday evening. At times I have had Moslems, Orthodox, and Catholics of the Greek Church attending it. The meetings are carried on in three languages, Arabic, Greek, and Latin. The meetings are open to everyone, and we have generally grand times."

—On May 1, the public debt of the United States was $18,941,170,993. During the year, from May 1, 1926, to May 1, 1927 the debt was reduced $1,128,022,017. The public debt reached its highest point August 31, 1919. It was then nearly $26,600,000,000. In less than eight years it has been reduced more than $7,650,000,000.

GRADED CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

There should be enough Christian Endeavor societies in every church to serve all age-groups of young people.

Because Christian Endeavor is adaptable, and because no two situations are exactly alike, there has developed a great variety of Christian Endeavor methods. Societies in different communities use different committees, different prayer-meeting topics, different standards of membership, and undertake different program sof service.

This variety is especially noticeable in regard to the number of societies. Some churches have one society, many have two or three, and increasing hundreds have four, five and more.

In none of these particulars does the United Society of Christian Endeavor seek to exercise authority. The United Society serves as a clearing house of Christian Endeavor information. It gathers the plans of the most successful societies and churches and passes on the suggestions for the benefit of all who are interested. It is primarily a service organization. Experience has shown, however, that the best Christian Endeavor work is done when there are enough societies to care for all ages of young people.

The Church With Five or More Societies

An increasing number of churches are recognizing the value of Christian Endeavor as an agency to give training to all their young people. They are building up a Christian Endeavor program with age-groups corresponding closely to those of the Sunday school. They are seeking to bring into the active, associate, or affiliated membership of Christian Endeavor all young people of the Sunday school and other organizations of the church. In large churches this plan makes necessary five, six, seven, and even more Christian Endeavor societies.

Junior Society—Ages 9, 10, 11

Allowances should be made, of course, for local conditions and individual cases, but if it is desired to include boys and girls below nine years of age, a separate division should be made for them.

Intermediate Society—Ages 12, 13, 14

The age limits of this group should correspond with those of the Intermediate Department of the Sunday school.

Senior Intermediate Society—Ages 15, 16, 17

This group should include the members of the Senior Department of the Sunday school, if there is one. The organization should be that of an intermeidate society with an adult adviser, and the service program and prayer meeting topics should usually be those suggested for Intermediates.

Young People's Society—18 to 23, Inclusive

Many churches have several young people's societies, in the belief that where membership in one group exceeds 75 much of the benefit of individual training is lost. In college communities there are frequently special student Christian Endeavor societies. The top age limit is only suggested for this group when the church also has a Senior Young People's society for the older young people. Christian Endeavor has a definite place and a worthwhile program for the group of 24 years and older.

Senior Young People's Society—24 and Over

Many large churches are finding that this society makes a real contribution to their young people's program. It gives a place for the older young people, including young married couples, and at the same time gives assurance that the members of the Young People's society will have a chance for service and training without too much domination by their elders. It reaches the age-group for whom the lodge and various community social organizations have had such a great appeal, and who, because of this fact, have often been lost to the church. Its program should emphasize fellowship and service for church and community.

The Alumni Council

Every church needs this group, composed of former Endeavorers and friends of Christian Endeavor. An Alumni Council will be found of real service in giving support and encouragement to the young people, in providing leadership for younger groups, in encouraging graduation from the Young People's societies, and in supporting the pastor in the activities of the church. The regular devotional meeting of the Alumni Council should be the mid-week prayer service of the church.

The Church With Three Societies

Junior—11 (or 12) years and under.
Intermediate—12 (or 13) years, inclusive.
Young People's—18 years and over.
Alumni Council—For graduates.

Perhaps only large or well-organized churches can have five or more Christian Endeavor societies, although the number making use of this plan is increasing rapidly.

Nearly every church can have three societies and an Alumni Council. Small churches in the open country, with little equipment and limited leadership, have found, after studying their problem, that it was possible to have at least Junior, Intermediate and Young People's societies. These churches as well as city churches have found that many more young people are attracted to Christian Endeavor when the graded plan is used. Junior superintendents and Intermediate advisers can be secured if the church is determined to have them. Meeting-rooms can be arranged. Young people can nearly always be found. Half a dozen teen-age young people are enough to begin an Intermediate society. They will put on their own membership campaign and will attract many young people who would not belong to a society which includes all ages.

To meet their own needs churches have worked out many combinations of the suggestions given above. Some churches, in communities where there are many teen-age young people, but where most of those who reach 18 go away to college or for employment, have two Intermediate societies but only one Young People's society.—United Society of Christian Endeavor.

DAFFODILS

Elizabeth Kleiser

Bowl of daffodils on my sill,
Bringing sunshine closer still,
From your shrine of "crackle" gray,
Nodding as the light winds play,
Freshly picked from Nature's sod,
Nurtured by the hand of God,
Spreading gladness everywhere,—
Tell me, is that why you wear
A crown of gold?

UNIQUE POEM ON LORD'S PRAYER FOUND ON A BATTLEFIELD

A composition, into which the unknown author uniquely fitted the Lord's Prayer, was found on a battlefield in South Carolina during the Civil War by a brother of Mrs. S. B. Helmer, of Kendallville, Ind. Through an old comrade and very dear friend, a copy of the prized poem came into the hands of Major John W. Russell, of Denver, who loaned it to the Post.

Major Russell values this composition very highly, not only because of its historic features, but also on account of its worthy and beautiful sentiment.

The original of this poem is printed on heavy satin, and is regarded as a literary curiosity. It bears the interesting date of July 4, 1823.

"Thou, to the mercy-seat our souls doth gather,
To do our duty unto Thee, Our Father,
To whom all praise, all honor should be given,
For thou art the great God who art in heaven.
Thou, by thy wisdom, rul'st the world's whole frame,
Forever, therefore, Hallowed be thy name;
Let never more delays divide us from
Thy glorious race, but let Thy kingdom come;
Let thy command opposed be by none,
But thy good pleasure and Thy will be done.
And let our promptness to obey be even
The very same On earth as 'tis in heaven;
Then for our souls, O Lord, we also pray
Thou wouldst be pleased to Give us this day
The food of life, wherewith our souls are fed,
Sufficient raiment, and Our daily bread;
With every needful thing, do thou relieve us,
And to thy mercy, pity And forgive us
All our misdeeds, for him, whom thou didst please
To make an offering for Our trespasses,
And, forasmuch, O Lord, as we believe
That thou wilt pardon us As we forgive,
Let that love teach, wherewith thou dost acquaint us,
To pardon all Those who trespass against us,
And though, sometimes, thou find'st we have forgot
This love to thee, yet help And lead us not
Through soul or body's want to desperation,
Nor let earth's gain drive us Into temptation,
Let not the soul of any true believer,
Fall in the time of trial, But deliver,
Yea, save them from the malice of the devil,
And both in life and death, keep Us from evil;
Thus pray we, Lord, for that of thee, from whom
This may be had, For thine is the kingdom,
This world is of thy work, its wondrous story
To thee belongs The power and the glory
And all thy wondrous works have ended never,
But will remain forever and Forever,
Thus, we poor creatures would confess again,
And thus would say eternally, Amen."

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Hatley

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom has removed from our midst our sister and co-worker, Mrs. Mary J. Hatley, we, the Ladies' Aid Society of Friendship Church, resolve,

1. That we as a band of Christian workers humbly bow to the will of our Father, knowing that He doeth all things well.

2. That we extend to the bereaved family our sincere heartlfelt sympathy.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the county and church papers, a copy recorded on our minutes, and a copy sent to the grief-stricken family.

MRS. M. M. FURR,
MRS. J. HOYLE HATLEY,
MRS. D. W. SIDES.

Pegram

We are reminded very often that God is no respecter of persons. For on last Tuesday, the 10th, He removed our oldest brother of Gideon Grove church, Bro. Harris Pegram. He lived to a ripe old age, being a little over 78 years old; was the father of two sons and four daughters, the sons being J. Wright Pegram, of Guilford College, and Samual A. Pegram, of Stokesdale; daughters, Miss Alice Pegram, of Raleigh; Mrs. Laura Angel, of Stokesdale; Mrs. Eliza Wilson, of Madison, and Miss Era Pegram, of Charlotte. Surviving is an aged wife, Mrs. Mary Pegram, and several grandchildren.

Brother Pegram lived a long and quiet life, being first a member of Flat Rock church. He later moved his membership to become a charter member at Gideon's Grove, which took its name from his grandfather, Gideon Pegram, who once lived at the place of Gideon's Grove church. He lived a quiet and unassuming life, seeing four generations of his people and bore the burden and heat of the day of what we might call pioneer days of the past that called for the strong and sturdy Anglo-Saxons to guide us through the trying times we had to pass 'way back in the 70's and 80's.

Brother Pegram always lived in the same community and was buried at Gideon's Grove church. Brother J. B. Trogdon, assisted by Brother Leftwich and Brother J. D. Williams, conducted the funeral. May the bereaved ones lean on Jesus for comfort and help, realizing that some sweet day they can gather around the great white throne where parting is no more. F. J. L., Reporter.

Male Prisoner—I'd like it if you could postpone my dear wife's term until after I come out.

"No; promise of breeches."

OUR EDUCATIONAL OUTLOOK

Adrian College.—One week before commencement at the Seminary the writer was sent to Adrian College to form a student contact between our colleges and Seminary. About one week was spent on the Adrian campus. It was a busy week, attending base ball games, tennis matches, holding conferences with students, speaking to the various groups, eating in the college hall and "Paling" with students furnished a delightful stay.

Adrian is a beautiful place. The students live as one large family and the best of college spirit exists. Dr. Feeman, president of the instution, has accomplished a wonderful feat since he has been there for the past ten years. Never have I seen students so friendly and thoughtful of a stranger. Before leaving I felt that I was one of the students. At present the college has on a campaign to raise $500,000.00 as an endowment fund. This will mean a great step for Adrian. The latest report is to the effect that the amount will be secured.

Western Maryland College.—The writer took meals in the dining hall of this college while taking work at our Seminary. This is another institution that our church can be justly proud of. One of the leading colleges in the state of Maryland. A good student body along every line.

Our Theological Seminary.—Not the best in the world, but the best for Methodist Protestant ministerial students. Being there during the last semester has given me an outlook that I never dreamed that one could have. I am prouder of our church than ever before. I hope those preparing for the ministry and other religious work will find time to go via the Seminary at Westminster, Md.

With High Point College and our other institutions making progress we are beginning to find ourselves educationally. The outlook is good. Let us make it better.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE

Child of the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina

A Half-Million-Dollar Institution

In the early part of this century, when, under the leadership of Dr. J. F. McCulloch, the question of establishing a college was being discussed, it was proposed to raise fifty thousand dollars for buildings, and fifty thousand dollars for endowment. At a public meeting, held in the courthouse in Greensboro, Dr. Charles D. McIver, president of what was then known as the State Normal and Industrial College, made the statement that if we should carry out our plans our college would be established upon a better basis than any other institution in North Carolina had ever been founded. His own great institution had at the beginning thirty thousand dollars, contributed by the city of Greensboro for buildings, and a nominal sum, I think seven thousand and five hundred dollars a year, appropriated by the Legislature for maintenance.

Our college was not established at that time, as we well know, and when the movement was finally launched, which resulted in the present fine plant, the ideas and values had undergone a complete revolution. The war had resulted in a great deal more money having been put in circulation, and in a decided decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar. We must take into consideration, however, the fact that our ideas were greatly enlarged during the time which followed the first agitation for the establishment of the college. The following statement shows the present value of the college grounds and equipment, as well as the property located in Greensboro. The value of the ground has been placed at one hundred thousand dollars, although one of High Point's leading business men has declared that it is worth double that amount.

General Statement of the Operation of the College

The average cost of operating a college in the United States over and above the income from students is about thirty-nine per cent. That is, it requires the college authorities to get from other sources thirty-nine cents out of every dollar spent in operating their colleges. The past year High Point College had better success than the above. Our deficit was less than fifteen thousand dollars, which included gifts and loans, but after allowing a most liberal deduction for these we have not had to find as much as thirty cents out of each dollar spent in operations.

The total number of registrants was 231. This included art, music and special students.

Our dormitory capacity for girls is 96. for boys, by putting two in a room, 150. We want to fill every room next year. Our number of day students has been over 100 the present year.

Sources of income, other than from students, have been from the Annual Conference, the Board of Education of the General Conference and the North Carolina Board of Education of the Methodist Protestant Church, and private donations.

The charges which the college makes to students are as follows: Board, $180.00 for the year; tuition for the year, $100.00; room rent for the year, $100.00; registration fee for the year, $15.00; the college annual and the Hi-Po, college paper, $6.50. A fee known as laboratory fee is charged students taking a science. This fee depends upon the science taken. Other expenses are made by the student. Some spend much, some less. There is no uniformity. But music, art, and the commercial subjects are specials—that is, they are not included in the regular charge for tuition for academic subjects except where the student does not take literary subjects other than those listed in the business department; there is a charge of $100.00 for tuition for business subjects.

The year just closed has been most successful. The registration was very good, being a most substantial increase over the past year. A class of thirteen members was graduated. A junior class of forty-six is the present senior class for 1928. The registration for next year has been most gratifying. In every way the future looks bright.

The Board of Trustees has been reorganized. R. M. Cox is the chairman. The Finance Committee is composed of G. T. Penny, chairman; J. S. Pickett, Treasurer of the College; J. Norman Wills, J. M. Millikan, and the President of the College. An Executive Committee composed of five gentlemen was also elected. This committee will have the oversight of the buildings and grounds passing upon such improvements as may be needed from time to time together with the improvement of the grounds.

The entire faculty was re-elected and the following new members were added: C. R. Hinshaw, head of the department of Education; Miss St. Claire, teacher of violin and public school music; Mr. Stanley Pugh, head of the Business School; Miss Todd, teacher of Expression and Physical Education.

R. M. Andrews, President.

The WORK and the WORKERS

On Saturday, May 14th, we drove to the parsonage on Davidson and spent the night with Rev. C. S. Ridge and family. Sunday morning we went with him to Chapel Hill church where a splendid circuit rally was held. All the churches of the charge were well represented. The addresses, the recitations, and the music were all good.

I preached to them at 11 a. m. and Mrs. Dixon spoke on missions in the afternoon. The services for the day embraced about two hours in the morning, and something over two hours in the afternoon, and every moment of it was put in in a very interesting and helpful way.

The attendance was large. We congratulate them on their well planned program, and we commend the Circuit Rally plan. Each country circuit will do well to plan such a rally for some one Sunday during the year.

Trip to Washington

Early Monday morning, May 16th, we started for Washington, D. C., to attend the All-Boards Meeting and the Council of Presidents. This meeting was composed of all the presidents of Annual Conferences in the denomination, and nearly all of them were present.

Mrs. W. C. Hammer, Mrs. F. R. Stout and Carolin Stout made the trip with Mrs. Dixon and me in the car, and we had a most delightful trip going and coming. We went by way of Danville and Richmond, and returned by way of Manassas, Lexington and Roanoke. We took time to stop at many points of interest, the most notable of these being the tomb of Robert E. Lee, and also that of Stonewall Jackson, both of which are in Lexington, Va.

The meetings in Washington were very interesting and helpful. I take it an account of these will be published in the church papers.

High Point College Commencement

We were back from Washington in time to attend the greater part of the commencement exercises at the High Point College. This commencement marked a very happy period in the lives and hearts of North Carolina Methodist Protestants. It was very fitting that Dr. Thomas H. Lewis, president of the General Conference, should preach the baccalaureate sermon this year; and he brought a splendid message which was both timely and helpful. The evening service was held in the college chapel, and Dr. R. M. Andrews delivered a very helpful message to the graduating class.

The college has now been running beautifully and successfully for three years, and has graduated its first class, and before it graduated its first class the High Point College was given an A-grade rating by the educational authorities of North Carolina. This, with many other things that have been done in the erection, the equipping, the manning, the running and the rating of High Point College it was thought by many could not be done. But it has been done, and Monday, May 23, 1927, marks another bright spot in the history of Methodist Protestantism in North Carolina. On that day the college chapel was filled with eager, anxious, and happy people from all sections of the state. Judge Isaac M. Meekins delivered a masterful address. Paul S. Kennett in well chosen words delivered the medals, and Dr. R. M. Andrews conferred the degrees upon thirteen young people and thus ended most beautifully the first real commencement exercises of High Point College. To God be all the praise.

Mount Pleasant, North Davidson

At noon on Sunday we ran out to Mount Pleasant church on North Davidson to home-coming and memorial services. After a splendid dinner on the grounds we marched to the cemetery for a brief service, back to the church where we participated in the corner-stone laying for the new church which has been so recently erected at this place. Then I had the pleasure of preaching to a large and very attentive audience. It was truly good to be there.

These people have purchased that part of the property belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and have erected a splendid new church building with splendid equipment for Sunday school work. They are happy in their new quarters, and we predict for them splendid growth and development in the years to come. Rev. R. L. Troxler is the efficient and much loved pastor of this charge.

Financial Statement

We have scarcely been at home at all for the last three weeks, so have been unable to prepare the financial standing of charges for publication. We will endeavor to have it ready for next week's paper.

Children's Day

The Children's Day literature is ready for distribution, and the service this year is to serve a two-fold purpose. It is, of course, to raise money for Foreign Missions, and it is also to be a memorial to Dr. Fred C. Klein, who served so long both in the foreign field and as secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions. Each church and Sunday school should begin at once to prepare for this important service. Order Children's Day supplies from Mrs. F. C. Klein, Berwyn, Md.

Send in order early that you may be sure to have the literature in good time.

College Assessment

The college year has closed and the year was a very successful one. The expenses of the year must be met. Each charge was asked to bear a small part in meeting this expense. We are rejoicing that many of the charges have already sent in this assessment. Let the others send theirs at a very early date, please.

Gipsy Smith tells about the death-bed of his old gipsy aunt who befriended him after his mother's death. "Auntie," he said, as he entered the gipsy wagon where she was lying, "shall I kneel down and ask God to bless you?" "No, my boy," was her answer, "kneel down and thank God because He has blessed me. Tell the people Jesus is a rock in a weary land." "The Christ who came to an old gipsy woman in a wagon is a Christ worth living for."—Selected.

Commencement at High Point College

High Point College has graduated its first class, ten young women and three young men. Many colleges have had smaller graduating classes after years of operation. It is gratifying that our college has had so large an attendance in the very first years of its existence. This fact proves the need of the college and justifies the building of it. The members of the graduating class show marks of culture. Evidently they have been thinking and working.

The commencement sermon by Dr. T. H. Lewis on Sunday was heard by a great congregation in First Church, High Point. The Fig Tree That Withered was the theme of the sermon. The preacher referred to the general law that fruit-bearing is required to satisfy the condition of existence, that life is a probation, and that success is dependent on the right use of its opportunities. Dr. Lewis never fails to interest thoughtful hearers and we are always glad of an opportunity to hear him preach. The commencement address was by Judge Isaac M. Meekins. This was given in the college auditorium on Monday to an audience that filled the room. We have not in a long time heard a finer oration. He described the Ideal Citizen, portraying his tolerance of others, his independence of thought, and his sentiment of justice. He showed himself of the modern school, but plead for toleration of differing views. Scientists and religionists should have no quarrel with each other. Each has only a part of the truth, and all truth belongs to one body. The address was heard with great interest and without realization of the lapse of time.

Music for graduation day was supplied by an orchestra directed by Professor Smith of the music department, and by a young lady soloist.

Professor Paul Kennett announced the giving of a number of medals or prizes by certain friends of the college, and presented medals as follows:

For proficiency in oratory, to Herman E. Coble, of Burlington.

For proficiency as an essayist, to Miss May Frazier, of High Point.

For the best all-around student among the men, to J. E. Carroll.

For the best all-around student among the women, to Miss May Frazier.

The Menace of the Swimming Pool

The moral menace of the swimming-pool was quickly seen and pointed out. It was declaimed against from many pulpits. Perhaps thoughtful and self-respecting young people were deterred, but the pleasure-mad crowd rushed on and in. Now it appears that the swimming-pool has a physical menace as well. Greensboro physicians have been called upon to treat maladies of the nose and throat which they attributed to bathing in common water at the swimming-pools. Would you wash your face at home in water in which other people had washed their feet? Why do it at the swimming-pool? Bah!

—The minutes of our Annual Conference were recorded in a book for years. This has not been done for the last 35 years or more. Steps should be taken by our Annual Conference to have the journals since that time bound into volumes of suitable size and kept in the hands of a custodian. We believe that Brother J. Norman Wills is the custodian of the written records made more than 35 years ago.

Henry Ford as Dancing Master

We see by the papers that Henry Ford has become a dancing master, not in person but by proxy. Some of his representatives were recently in Greensboro to give lessons in dancing as it used to be done. We presume that Mr. Ford has become convinced that there is great evil in the modern dance and that he hopes to lead a movement back to the "old dance." We trust that his motives are good, but we question the correctness of his judgment in this matter. We doubt whether he can find any objection to the modern dance that does not in some degree lie against the old-time dance. The best people of the time objected to the old-time dance as the best people of this time are objecting to the modern dance. Mr. Ford has a large amount of money, but not an unlimited amount, and he will have only a limited time in which to spend his money. We wonder whether he could not find more helpful ways to spend his surplus than in teaching people to dance, either the old way or the new.

THE BIBLE

Born in the East and clothed in Oriental form and imagery, the Bible walks the ways of all the world with familiar feet and enters land after land to find its own everywhere. It has learned to speak in hundreds of languages to the heart of man. It comes into the palace to tell the monarch that he is a servant of the Most High and into the cottage to assure the peasant that he is a son of God. Children listen to its stories with wonder and delight, and wise men ponder them as parables of life. It has a word of peace for the time of peril, a word of comfort for the time of calamity, a word of light for the hour of darkness. Its oracles are repeated in the assembly of the people, and its counsels whispered in the ear of the lonely. The wicked and the proud tremble at its warnings, but to the wounded and the penitent it has a mother's voice. The wilderness and the solitary place have been made glad by it, and the fire on the hearth has lit the reading of its well-worn page. It has woven itself into our dearest dreams; so that love, friendship, sympathy and devotion, memory and hope, put on the beautiful garments of its treasured speech, breathing of frankincense and myrrh. —Selected.

THE MOST DISHONEST OF ALL

Modernism is the most dishonest of all false religions. The others are at least honest enough to have their own publishing houses, their own schools, and their own churches. But not so Modernism. Modernism by fair speeches and under scientific guise has stolen the churches, the schools, and the publishing houses of the orthodox denominations, so that today those denominations are being ruled and wrecked by a modernistic-political machine.—From "Grace and Truth."

—The Christian and Congregational churches were represented in a meeting in Raleigh, N. C., May 4th, to consider a union of the two denominations. Dr. Wm. E. Barton, of Detroit, was present. He is a leader among the Congregationalists. An address was made in favor of the union of all denominations by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College. The Raleigh Christian church has been admitted to the Congregationalist Association of North Carolina while still retaining its adherence to the Christian denomination. With this church the Congregationalist church of Raleigh has united, the two constituting a united church. Strictly speaking, it is this united church that will be represented in both denominational meetings. It will divide its contributions for general purposes between the two general bodies.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

Since the time for holding our Children's Services is so rapidly approaching and since there is the special appeal for a large offering to make possible the construction of the Nagoya College Church as a Klein-Coulbourn Memorial free from indebtedness, I shall give a somewhat detailed account of our work in Japan in the next few articles.

By the way, the new Memorial Church is nearing completion. In a recent communication from the Secretary of our Japan Mission, Miss Evelyn M. Wolfe, she writes as follows: "The Mission is glad to report splendid progress in the erection of the Nagoya School Church. The building is practically enclosed with the exception of the window glass. The Mission feels that it has never had better work done on any building than that which is being done on this one. When the Church is finished it will be a pride to our constituency here and to those in the homeland who have made it possible. It will be a modern plant that will greatly stimulate, we believe, the Christian forces of the school.

"As the building hastens toward completion your Mission is wondering if the necessary funds will be forthcoming when needed."

So we again appeal to every one of our Churches and Sunday schools to use the Children's Day programs and to make a strong appeal for this special offering that the necessary funds for this vitally important enterprise may be forthcoming. Mrs. Mary E. Klein, Merwyn, Md., is anxiously awaiting your orders. Numerous orders have already been received but many have not yet ordered. Please send in at once.

And may I again appeal to those who have made subscriptions for this Church to send in the amount of your subscription so that the earnest call of our missionaries may not be in vain.

The general condition of our work in Japan is most gratifying. The different reports show growth and progress in every department of the work. Our missionaries on the field have been a very busy group of workers. There have also been great zeal and earnestness among the native workers.

The Educational Work

The past year has been one of the very best years in the history of the schools in Yokohama, including the High School, the Primary grades and the Kindergarten. This is due largely to the loyalty and faithfulness of teachers, the heads of the different departments deserving special mention, all of whom are native teachers. What an encouragement to our missionaries on the field as well as those in the homeland to have such consecrated devotion in the work by these native teachers.

It is quite interesting to note, also, that in our High Schools, Primary grades and Kindergartens there are 778 scholars enrolled, with 48 teachers, 40 of whom are Christian.

Of the Tokyo Blind School Rev. E. I. Obee writes, "Tokyo Blind School has had quite a satisfactory year. The students have been regular in attendance and diligent in their work. The teachers have worked with zeal and ability. Usually the graduates begin to work at once but this year several will continue with us for a special course of study. There are thirty students enrolled in our school for the blind with eight teachers, all of whom are Christian.

"Nagoya College enjoyed an attendance of 1,115 students the past year. Of this number 192 graduated at Commencement Exercises held March 3. I will let President J. Clyde Auman tell his own story of the work of the College. "There has been a full attendance at the College during the past year. One of the best since I have been here, I think. Outside of the regular class work there has been a good attendance at all the Bible classes. Hardly think we could expect so good an attendance in Christian America among boys of the same age.

"I have been very much impressed by a few of our boys who zealously have kept up morning prayer meeting through all kinds of weather. Just as regularly as the days have come and gone a few boys have met every morning thirty minutes before chapel services for their 'morning watch.'

"Of the one hundred and ninety-two graduates there were about thirty baptized Christians. The percentage is small from the way we would look at it in the homeland but the thirty baptized does not tell the full story of our work by any means. A great many of our graduates become baptized Christians after they have left school and they have had a good opportunity to fully assimilate this new conception of life as revealed through our Lord and Savior. Just a few days ago I was told by a graduate of our school, who is now in a higher school, that out of the twenty members of the Y. M. C. A. of that school all were graduates of Nagoya College except three." S. W. Rosenberger.

DOES YOUR CHURCH HAVE ANY PROBLEMS?

In your local church, do you have any problem? Do you need a larger group of workers? Do you need better-trained workers? If these things are true of your church, one of the wisest things that can be done is for you or someone from your church to attend the Young People's Summer Conference at High Point College, High Point, N. C., July 18-24. This conference may not fully solve your problems; but in this conference you will receive that kind of aid and instruction which will greatly benefit you and you will go back to your local church better prepared to tackle your problems. I feel safe in making this statement because we have secured a very competent faculty.

Just a partial list of the faculty members is here given—the list will be completed in another article: Our own Dr. Forlines will be with us again. We also have for our benefit and profit the competent and faithful service of the following: Dr. T. M. Johnson, Dr. A. G. Dixon, Rev. N. G. Bethea, Rev. E. L. Ballard, Rev. L. W. Gerringer, Mrs. H. A. White, Miss Eunice Long. Each of these is a specialist in some phase of church activity and to sit in their class-room during this conference only means that you will become more effective in some line of church work.

Have you registered for this conference? We want 1,500 registrations and we will reach our goal if you will register and get others to do the same. Give your name and registration fee to the registration agent in your church, or send them to Rev. N. M. Harrison, Littleton, N. C.

Have you spoken a good word for this conference? "Let's all work together in all kinds of weather" to make this the largest and best conference in the history of the work, not that any member of the Board may receive praise, but that our youth may be better trained for leadership and that the Name of Him, Whose we are and Whom we serve, may be praised and glorified.

Fred W. Paschall, President of Board.

"Shut in with Christ, oh, wonderful thought!
Shut in with the peace that his sufferings brought!
Shut in with the love that wields the rod!
Oh, company blest! shut in with God!"

A SECRET OF IMPRESSIVE AND EFFECTIVE ADDRESS

By Rev. Luther K. Long

Pastor Lippincott was in the pulpit for the first time since "the fall." Four weeks previous to this time, while on the steep roof of the veranda at the parsonage, he had become dizzy, made a mis-step, and gone to the hard ground, striking violently on his back. He was badly shaken up, several ribs were broken, and for a number of hours he was in a dazed, semi-conscious condition.

Naturally, for more than two weeks, he suffered much pain and discomfort. The neighbors and church people generally were exceedingly kind during his confinement to the house and yard, ministering in many thoughtful ways to his necessity and comfort. When he was sufficiently recovered to go out to a Sunday morning service the folks were much pleased to have him speak, though his discourse was of necessity brief.

He took for his text the words of Peter in response to a question which the Master—at the time when many of his followers went back and walked no more with him—had asked of the twelve. "Will ye also vo away?" was the question of Jesus. And Peter, speaking for the twelve, had answered, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

"Today," began Pastor Lippincott, "in case a follower of Jesus thinks of turning back from him and from his church, there is in this whole wide world no satisfactory person or organization to which he can go.

"He cannot go back to Judaism," continued the pastor, "after having known Christ—that system has had its day, it is outworn and outgrown. He cannot turn to any of the other great non-Christian faiths, for these are unable at the present time to satisfy even their own people who have never known anything better. Fraternal organizations cannot meet the need. It is well for a man to hold membership in a good lodge, but a lodge is not primarily a religious institution, and it does not set out to do the work of the church. Some Christians have gone back to 'the world'—they have 'backslid'—but the world's pleasures and follies, its emoluments and honors do not, and cannot, satisfy."

"We need," concluded Pastor Lippincott. "to go to Jesus. We are led to him as a satisfying source of help because of several considerations: (1). Sin. There is something wrong with us, and we need Jesus to help us get right with ourselves and with God, with our fellow-men and with the situations and the problems of life. (2). Trouble and sorrow. We need Jesus to bring sympathy, comfort, and strength, and to show us how to give out as well as to receive. (3). The work of life. Jesus can supplement our weak powers and guide us by his supreme wisdom. No plan of life is perfect with him left out. (4). The end of life. The future is clear only in Jesus. 'There is no dark valley.' Having him with us, 'At evening time it shall be light.' "

The service was unusually interesting and impressive. A number of persons spoke of the message: "It was helpful to me;" "It did me good;" "I was glad to hear that." "It was so clear and good," remarked a visitor from the city; and her hostess added with feeling, "Pastor Lippincott always has something good, and he never fails to express himself clearly."

Why was the service, including the brief discourse, thus regarded as unusually interesting and impressive; and why did more people than was usual speak of it?

Well, the minister had spoken on an important Christian theme. He had been thoughtful, clear, progressive, and forceful—though he was not able to speak with a strong voice. Also, he had been absent from the pulpit for several weeks, and the congregation were pleased to see him, and they were gratified at his being so well on the way to complete recovery. But I have not yet used the most inclusive and truly significant word. What is that word?

A popular writer of fiction was asked concerning the ingredients of the story, in the order of their importance. After pondering the question he replied: "Probably, they are humanness, treatment, and idea."

It is probable that Pastor Lippincott, had he been asked to speak concerning the ingredients of the sermon, would have reversed this order—saying, "The ingredients of the sermon in the order of their importance are: Idea, treatment and humanness." He was generally recognized as a man of good "ideas" which he could "treat" with clearness and strength. He was also thoroughly "human:" but that quality would come third in the list. He did not think so much of its importance and, to the members of his congregation, it had not stood out as did the other two.

On this particular Sunday morning the pastor was altogether human. That quality was in the foreground. Idea and treatment, though adequate, were subordinate. He had suffered. His step was not firm, he could not breathe deeply without pain, his voice was not strong—though it was clear and entirely audible. He had been the recipient of many favors from the people, and a gentle, kindly light was in his eye. His text: "Lord, to whom shall we go?" sounded as though he meant to admit that he also was compassed with infirmity and needed help. Yes, the minister was entirely human that Sunday morning, and so was his discourse, and the people felt it and entered into full sympathy with him.

I think that hereafter Pastor Lippincott, while continuing to give due prominence to "idea" and "treatment," as important ingredients of the sermon, will give more adequate place to "humanness"—that quality so necessary as a background, a fore-ground, and a permeating spirit, if the other qualities are to be fully effective.

"IT COSTS TO GO TO CHURCH"

A prosperous looking couple sat behind us in church. The choir had rendered a splendid musical program. The preacher was a well educated Presbyterian preacher. The church was new and modern in all its appointments. The pipe organ was unusually fine. The morning worship was proceeding. The pastor announced the collection. Then we overheard the man say to his wife: "It costs money to go to church." The wife replied: "It sure does." This aroused our curiosity and maybe something else. We watched the collection plate as it passed. The man dropped in a dime. The woman gave nothing. It cost them ten cents, or five cents apiece. Yet they were right when they said "it costs money to go to church." The church equipment cost not less than $100,000. The pipe organ must cost $15,000. The choir was trained and paid. People paid $2.50 per seat for no better music. The preacher was educated. He spent four years in college and three years in the theological seminary. Back of this was the sacrifice and service of our forefathers. Back of this was the suffering of those who had preserved the truth. Back of it all was the cost which Christ paid. The church is a costly thing, but it does not cost some of us very much.—Selected.

HUMILITY OF MIND

Be content to lose the idea of thine own importance; cease to be wrapped up in the contemplation of thine own claims and rights. Be not counting on the honors to be rendered thee, hour by hour, from this man and that. Shrink into non-importance, a simple servitor, whose business it is to do, to suffer, and to give thanks. You will then have entered the very path trodden by the LORD JESUS CHRIST.—Bowen.

REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN

Below is given a list of the registrations turned in thus far. On account of the short notice the preachers had in which to get in their registrations and the further fact that some of them had already given their registrations to the agent of one of their churches I am waiting until next week to give the list and percentage of preachers registered.

There is a close run between Whitakers church and Bethesda church, Halifax circuit. They are tied; each having 22 registrations. Concord has three. West End, Greensboro; Asheboro; Saxapahaw; Flat Rock, Vance Circuit; State Street, Lexington; Efland; Friend's church, Albemarle come in for two each. Enfield, Union Chapel, Granite Circuit, and Henderson church have one each.

Total registrations to date 63. A list of the registrants will appear in a later issue.

"I WAS IN PRISON"

A young prisoner in a North Carolina county prison camp not so very long ago listened to some talks made by an uneducated man of a nearby town who had been attending revival services, thought that he had gotten religion and decided that he should preach to the convicts. The substance of the man's talk was that the convicts being held against their will, and that they had done nothing worse than any other person and that they should not be held in the camp. The young boy, who, it must be said, did not have the blessing of average intelligence, acting on the information handed out to him, decided to leave the camp. Since he was a trusty this was not difficult, and he repaired to a nearby farmhouse to get a suit of clothes. The farmer, seeing his felon's stripes, told him to stand still, and when the man started to run, he used his shotgun on him with good effect, for afterward it took the county physician quite a time to extract 72 pieces of shot from his back.

The State Board of Charities and Public Welfare has for a number of years tried to encourage in every way the active interest of ministers and members of the various churches, in the spiritual welfare of the prisoners. In many instances, regular services have been given at the jails and prison camps, but this has been the exception rather than the rule.

The rather unique incident given above shows clearly the danger of letting an unintelligent person air his views on a group of prisoners.

Certainly if there is a group of persons in any county now, desirous of doing an interesting piece of rehabilitation work, it might turn its attention toward working out a plan. In one county the only services which the convicts get are conducted by two ex-preachers now serving terms who take turn about in preaching to their fellow convicts. It may be good exercise for the preachers, but it would seem that they were in need of a bit of advice themselves.

In some cases the superintendents of the camps have stated that interest in the prison camps by church groups and ministers has died out. In several exceptional cases, some fine work has been done through a kind of a night school. But in most of our small camps and jails the prisoner is still the "forgotten man." But when it comes to practicing practical Christianity is there any place where is there more need for spiritual and mental stimulus and development than in a chain-gang or a jail? Go and see your own and then see what can be done. Those men on the chaingangs have little leisure time—but when they have a bit and may be lectured and preached to—it would seem that we should see to it that those who let loose their ideas on a group which listen should be a little higher than un-balanced and uneducated laymen, or convict-preachers. To look after this problem would not require money, it would require a little human effort and energy—and at least, it could hardly result in harm.—Public Welfare Progress.

INTERRACIAL CONFERENCE

The white and colored church women of Philadelphia and neighboring cities have just closed an interracial conference at the Woolman School here which many of those present said gave them a new vision of goodwill and peaceful adjustment between the two races. There were thirty delegates in attendance—seventeen white and thirteen colored—representing the Y. W. C. A. and women's societies in ten denominations in the Philadelphia area; also a representative from the State Department of Public Welfare and one from the Philadelphia Department of Public Welfare.

In its findings the Conference urged that the attention of various religious groups be called "to the need for a changed attitude on the part of white employers toward colored labor," and that "an effort should be made to bring about better attitudes on the part of white workers toward colored fellow-workers in the same industry."

Pronunciation of "Route"

This word is derived from the French and is correctly pronounced "root." The pronunciation "rout" riming with "out" prevails in some sections, but the French pronunciation is gaining favor and is given as preferred in all good dictionaries. The same principle applies to "route" in such phrases as "route march" and "route step" as used in the army. In these phrases the word is "route," not "rout," as popularly supposed.

—Abbe Cambout, a missionary and biologist of Madagascar, has been performing some experiments on butterflies which have caused a stir among the members of the French Academy of Science. The abbe found that when butterflies are beheaded in a certain manner they continue to live. In fact some of the decapitated insects lived longer than those not beheaded. The success of the experiment, it is believed, can be attributed largely to a bloodless method of decapitation which the biologist has developed.

—"The children of North Carolina are the most important thing in the State, and more than any other asset or resource they ought to be developed and conserved for North Carolina."—Dr. T. W. Wood, Columbia University.

—W. M. Shuford, for many years steward at the State School for the Deaf at Morganton, has been elected head of the new Junior Orphan Home at Lexington, which will be formally dedicated May 27 and 28, and opened shortly thereafter.

BALLOON ALTITUDE RECORD

An altitude of 41,000 feet (nearly eight miles) was claimed by Capt. Hawthorne C. Gray, balloon pilot in a test at Scott field, Ill. At 40,000 feet, according to Capt. Gray, it seemed as if the "ceiling" (limit) for the balloon had been reached, but by dropping his two oxygen tanks overboard on a parachute he managed to go 1000 feet higher. Here the temperature was 60 degrees below zero (Fahrenheit).

"The only part of my body that felt cold," said Capt. Gray, "was the back of my head." The balloon remained stationary at 41,000 feet. A pain in the chest, due to the rarefied air, caused Capt. Gray to descend. He came down so fast that he jumped with his parachute from 8000 feet.

If the 41,000-foot mark is confirmed it will be a record for free balloons (although light captive balloons without human occupants have ascended 11 miles). For a quarter of a century the free balloon record has been 35,000 feet, set by Germans.

The altitude record for airplanes is 41,645 feet and was made by Callizo, an Italian flying for France, in 1926. Macready, the highest flying American aviator, quit the army without equaling Callizo's record. Macready's best official record was 38,740 feet, made in 1926.

—Andreas Csida, five years old, came to this country from Austria all by himself. Before he left he was instructed to tell no one where he carried his traveling papers. When the boy arrived in New York the customs officials asked to see his papers. "I have my papers," the boy replied, "but you can't see them. I was told not to let anyone know where they are." When the officials couldn't make the boy tell they proceeded to search him. The papers were found sewn in the lining of his coat. Andreas came over to join his mother who lives in Chicago.

—Lindberg, an American aviator whose mother lives in Detroit, has accomplished the astonishing feat of flying from New York to Paris in less than 34 hours. He went alone and of course had to remain awake and guide his machine and bring it down to landing when he arrived. He was so sleepy when he arrived that he fell asleep on his feet before he could get to a bed. Such feats are not likely to become common; they are too difficult and too dangerous and of too little practical value. It is like walking a tight rope across Niagara Falls.

—Wool cloth contains about 25 threads down and 25 across to the inch, so that a square yard is composed of 1,800 threads, each a yard long. Linen and cotton goods have 80 to 100 threads each way to the inch. Thus a single handkerchief may contain 2,400 strands each 15 inches long, or 1,000 yards of cotton thread. A shirt represents about three miles of thread.—Dearborn Independent.

—Attorneys for one of the parties to a recent divorce suit in Hastings, Nebraska, had to interrupt their client before she finished answering a question put to her. IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Capps

Andrew Jackson Capps, member of Company H, 15th regiment, Confederate States army, and well known in all of Alamance county, passed away at his home in Alamance county May 9, 1927. He was born December 21, 1843.

For the past 25 years the deceased had lived literally in a buggy, and had been a familiar figure at reunions, conventions and other outdoor meetings which he attended. His semi-invalidism was the result of a paralytic stroke.

When the war between the states loomed big in the nation and broke with fury, Andrew Capps was a youth of 17. He was among the first boys to volunteer, and served gallantly throughout the four years struggle. When the war was over he became a farmer, and was active until stricken.

The funeral was conducted at Mt. Hermon M. P. church, May 11, 1927, by J. Elwood Carroll, pastor, assisted by Rev. S. W. Taylor, pastor of the First M. P. church, Burlington, N. C. Brother Capps bequeathed one thousand dollars to Mt. Hermon church, of which amount five hundred is to be used on the cemetery and the other five hundred to be spent on the church building. Andrew united with Mt. Hermon church while a young man but made a more notable change in his later days.

Surviving besides his wife, Mrs. Hanna J. Capps, are the following daughters and sons: Mrs. H. M. Holt, Mrs. W. M. Mann, Mrs. S. B. Martin, Mrs. C. P. Sheppard, Mrs. Eugene Sykes, William Capps, Henry J. Capps, all of Alamance county, Mrs. W. L. Moser of Greensboro, Mr. C. W. Capps of Altavista, Va., also 48 grand-children and 27 great-grand children, and one half brother, P. A. Capps, route 7, Burlington, and Mrs. M. F. Cullers, a half sister.

J. ELWOOD CARROLL, Pastor.

Pegram

Pleasant Harris Pegram died May 10, 1927, aged 78 years, three months, 25 days. In 1871 he was married to Miss Mary E. Lasley. To this union were born six children, two sons and four daughters, all of whom with the mother survive him, with a number of grandchildren. In early life he became a member of Flat Rock Church, and later became a charter member of Gideon's Grove church and remained one until God called him from us. He had been in feeble health for two or three years and for the year had been confined to his room, and for a few months to his bed, but he never murmured or complained. His companion said he was the best patient she ever saw. How patient the saints of the Lord even in affliction and what a joy to feel our loved ones have gone to live with our Savior; may each one left behind so live that when life's work is done they too can go to live with that happy band. The last words were spoken at Gideon's Grove, by the writer, Brother Leftwich, M. E. pastor, and Brother J. D. Williams from Greensboro, N. C.

JOEL B. TROGDON, Pastor.

Lemons

William Pleasant Lemons died April 14, 1927, aged 66 years, nine months and seven days. In 1881 he was married to Miss Julia Godsy. To this union were no children born, but their home has been a nursery for some of their near relatives. In 1881 Brother Lemons professed faith in Jesus Christ and joined the M. E. Church at Mt. Zion; later he removed to Flat Rock church and remained till God called him home. Brother Lemons was a good husband, a kind neighbor. He always attended to his own business and let other people alone. He was strictly honest and a hard worker. He never engaged in frivolity. He was a smith by trade and is greatly missed in his community. He often spoke to his pastor about getting ready to die. On the 15th of April his funeral was conducted by his pastor assisted by Rev. W. F. Kennett and Brother Leftwich, the M. E. pastor, at Goshen church. He leaves behind his companion, one brother and one sister and many friends to mourn his passing.

May the good Lord lead those he has left behind until they all be gathered together on the hillsides of glory.

JOEL B. TROGDON, Pastor.

Thorp

John W. Thorp died April 24, 1927, aged 82 years and seven days. He is survived by three children, Mrs. M. E. Burnett, Summerfield, N. C., Mr. R. F. Goolsby, High Point, N. C., Mr. R. T. Thorp of Cedar Falls, N. C., 18 grand-children, 25 great-grand-children, and one sister. Brother Thorp has been a faithful member of Flat Rock church most all his life, and every one speaks of him as being a true Christian. He was confined to his room for over five months but he was always talking about the life on the other side where his suffering would cease. He spoke of it as going Home after a long visit here below, but said to his friends and loved ones he would never come to see them here any more. He selected the text from which he asked the writr to preach his funeral. 1 John 3:1-2.

Brother Albright, pastor of the M. E. church, assisted in the service and he was laid to rest in the cemetery at that place.

He has gone from us but his influence will go on to bless the world. May the dear Lord lead his children and all until they meet him again where parting will be no more.

JOEL B. TROGDON, Pastor.

MAN AND THE MISSISSIPPI

Great rivers, usually the indispensable servants of man, become terrifying monsters at times. Floods are among the natural catastrophes that have wrought the greatest destruction among the lives and the works of the human race. The Mississippi, like other great rivers, is subject to such floods; one of the most remarkable of the long succession of them has occured this spring.

It is the nature of the Mississippi, which, through the lower part of it course flows through low-lying land, to overflow its banks in the spring and deposit the rich alluvial silt that its current carries on the surface of the ground. That is the origin of the fertile cotton land that borders the river in Mississippi, Arkansas and Louisiana. But the yearly floods of the Mississippi in the past left great areas swampy, pestilential, unfit for human life; and ever since the settlements reached the banks of the great river, men have dreamed of confining its waters between artificial banks or levees and of reclaiming millions of acres of this water-logged land for their own use.

How much money and how much labor they have spent in this long battle with the river we do not know. Fifteen years ago one authority said that the national government had spent over two hundred millions of dollars on the Mississippi and its chief tributaries; and another one estimated that the government had spent since the Civil War less than half of what the states or local communities had spent. Levee building was undertaken in an especially systematic way under the direction of able engineers after the great flood of 1882; and for many years the levee builders seemed to be keeping ahead of the river. But within the past fifteen years destructive floods have recurred with increasing frequency. The trouble is that levees cause the river to deposit its silt in its own bed instead of on the adjacent land, as it used to do. So the bed keeps rising, the levees must keep rising too, and at last the river flows along, elevated many feet higher than the land on either side, and confined only by artificial man-made banks.

These banks usually serve their purpose well, but under exceptional strains some of them do crumble and break, and then we have the kind of disaster that has lately shocked the country. There is reason to fear that the levee system may eventually reach the limit of its effectiveness, if it has not already done so; that it may end by raising the bed of the Mississippi so far above its natural level that no banks, however solidly constructed, can restrain it in time of flood. That would be a blow to the prosperity of the river country, for it would mean the return of great areas of highly cultivated land to unproductive swamp and jungle.

Not every engineer believes that this is what is going to happen to the lower Mississippi valley. Some of them are sure the levees will continue to confine the river for an indefinite period if they are built with increasingly solidity and kept in perfect repair. but it is bound to be a costly fight, and there will be occasions at least when the river will prove too strong for all its carefully constructed bonds. One interesting suggestion, of which we shall hear more in the future, is for the use of artificial lakes or reservoirs along the course of the Mississippi and some of its great tributaries. Into these reservoirs it would be the plan to turn the flood waters in the spring and to impound them there until the danger is past. The strain on the levees farther south would thus be diminished, and the likelihood of their collapse would be correspondingly reduced. There are engineering problems and difficulties aplenty in connection with this idea, but none that seem fatal to it. It may be that in the end man will find it easier and safer to control the Father of Waters by humoring him and beguiling him, in this way, than by trying to curb him strictly within the narrow limits of an inadequate channel.—Youth's Companion.

Firearms Ban. Starting May 10, the mails were closed to revolvers and other weapons capable of being concealed on the person unless consigned to authorized persons.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

High Point.—An event, noteworthy and of far-reaching significance not only in the history of the Methodist Protestant church of North Carolina, but in the life of this young city of High Point as well, occurred during the past few days, the close of three years' work and the graduation of the first class from High Point College. A College founded on Christian principles by Christian people, where things that are "pure, lovely, and of good report" are taught by Christian men and women, is like unto "a city set upon a hill," a beacon light to all the surrounding community, sending out an influence of culture, high thinking and worthwhile purpose in the lives of young people that will live as long as life shall last. With this first Commencement and conferring of degrees the College has begun to make this influence felt in the world. Representing as it does the toil, sacrifice, patience, and love of those who made it possible, the College stands as a monument to their faith and prayers of many years, and they may well be happy to see the fruition of their hopes and the realization of their dreams.

"The heights by great men reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

On Sunday at 11 o'clock a large congregation greeted Dr. Thomas H. Lewis, the venerable and honored President of the General Conference when he rose to deliver the Commencement Sermon. Dean P. E. Lindley delivered the Invocation, and the Scripture Lesson was read by Dr. A. G. Dixon. The choir sang a beautiful anthem, "The Path of Life" by Gaines, and Miss Dorothy Hoskins rendered a lovely vocal solo, "Come, Dearest Lord." Miss Hoskins is a pupil at the College. It was truly a novel and impressive scene in the First church, when the procession of students, the thirteen seniors robed in classic caps and gowns at the head, advanced to the pews reserved for them in the centre tier. The serious manner, but eager, fresh young faces of these 200 students were an inspiration to the congregation, and many blessings were silently invoked for happiness and success for these promising young lives.

Dr. Lewis selected his text from Mark 11:12-13, the Parable of the Barren Fig tree, and pleaded with the young people not to lead idle, barren lives, but to begin at once to engage in worthy tasks, and to render service in the world's work. He declared that he was not able to tell the members of the graduating class how to succeed in business or the professions, but the only story he could tell them was that of the Great Saviour of mankind, Jesus Christ. The congregation count themselves happy to have had this opportunity of hearing another forceful message from this beloved leader, who is now serving his third term as President of General Conference, and who though rather feeble, came all the way from his home in Washington City to deliver this beautiful message on such an auspicious occasion.

At 6:45 P. M. Sunday evening a beautiful and impressive Vesper service was held on College Campus in which all the seniors joined led by Miss May Frazier. Three talks on Faith, Hope and Love were made by W. M. Loy, O. C. Loy, Jr., both of Burlington, and Miss Ethel Blackwelder of Concord. "Whispering Hope" was beautifully rendered by a quartet, Misses Eugenia Williams, Jewel Hughes, Margaret Perry, and Ethel Blackwelder. This service was followed at 8 o'clock by the Baccalaureate Sermon by President R. M. Andrews, who made a touching farewell to the senior class.

Salem, Saxapahaw Charge.—On May 6 Salem church began the centenary celebration as Salem has been in existence one hundred years and perhaps longer than this. This was the first centennial service to be held in any of the Methodist Protestant churches of North Carolina.

On Friday night was the first service. The program began with Miss Minnie Thompson presiding with the Bell Thompson Mission Band; they rendered a very interesting program. We were glad to welcome the Orange Chapel Mission Band at this time.

Saturday, May 7, which was the most interesting day of all, began with devotional by Rev. D. A. Highfil. One Hundred Years of Service by Rev. G. W. Holmes. In this he told the early recollection of the church and what it had done. Prof. H. C. Stout spoke on the Future Development of the Church.

Some early recollections of the church by Mr. J. N. Thompson.

Character sketches of Prof. J. A. W. Thompson by Rev. J. D. Williams, D. D.

Character Sketches of Rev. John Paris, D. D.

Salem in the Tomorrow by Mr. L. F. Durham.

Twentieth Century Evangelism by Rev. S. W. Taylor.

The noon hour began with devotional by Rev. T. F. McCulloch.

Our Young People and the Future Church by Rev. J. Elwood Carroll.

A History of Our Educational Work and Our Outlook at High Point College by Dr. R. M. Andrews.

Saturday night the W. F. M. S. delivered a pageant titled "Girlhood in Many Lands." The house was well filled.

Sunday began with a large crowd present, which more than filled the house. Song and devotional by Mr. H. G. Paris. Early Development of the M. P. church by Rev. W. F. Kennett.

The Centennial Sermon was preached by Rev. A. G. Dixon the subject, "One Hundred Years of Christian Service."

The noon hour began with song and devotional by Rev. C. C. Lindly. Address by Dr. W. S. Alexander.

Sunday night ended the centennial program. Sermon by Rev. H. S. B. Thompson.

All the speeches and addresses were interesting and appropriate for the occasion.

It seems that Rev. John Paris, D. D., was praised more than any one else because that he was among one of the first men of Salem church and did much for the N. C. Methodist Protestant Conference.

OLA PARIS, Reporter.

Henderson.—The Philathea Class held a very interesting meeting, April 30th in their class room; the president, Mrs. C. F. Tanksley, Jr., presiding. Many reports were given by the standing and special committees, showing a great deal of active work being done by the members. After the transacting of the general business of the class, we were dismissed by prayer and adjourned to the basement where delicious home-made ice cream was served by the hostesses: Mrs. P. E. Renn, Mrs. Ralph Burroughs, and Mrs. Flora Wilson.

Mothers' Day was observed at the church, Sunday, May 8th. A most impressive and well fitted sermon was preached by our pastor, Rev. R. A. Hunter.

Thursday night, May 12th the Young Ladies' League held their regular business meeting with Mrs. R. A. Hunter. The president, Mrs. Annie Mae McIntosh, presiding. The general business routine was carried out and favorable reports from all committees given. The program was the study of "Japan" which was given by Mrs. Clyde L. Finch. At the close of which the hostess served a lovely ice course.

We had a splendid attendance at Sunday school yesterday and hope it will continue. Several classes having perfect attendance. At the eleven o'clock services we enjoyed a most inspiring sermon on "The Fundamental Doctrines". The congregations were also favored by a solo, by Mrs. McMiles.

Friends and relatives here were shocked when last Monday news came of the death of Mrs. Jesse H. Page. She was one of the oldest members of our local church and greatly loved and esteemed by all who knew her. The funeral services were held Wednesday morning, May 11th, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. R. Gooch. Her pastor, Rev. R. A. Hunter, assisted by Rev. H. B. Porter of the local M. E. church, conducted the services.

The deceased was the daughter of Rev. W. H. Wills, who was several times president of the M. P. Conference. She was also a sister of Rev. Richard H. Wills. Her loss will be greatly felt, but truly, "our loss will be her gain."

Mr. A. E. Smerdon who has been at Watt's Hospital for three weeks continues quite ill, we regret to report.

MRS. CLYDE L. FINCH.

Charlotte, First Church.—Sunday night brought a close to the three weeks' services at the tent with Gypsy Smith, Jr., the evangelist. Mr. Smith brought some wonderful messages of the Gospel to the many thousands who attended. We feel there has been much and lasting good accomplished. A number reconsecrated themselves to God and those who had never made any profession. On Friday night Mr. Smith talked to several thousand people on the subject, "From the Gypsy tent to the Pulpit."

Our Sunday school is making progress. Average attendance and collection far ahead of last year.

The W. F. M. S. held their first meeting of the new missionary year Wednesday afternoon, the 18th, at the parsonage with Mrs. Surratt hostess. Mrs. B. W. Little had charge of devotional. A contest was interesting, using questions from the "Question Box" of the Missionary Records. Mrs. J. H. McCall answered the most questions. Mrs. Stikeleather gave an interesting report of the Branch meeting. Mrs. R. S. Garmon presided. Several made pledges for year. Mrs. Surratt served ice cream and cake.

The W. H. M. S. will meet Tuesday evening with the president, Mrs. J. J. Faulk, out at her country home. This society is small but always ready and willing for any work. Mrs. L. M. Harward will have charge of devotionals.

A committee is preparing for the Children's Day program to be held in June.

Mrs. Z. M. Rea's condition continues about the same.

The Ladies' Aid Society gave a play, "Deacon Dubbs" which was very good. A nice little sum was realized for the treasury. They are planning to give it again at an early date.

Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Coe, Mrs. L. W. Jobe and son Frank, Mr. C. F. Coe and Mrs. S. F. Coe of Greensboro visited Mr. and Mrs. Surratt recently. REPORTER.

Weaverville Charge.—The work moves forward. We could do greater things, there is room for improvement, there are many problems; still the work moves onward. The interest in kingdom service is not as earnest as it should be, yet the attendance upon the church services is rather encouraging. It would be a happy day for a pastor and his people if all church members had the interest in the work of the church which they should have. .

Last Wednesday night marked the closing of our revival in the Weaverville church which had been running eleven days. Brother J. M. Morgan, Falston charge, did the preaching in a very satisfactory way, Brother Morgan made many friends while with us, not only with our denomination but with the other churches as well. We did not accomplish the things that we had hoped to, but are thankful for what visible results we had; there were fourteen conversions, during the meeting, and the church was greatly revived. The writer feels that the spiritual part of the church has been greatly revived. Last night we opened the doors of the church, received five on profession of faith and one by letter, making a total of six, and there are still others that say they are going to unite with us. Friends, pray for us that we may lead these new converts in the way that Christ would have them go.

The first Sunday in June we begin our special meeting at Clark's Chapel, Brother T. E. Pierce, High Point, N. C., coming to us. Let me ask of the Herald readers that you remember us in your prayers the first week in June that God may so use Brother Pierce in our service that many souls will be born into his kingdom. Our Christian Endeavor has been meeting in the homes of the members for the last few Sunday evenings which proves to be very interesting and all seem to enjoy it fine. The attendance was fine last night when we met in the home of Brother Albert Eller. There had been a splendid program arranged which was enjoyed by every one.

We held our second quarterly conference at Mt. Zion church on the 10th of April at 8:00 p.m. The churches were all represented and the business of the conference was transacted in a spirit of love and harmony; the reports were very encouraging. Sunday schools are going with good interest at all churches. Mt. Zion has added to the looks of the church by placing two new doors at the front, repairing the windows, placing new glass where it was needed, and painting the fence around the cemetery, all which adds greatly to the appearance of the church.

Brethren, I am serving one of the most faithful little charges in the conference and they are a delightful people to serve. Pray that I may be directed by the Holy Spirit that I may be a worthy leader of the flock.

J. D. CRANFORD, Pastor.

Mt. Zion, Pinnacle Charge.—Brother Hunter preached Sunday night. Brother O. P. Jones, assistant superintendent, was in charge of school Sunday in the absence of Brother S. T. Lane, superintendent. Sunday school is increasing every way now, we are glad to say.

The Woman's Missionary Society is alive and doing real work; they held their regular meeting immediately after Sunday school with a good attendance.

One of the things that was so very much appreciated they sent a nice new bundle of clothing to home of C. W. Allen including bed sheets, shirts for boys, dress and aprons for Mrs. Allen, towls, soap, handkerchiefs, pillow cases and several other things altogether we estimate the goods are worth $12 or $15.00.

All this came just at a time when Mrs. Allen and I had begun to wonder just what we would do. Our sick boy takes the full time of one all the time and both of us part of the time. No chance to sew any, no nothing to buy anything, to sew, and grocery and Doctor's bill mounting every week. Things were looking somewhat blue but we are very thankful that these good women had inspiration from the great Giver of all gifts to be so thoughtful of our needs. We hope to repay in some way, some day, and pray God's blessings on every one participating in this act of kindness.

In due respect to the Women's Missionary Society I am enclosing a letter which was duly prepared and came with package of goods I ask that it be printed in the Herald.

C. W. ALLEN, Reporter.

To Our President, Mrs. C. W. Allen:

We, the members of the Women's Missionary Society of Mt. Zion, wish to try to express to you, in this trying time you are going through, in a small part our sincere sympathy for you. We know these gifts are but a little token, and of course the value very small, but for you to know they come from hearts full of love and sympathy for you is our true aim. We trust the good Lord may see fit to soon restore health to your dear little boy. We miss you and family in church so much. May the Lord bless each of you is our prayer.

The Woman's Missionary Society, Mt. Zion.

Davidson Circuit, Pine Hill.—Today was a fine day with us. Brother Ridge preached a wonderful sermon, and the first sermon in our new church. We had several visiting members Sunday: Brother Ben Lanier and son and family of High Point; also Mr. Leach Lanier and family of Handy, Mr. Burch Lanier of Allegany church, Mr. Holmes Reid of Lineberry church, also Mr. B. K. Taylor of Lineberry church. Glad to have good people to worship with us. Come again. We laid the foundation of our new church the 29th of March and finished it the 20th of May. I am glad to say it is completed and almost paid for. We want to paint it just as soon as we can. The people have done fine in helping us build our church. May the Lord bless each one that has contributed to our needs.

The fourth Sunday in July is our special meeting. Brother John Hulling will be Brother Ridge's help at our church and we people are delighted. Pray for us that we may have a glorious meeting.

A. L. LOMAX, Reporter.

Concord.—It has now been two months since this church was heard from. Our reporter who has always been faithful in this matter of reporting being a school teacher has been quite taken up with the closing work of her term and besides this her mother has been confined to hospital for some time. These two things have hindered her in reporting.

Things have been happening nevertheless. Easter was a great day with us. The Sunday school was well attended and the program rendered by the school was much enjoyed. The offering amounted to $155.00 which was divided between our Annual and General Conference budgets. On the same day four new members were received into our membership.

The second quarterly conference just recently held was one of interest. Forty-three members have been received during the quarter. The Woman's Missionary Society gained thirty-five members, the Men's Brotherhood ten and lesser gain was also recorded by other departments.

On Sunday, May 15th, the church authorized the building of a Sunday plant to house our growing school. To be built with basement and two floors. Departmentally arranged. Steam heated and fitted out with modern plumbing. Although no formal campaign has been conducted for funds with which to build it, yet about half the necessary outlay is in sight. A campaign is now arranged and will be conducted next Sunday. To be concluded in a day.

Our sick list has been unusually large during recent weeks. Rev. Lawrence Little, Mrs. J. M. Troutman, Miss Merdie Helms, Mrs. B. G. Nash, Mrs. Lee Reed, Mr. W. I. Little, Mrs. S. H. Teeter and perhaps others, have had hospital experiences. All but Mrs. Reed and Mrs. Teeter experienced operations. Glad all are better and at home again.

A Daily Vacation Bible School will be put on by this church about the middle of June.

At the solicitation of the President of the conference and the call of certain of our people residing at Kannapolis I have arranged to conduct a Tent Evangelistic meeting there beginning June 2nd. If the developments are such as we expect it will result in another Methodist Protestant Church. I rave secured as helpers Mr. N. J. Miles of Mebane who will have charge of the music and Miss Lula Riddle of Burlington who will act as pianist. The tent will be located in North Kannapolis near the school of that section. Look for the canvass pointer. We urge our people there and in the near by section to come in and attend the meetings as much as possible.

It is likely that the meeting will run from two to three weeks. G. H. HENDRY.

Bethel, Alamance Charge.—Last Sunday found a large audience in our church to hear Mr. Burgess preach. He used as his theme, "The Kingdom of Heaven." He made the picture more vivid to us by first pointing out that the Kingdom was not of meat and drink, material things, or military power, but was characterized by the absence of the flesh, by the Spirit, power, force, light coming into the life, by obedience to the laws of religion, and by liberty and freedom. The Kingdom ministers through man's religious life and indirectly to man's every need. The fruits are such as peace, enrichment, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

We are sorry that our Sunday school superintendent, Mr. Lon McPherson, and his wife have not been able to be with us for quite a while on account of illness. We are praying that both may be restored to health and be with us again soon. We miss them badly. The assistant superintendent, Mr. W. H. Foust, has been leading the school very efficiently and attendance and enthusiasm are growing each Sunday. Attendance for last Sunday registered 99 while the enrollment was only 119. The contest on Bible reading has created much interest among the classes. For two Sundays the report showed that over 1500 chapters had been read during the week. Last Sunday's report gave over a 1000 read.

The Beginners, Primary, and Junior Classes gave a very interesting Mothers' Day program on the second Sunday. The Mothers' class conducted the school on this past Sunday. It adds much to the school to have the classes and individuals conduct the school occasionally, and gives the superintendent a better chance to study his school.

The Women's Home and Foreign Missionary societies met with Mrs. A. L. Foust. In this work, also, we sadly miss our President and leader, Mrs. McPherson. Miss Marcia Foust, as vice-president, had charge of the meeting. Mrs. J. M. Foust gave the lesson from study book. Miss Marcia Foust, delegate to the Henderson conference, gave a very interesting report of a good meeting. During the past year our society was glad to report $101.00 paid, which was a bit over our budget. Our Home society did not do quite so well, paying only about $26.00. We hope to better this report next year. The next meeting will be with Mrs. G. W. Holmes.

I am glad to report that Mrs. Mary Ellen Woody who has been suffering for some weeks from a stroke of paralysis is improving; also, Mrs. Sarah Foust, who was badly disabled by a fall, was able to attend church on last Sunday. At the same time I regret to report Mrs. W. R. Foust, and Mrs. W. A. Foust on the sick list and unable to attend services. We trust that these will soon be well.

BESSIE HOLMES.

English Street Church.—English Street Church gave the pageant "The Tree of Life," on Easter Sunday night and each character carried their part out well; it was enjoyed by the young as well as the old as it left a deep impression on all.

On the fourth Sunday in April our revival meeting began by the help of Rev. J. R. Anderson, former president of the Georgia conference, now pastor of the First M. P. church in Albemarle. He worked faithfully in trying to show the people to live a Christian life and what it leads to. His prayers, interest and love called several confessions and he will be long remembered. He inspired Christians in their church work.

Our Sunday school is getting on nicely with the work of our good pastor, Brother Moton, and our superintendent. The people work and pray for our church to do more than ever for our Lord and hope we will succeed in every way.

REPORTER.

Guilford Circuit, Hickory Grove.—We held an Easter program and at present, we are making preparations for a Children's Day, which will be held on June 5th. An interesting program has been arranged and the public is cordially invited.

Another item we are proud of is we have organized a Ladies' Aid Society and we believe this to be the best thing ever happened in the way of young women helping to build up a Sunday school.

Since organizing we have had five new members to join us and on May 5th we had a pie supper, which proved to be very successful. Above expenses we raised $29.11.

In addition to this quilt squares have been distributed among the members and each one is to raise as much as possible on them by the next meeting at which time we hope to report a nice amount.

May God bless the Sunday school and may we do everything in accordance with His will.

REPORTER.

The people of Pleasant Gap have been having cottage prayer meetings. We want them to come and join in our meetings and all work together.

INVENTED EXPLOSIVES; HATED WAR

Hudson Maxim, America's most noted inventor of high explosives for use in war, died, May 6, at his home at Lake Hopatcong, N. J., at the age of 74. The first smokeless powder ever made in America and the first to be adopted by the United States government was invented by him. He also invented "maximite," the first high explosive ever used successfully in armor-piercing projectiles. Other Maxim inventions include a steam-propelled torpedo and a rifle shell with a speed of a mile a second.

Although Hudson Maxim did much to make war more destructive, he hated war and always stood for the settlement of disputes by arbitration and other peaceful means. He loved mankind. On his big estate in New Jersey he guarded carefully the hundreds of birds that had their nests in the trees there. But he was a firm believer in preparedness. In 1915 he published a book, "Defenseless America," in which he made a strong plea for preparedness by the United States.—Current Events.

THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS

The Supreme Court of Minnesota has decided that reading the Bible in public school is not unconstitutional. The court holds that instead of fostering the spirit of intolerance by a strained construction of the Constitution, so as to exclude from use in public schools any book proclaiming great moral precepts, it is more desirable that a liberal construction be adopted, to the end that even in the public schools the pupils perceive that there is that in our principles of government which recognizes the religious element of man and guarantees protection to its free exercise and culture.

UNCLE SAM'S LOWEST PAID WORKER

Asikin bin Mian, native messenger for the U. S. consulate at Batavia in the East Indies, is said to receive the smallest compensation of any employee of the U. S. government. Mian was appointed "oppa" (Malay for messenger) at the Batavia consulate 25 years ago at a salary amounting to $6.03 a month. Since then his compensation has been increased gradually until now it is something like $10.05 a month. His duties include greeting all callers at the consulate and carrying messages for the officials. This "smallest paid employee" only wears a coat on important occasions. The usual visitor is met by Mian attired only in an undershirt, a pair of pajama trousers and a sarong (apron) held in place by a leather strap. Natives of the village consider Mian a rich man since he owns a small house and sometimes appears in public carrying a gold watch and chain with an American $20 gold piece as a charm.

THE DEADLY AUTOMOBILE

Every forty-two seconds a person is killed or injured in an automobile accident in the United States, says a report recently made public by the American Road Builders' Association. The report shows that more than 100,000 persons, at least one-third of them school children, have been killed in automobile accidents in the last five years. In the same period three million persons were injured and two billion dollars' worth of property was destroyed.—Current Events.

PITY THE POOR DRUGGIST

Apparently druggists in this country know more about the English language "as it is written" than most of us. Following are some queer written requests made to them:

"This child is my little girl. I send you five cents to buy two sitless powders for a grown up adult who is sike."

"Dear Doctor, ples gif bearer five senses worse of Auntie Toxyn for to gargle baby's throat and obleage."

"I have a cute pain in my child's diagram. Please give my son something to release it."

"My little babey has eat up its father's parish plaster. Send an antedote quick as possible by the enclosed girl."

THE DUEL

The gingham dog and the calico cat,
Side by side on the table sat,
'Twas half-past twelve, and (what do you think)
Nor one nor t'other had slept a wink!
The old Dutch clock and the Chinese plate
Appeared to know as sure as fate
There was going to be a terrible spat
(I wasn't there but I simply state
What was told to me by the Chinese plate.)

The gingham dog went "Bow-wow-wow!"
And the calico cat replied "Mee-ow!"
The air was littered, an hour or so,
With bits of gingham and calico,
While the old Dutch clock in the chimney place
Up with its hands before its face
For it always dreaded a family row!
(Now mind: I'm only telling you
What the old Dutch clock declares true.)

The China plate looked very blue
And wailed, "Oh, dear, what shall I do!"
But the gingham dog and the calico cat
Wallowed this way and tumbled that,
Employing every tooth and claw,
In the awfulest way you ever saw—
And, oh! how the gingham and calico flew.
(Don't fancy I exaggerate
I got my news from the China plate.)

Next morning where the two had sat
They found no trace of dog or cat;
And some folks think unto this day
That burglars stole that pair away!
But the truth about the cat and pup
Is this: they ate each other up!
Now what do you really think of that!
(The old Dutch clock it told me so,
And that is how I came to know.)

Secret of Firefly's Light

How does the firefly produce its light? Thus far science has been unable to give a definite answer to the queustion. The firefly apparently produces a "cold light." There is no appreciable heat produced in connection with it. Could this process be duplicated by science it is possible that the entire system of artificial illumination would be revolutionized. The cold light produced by fireflies and other creatures has been split into various colors and its energy measured by Dr. W. W. Coblentz and Dr. C. W. Hughes of the U. S. bureau of standards. Although they have been unable to determine the real cause of the light, they did learn that there is a wide range of colors in the various glowing organisms. Prof. E. N. Harvey, of Princeton university, has also been making studies along this line. His researches indicate that the light of the firefly is produced, not by combustion, but by a kind of digestive process.

The Weak Point in the Universalists' Creed

Universalists held a convention in North Carolina a hundred years ago and adopted a constitution and creed. Their distinguishing article of faith is contained in the second article of the creed, which reads as follows:

"We believe in one Lord Jesus Christ the Son of God; ordained to be the Saviour of men through the medium of the gospel and the power of the resurrection; and by and through whom our Heavenly Father has irrevocably decreed to reconcile all men to himself, and thus to render them holy and happy in the world to come."

In recent years there has been a revival of effort on the part of Universalists in North Carolina, and they are trying to impress on the thought of the people the same creed. It is consoling, indeed, to believe that all men will ultimately yield to the appeals of the gospel of Christ and become holy and happy. But it may not be best for the world to rest in such a hope. It certainly is not best if this is a false hope. What evidence can the Universalists give to prove that God will ultimately reconcile all men unto Himself? It is easy to believe that a loving Father will try most earnestly and persistently to accomplish that very thing. But how do we know that it can be done? Will moral suasion accomplish it in the case of all men? What does experience prove? Will God at length use His omnipotent power and compel voluntary submission to His will? There is a contradiction in the very thought. And if force has ultimately to be used, why not use it in the beginning and prevent all the sin and sorrow that follows in its train?

This creed of the Universalists seems to be based on Colossians 1:20, which reads: "And having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself."

The Universalists would do well to read through Paul's letter to the Colossians. In the third chapter they will find these statements: "The wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience," and "He that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; for there is no respect of persons."

The gist of the gospel message is repentance for sin and faith in Christ as a means of salvation. The Universalists deaden the effect of this appeal by making men imagine that the same end will be secured without this effort on their part. The Universalists are doing good service when they are teaching that God loves all men and is trying to secure the salvation of all men. But when they misrepresent the manner in which God is really moving in His effort, they are opposing and thwarting the efforts of God.

The Apostle of Christian Endeavor

It is too early yet to take the measure of Francis E. Clark, but it is not too early to write him down as the great apostle of the young people's movement in the Christian church. We do not limit his achievements to the distinctively Christian Endeavor societies, but credit him also with being in an indirect way the founder of the Epworth League and the Baptist Young People's Union and all the other young people's societies that have sprung up in any of the Protestant churches in the last thirty years. He started the movement and it spread to all the churches. For a time he was bitterly disappointed that some denominations declined to employ the name Christian Endeavor Society, but his spirit was too sweet to cherish bitterness, and he became reconciled to the situation and labored to make the spirit of Christian Endeavor universal, caring not so much what names were adopted to designate the outward forms of organization. If we measure Dr. Clark by the multitude of his labors and by the extent of his travels, by his tact in dealing with men and by the magnitude of his influence over men, we must write him down sa an apostle of the first rank. Did not God set him apart for this work? Who would dare assert otherwise? Who, knowing all that Dr. Clark accomplished in the last 30 years, can reasonably doubt it?

Why Did Jesus Submit to Death?

Perhaps the most common answer is, that He might redeem men, that He might make atonement for the sins of the world. His death in this view was an expression of His love for men. Love to men was the motive that led Him to the cross.

Others, not accepting the idea of a vicarious atonement, say that Jesus died to demonstrate the great love of God for men, to break and soften the hard hearts of men by an amazing exhibition of divine love.

A third answer is that He died to prove to men His love and devotion to God. This answer is suggested by Jesus' own words in John 14:31: "That the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence."

All three answers may be true. Jesus' answer comes with the highest authority.

THE SELF-LIFE

Disregard the working of thine own will, reason, and judgment. It is because all these are false counselors, the sworn servants, bribed slaves of thy fallen nature, that self-discovery is so difficult. They are all born and bred in the kingdom of Self, and therefore, if a new kingdom is to be set up in thee, if the operation of God is to have its effect in thee, all these natural powers of Self are to be silenced and suppressed, till they have learned obedience and subjugation to the Spirit of God. This is why such high value is attached to the contemplative life, to stillness of soul, and to the practice of the presence of God.—Selected.

CONGREGATIONALISTS AND CHRISTIANS APPROACH EACH OTHER

By Rev. Luther K. Long

The denomination known as the Christian Church—I think they are sometimes called "O'Kelleyites" in North Carolina—and the Congregationalists may some day become one denomination.

Commissions representing these two bodies have been studying the situation and have agreed upon a joint report. It was submitted to the general convention of the Christian Church last October, and it was unanimously ratified. It goes to the National Congregational council where it will, in all probability, be acted upon favorably.

The joint report of the commissions calls attention to the following points of agreement between the two churches:

"1. Each church has the congregational form of government.

"2. In each, the indiivdual church is the unit of authority.

"3. Each church accepts and practices representative government with regard to matters of common concern to the churches.

"4. Each church accepts the Bible as the rule of faith and practice, recognizing the right of free individual interpretation.

"5. Neither church holds to a creed which is binding upon individuals or upon churches.

"6. Each is agreed upon the general foundational tenets of our common Christianity.

"7. The Congregational statement of 1913 and the Principles of the Christian church we find essentially in accord in evangelical temper and inclusive in their scope."

"In view of the above findings and the added fact that it is our unanimous conviction that all Christian believers should now be brought into the closest possible fellowship and co-operation, we submit the following recommendations:

"In view of the similarities in organization, belief, observance of ordinances and general practices between the Christian and Congregational churches, and to the end that they may know each other better and enter definitely into a commo fellowship, it is recommended that in states, districts, and towns, where churches of both denominations exist side by side, they be urged to take steps toward close co-operation as an expression of the unity that ought to exist."

At a recent meeting of representatives from the two denominations, held in Raleigh, North Carolina, Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, said in an address:

"Christian union is the church's primary need. Why are we kept apart anyway in our Christian effort? It seems to me that there are three simple reasons:

"1st. Pride in our religious pedigree.

"2nd. Insistence on distinctive things, the things for which we peculiarly stand, rather than the magnifying of things on which we are agreed.

"3rd. Property rights and official positions."

Here's praying and hoping that this union will be happily consummated, and that it will be the fore-runner of other unions which shall result in the strengthening of the cause of Christ and the clarifying of the Christian testimony to a halting and needy world.

FRANCIS E. CLARK

Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., LL. D., founder of Christion Endeavor, died May 26 at his home in Newton, Mass., at the age of 75 years and eight months. He had been failing for some time and in the past year had one or two slight hemorrhages of the brain, which, however, did not disable him. He suffered from arterio sclerosis, but the immediate rause of death was kidney trouble, and came after only a few days' illness.

Francis E. Clark was born at Aylmer, Quebec, on September 12, 1851. He was the child of American parents. His father was Charles Carey Symmes, of Winchester, Mass., and his mother Lydia Fletcher Clark. He was orphanaed at the age of eight and went to live in Auburndale, Mass., with his maternal uncle, Rev. Edward Warren Clark, and adopted his foster father's name. On his father's side he was descended from Rev. Zechariah Symmes, who was driven out of England under the persecution of Archbishop Laud. His mother came of old Puritan stock.

He was educated at a small academy at Claremont, N. H., then in famous old Kimball Union Academy, and at Dartmouth College. He received his theological education at Andover Theological Sminary.

On February, 1881, Dr. Clark, then pastor of Williston Congregational church, Portland, Me., organized the first Christian Endeavor Society with about 50 members. News of this society and its aims spread abroad, and other pastors tried the same methods. Thus the Christian Endeavor movement was born. In a few years hundreds of societies were formed, not only in America, but in China, Great Britain, India, and other lands. Today Christian Endeavor societies are found in about 80 different denominations and in every country on the globe. There are about 80,000 societies with approximately 4,000,000 members.

At the Christian Endeavor convention at Portland, Oregon, in July, 1925, Dr. Clark resigned the presidency of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and was elected president emeritus. His successor as president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor is Rev. Daniel A. Poling, D. D., LL.D., minister of the Marble Collegiate church, New York City. For the past two years Dr. Poling and the executive officers of the society have carried the burden of the ever-expanding work of Christian Endeavor, releasing Dr. Clark from the strain. Dr. Clark's interest and contacts with Christian Endeavor in foreign lands induced him to retain the presidency of the World's Union of Christian Endeavor.

With the passing of Dr. Clark, the world loses one of her great religious leaders, a man of rare spirit and piety, of kindly courtesy and tact. His friends are found in all ranks of life and in all lands. He had no enemies. Everywhere he is recognized as one of the vital figures in the religious life of the world.

Dr. Clark proved a wise and tactful leader of the movement that was started in Portland, Me. By 1885 societies were so numerous that a national organization was formed, the United Society of Christian Endeavor. With characteristic modesty Dr. Clark urged the election of W. J. Van Patten, of Vermont, as president. Mr. Van Patten resigned in 1887 and Dr. Clark was then elected president. In this year he resigned the pastorate of the Congregational church, South Boston, to which he had come in 1883, that he might give his whole time to Christian Endeavor work. In 1886 he was one of three or four men who purchased The Golden Rule and made it the organ of the Christian Endeavor movement. Later the name was changed to The Christian Endeavor World.

Dr. Clark was a great traveler. His first journey in the interest of Christian Endeavor was to England. In later years he made five journeys around the globe and found that if the sun never sets on the British Empire neither does it ever set on Christian Endeavor.

He was ofttimes in peril by land and by sea, in storm and near shipwreck. He was the last American to leave Peking before the outbreak of the Boxer rebellion in 1900, and he was the first American to make the long journey from China to London across Siberia, using the trans-Siberian railroad.

Dr. Clark was the author of many books on young people's work, on travel and on religious subjects, and his magazine articles are innumerable. Among his books we may mention his latest, an autobiography, Memories of Many Men in Many Lands, and among other works, Looking Out on Life, World-Wide Endeavor, Christian Endeavor Manual, The Church and Young People, A New Way Around an Old World, The Continent of Opportunity, The Charm of Scandinavia (with Sydney Clark, his son), In the Footsteps of St. Paul, Our Italian Fellow-Citizens, Gospel of the Out-of-Doors, and many others.

His interests were as broad as humanity. He was a director of many peace organizations, the Church Peace Union, and others. He saw in Christian Endeavor a mighty force to promote world friendship. He pointed out that after the Boer War the first time Boers and Britons met in friendship was in a great Christian Endeavor convention in South Africa, and after the World War Christian Endeavor was the first international organization to bring together Germans, Frenchmen, and Englishmen in a great convention in Hamburg. Even now Christian Endeavorers of England invite German Endeavorers to spend vacations in England as guests of British Christian Endeavor holiday homes, and similar invitations come from German Endeavorers to Britishers.

No one can measure the extent of the influence of Francis E. Clark on the religious life of the world. The Christian Endeavor pledge has entered into the life of at least 20,000,000 present and former members of the society, and this pledge formed the background of Dr. Charles M. Sheldon's book, In His Steps, millions of copies of which have been sold. Christian Endeavor liberated for the service of the church the energies of young people. It challenged them to do something for Christ and the church. It showed them practical methods of work. It is inter-racial, international, and interdenominational, and therefore has brought into vital fellowship young people of all lands and of all faiths. Christian Endeavor has never entered the field of doctrine. Its aim has been to unite young people in practical work for Christ.

On October 3, 1876, Dr. Clark married Harriet E. Abbott, of Andover, Mass. His wife survives him, as do also four children: Mrs. Maude Williston Chase, of Newton; Eugene Francis, professor in and secretary of Dartmouth College; Harold Symmes, head master of a school in New Jersey; and Sydney, who is engaged in the real estate business in Boston.

For several years the active leadership of the Christian Endeavor movement has been under the direction of Rev. Daniel A. Poling, of New York City. Dr. Poling was elected president of the International Society in July, 1925.

LETTER TO THE POPE

MAY 24, 1927.

His Holiness, Pius XI, The Vatican, Rome, Italy.

Dear Sir:

About a year and a half ago you were courteously asked, publicity, by a group of American citizens, to use your influence to promote the enforcement of the Prohibition Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

In your behalf it was semi-officially said, with show of great indignation, that prohibition is a "political" issue and that you have nothing to do with anything "political." It was further suggested that your views would be made known to and through the American representative of the Hierarchy.

A few weeks later, early in 1926, His Eminence, William Cardinal O'Connell, the ranking Roman Catholic Prelate in America, visited Rome. On returning, before fairly off the ship, he attacked prohibition as "opposed to Holy Scripture and Catholic tradition."

Shortly after this, one of the largest press associations in America, whose representative evidently has close relations with representatives of the Holy See, sent from Rome an apparently inspired dispatch to the effect that the Holy See (which only a few weeks before had declared prohibition to be a "political" question that it would not touch), specifically approved the statement of Cardinal O'Connell, and, on its own account, further attacked prohibition on the added grounds that it is "opposed to reason, faith and Christian morals."

While it is claimed in your behalf that you neither officially notice nor formally deny any erroneous statement, yet within the past few weeks there have emanated from the Vatican, first, an unofficial, and, second, an official disclaimer of any interest in the Presidential aspirations of Gov. Al Smith.

This establishes the fact that you do deny, or have denied for you, anything which you believe will give a wrong idea to the American people on a question of vital importance.

The prohibition question is the outstanding American issue, and will be the main factor affecting the candidacy of Gov. Smith, which candidacy was considered of sufficient importance to justify a disclaimer through those who would not dare do it without your approval.

The record, therefore, not only justifies, but imperatively demands a disclaimer of erroneous statements of the attitude of the Holy See on prohibition,—if in fact these statements are erroneous.

Justice to you, in case the zeal or prejudice of those in close relation to you has misrepresented you and thereby put you in a false position, requires that you be invited to make that fact clear.

On the other hand, if the attack upon prohibition, manifestly intended to convey the impression it reflects your views, on the alleged ground it is "opposed to Holy Scripture, Catholic tradition, reason, faith and Christian morals" accurately represents yours and the official Roman Catholic position, it is only simple justice to the American people to have that fact established, and responsibility definitely located either by (1) frank, direct, unanswerable official statement, or (2) by the equally conclusive fact of your refusal to deny or disclaim the hostile semi-official statements that purported to reflect your views and to represent Roman Catholicism.

Recognizing that it is your privilege to ignore this communication, and, that, in the event you do, then it is equally the privilege of the American public to interpret your silence, in the face of the record, as an admission that the attack upon prohibition, on the grounds set out, correctly states your views and that of the Holy See, I respectfully inquire:

Is it true, or not, that you, and what is generally known to the American public as the "Roman Catholic Church," are opposed to prohibition of the liquor traffic as provided by the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, on the ground that it is "opposed to Holy Scripture, Catholic tradition, reason, faith and Christian morals?"

Yours for the Triumph of Truth,
WILLIAM H. ANDERSON, General Secretary.

MR. BEECHER'S VIEW

One evening nearly forty years ago I was trying to help Henry Ward Beecher with his mail. There were no scheduled engagements, the mail was light, and Mr. Beecher was enjoying that rare thing in his life, a brief period of leisure. He was sitting at his desk, the end of his quill-pen balanced between his lips, as was his wont....Suddenly he turned in his swivel-chair, and, taking the pen from his mouth, asked, "How old are you now, Edward?"

"Twenty-two, sir," I replied.

"Full of hopes and plans as to what you are going to do with your life, I suppose?" he asked.

"More hopes than plans, I think, sir," I answered.

"That is right," he returned. "The first thirty years should be full of hopes. The imagination should then be at its liveliest."

"And full of learning?" I asked.

"In a way," he mused. "A certain kind of learning, that is, school and book learning. But actual lessons come only from Life itself, and we begin to learn intelligently only at thirty. Then you begin to take in and pack away."

"And give out?" I ventured.

"We do, yes, of course," was the answer, "but not wisely. Wisdom does not come so easily nor so quickly as that."

"When does wisdom come, sir?" my curiosity prompted.

"At sixty," was the prompt response. "Not before. Then if you have listened intently and lived carefully and learned from living, you have stored up a background of wisdom from which you begin to draw for ripe and correct decision. Yes, it takes sixty years to reach wisdom. It seems a long road, doesn't it? But wisdom is a rare quality, my boy, just like a rare orchid. It takes years to cultivate it, and, like the orchid, it feeds on the unseen."

"You feel then, Mr. Beecher, that you have experienced only thirteen years of wisdom in all your seventy-three years of life?" I asked.

"Just about, my boy, just about," he mused, and once more the quill went between his lips as he sat looking into space. "Certainly not any more," he concluded.—From "Twice Thirty," by Edward W. Bok.

FOR HIS SAKE

Bringing oneself to a willingness to sacrifice because of one's love of God sometimes is the hardest part of such sacrifice. Whole-souled willingness God desires, but the sacrifices he actually requires are startingly few and small. A certain soldier who had lost a hand in the Great War illumined this fact. When a chaplain offered him sympathy in his loss, the boy cheerily replied: "I did not lose it, I gave it gladly. I was willing to give my life to my country, but all it took was my hand." He had been willing to surrender all, yet he had been called on to give only a small part, and a million of his comrades had to give even less than he. The older we grow in the Christian life, the greater becomes our wonder that the privations we have been willing to endure for Christ have been so few. Moreover, even those we have been called upon to experience have been quite overshadowed by the satisfaction that has come to us in cheerful, persistent endurance for Christ's sake.—Selected.

BEING A SON

Here is a good little "sermon" from The Youth's Companion, and it is as good for older readers as it is for the young:

"It's two years since I joined the church," the young man said, and his tone was dull and spiritless as if he were speaking something too remote to interest him. "I was in earnest then, and I've tried, but it seems of no use. I guess I don't belong in the church. You know how it is, Mr. Rutledge, when a man holds an office he isn't fit for. It's better to resign than to wait till he's kicked out."

"I hope it isn't so bad as that, Tom." The elderly face was kindly. "What you've said about yourself reminds me of an experience I had when I was 16 or 17 years old. My father owned a small farm, but he was a poor man, and if I was to go on with my schooling I had to earn something for myself. I shall never forget the humiliation of the first summer I tried to work out. I wasn't ashamed to work, but I was ashamed of being a flat failure wherever I went. I think I was discharged eight times that season for sheer incompetence. I had always been fond of books and had never taken a sympathetic interest in farm work, and strangers wouldn't put up with my slack, bungling way of doing things.

"Father was always kind and patient when I came home. He never scolded me for losing my place, but pointed out the reasons why I was not a good farmer; he blamed himself as much as he blamed me. It was because of his encouragement that I tried again and again, and when it seemed useless to try any more he proposed that we take land the next year and work together. 'I guess your father can get along with you all right, Robert, even if the neighbors don't think you're much of a hired man,' he said in his homely way.

"I suppose I was poor help to the end of the chapter, but I was working for my father. His love overlooked the things I did amiss; he knew I was doing my poor best."

The old eyes were wonderfully tender and wistful as they met the younger eyes looking into them inquiringly. "Isn't it the same with our heavenly Father, Tom? You didn't hire out to a hard master there two years ago, Tom. You just took your place in God's big family, where God wanted you to be, where He wants you to stay. Hired men are discharged every day for incompetency, but it's rare for a son to be kicked out. That's against the nature of things, because the son belongs in his father's house."

The young man's eyes had softened. His lips moved unsteadily before the words came. "I want to stay if—if He—if He feels that way," he said brokenly.—Selected.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

Japan—Evangelistic Department

The reports of the evangelistic work in Japan are most encouraging. Rev. E. I. Obee is the evangelistic superintendent of the Yokohama District. The district has enjoyed a fine year. Steady, conscientious work on the part of the pastors and workers has brought good results.

The Oyama Mission has had favorable growth along all lines during the past year. It is in the best condition it has known since the earthquake of 1923. The work among the factory people is again being carried on freely. Ten new members have been received, the collections are much better than they were last year and there are many inquirers enrolled.

The Tsurumi Mission is also steadily improving. Many more meetings have been held this year than last. The special services resulted in much good. There has been quite an increased attendance on the part of grown people. The collections have greatly increased recently. Two promising members have been received and there is also a large number of inquirers in the mission.

Evangelistic

Rev. Leigh Layman is the superintendent of the Nagoya District. Last year was a record year in this district, the results being the greatest of any year, except one, during the past eight years. But the results of the year just closed were the greatest of any year, except one, during the past fifteen years, and with less men working. And there is every reason to believe that this fine record will continue through the present year. So this splendid work goes forward.

In this district there are seven mission charges composed of eighteen appointments or places of worship. Among these the Kawara mission, which is our Nagoya City mission, through its rapid growth will soon become a Conference Church. The only condition it now has to meet is to become "half self-supporting." Its finances are the best of any mission in the district and all its activities are in good shape.

The report for the year shows thirty-nine adults and nine children baptized. Five members received by letter, thirty-nine into full membership and nine probationers. 172 full members, 63 probationers, 50 inquirers and 518 Sunday school scholars are enrolled.

Similar reports come also from the Women's Department under the careful and faithful supervision of Miss Mary E. Williams. She reports 600 meetings held during the year. These include Sunday school classes, Bible classes, meetings for women and young people and factory meetings.

Miss Ethel Hemstead, one of our faithful and influential teachers in the "Kakiwa Shinsei" kindergarten in Nagoya, is now in America on her furlough. Of her Miss Williams writes, "Naturally, Miss Hemstead's absence is keenly felt. By her ability, sincerity of character and steady endeavor to exalt the Christ in her life and work she has won the love and confidence of the teachers and parents and we trust that she soon will be able to come back to this field of ever-widening opportunity."

Lest We Forget

We are now in the month of June—the month of Children's Day Services and Missionary Offerings for the men's work. The program this year is one of the finest and best in the history of the Church. The need is one of the most urgent. The worthiness of the appeal is one that ought to lead every church and Sunday school in the Denomination into active co-operation and generous offering.

The Men's Board needs the hearty co-operation and financial support of every Methodist Protestant that we may "carry on" and not take a backward step. On May 17th Mrs. Klein reported 500 orders for Children's Day programs received. This is better than at that date last year. But the final number of orders ought to be more than twice the 500. Have YOU sent in YOUR order? If not, send it NOW! Mail all orders to Mrs. Mary E. Klein, Berwyn, Maryland.

HOME MISSIONS

My Last Appeal for Easter Returns

I have already appealed to the pastors and churches, through our church papers, to report to me the results of their Easter services, both as to members received and the amount of the offerings taken for Home Missions. There have also been sent to the pastors return postal cards with the request that these be returned with the information so greatly desired. The result is that to date, May 26, of the 1,000 churches to which Easter programs were sent I have heard from only 480.

These show that at Easter 2,146 members were received into the Methodist Protestant Church. It is safe to say that never before, in almost one hundred years of the church's history, have so many persons united with our church at one time. While it is reasonable to suppose that the 500 churches from which no report has been received would not average what those already reported have, the number would be largely increased over that here named if we had a full report. The offering from the 480 churches totals $20,214.05. There is still a large amount not yet reported.

I make this very kind but earnest request to the pastors and church officials to take the time to send me a postal giving the results from your church or churches. I am in communication with the Treasurers of the Annual Conferences and have sent them the list of the churches, in their Annual Conferences, with the hope by this means we may hear from many. The Treasurers are very willing, and are rendering valuable assistance, which is greatly appreciated. I may continue to communicate with the pastors and churches by mail, but this will be the last public appeal.

Let us all rejoice together in what has been accomplished, especially in soul-winning during the Easter season, and the large increase in our church membership. On behalf of the Board of Home Missions I again express our gratitude to the church at large for the splendid co-operation given.

THE BLOODLESS BELIEFS

Spiritism, Eddyism, Theosophy, New Thought, Unitarianism, all deny the necessity of a BLOOD atonement for sin. Believers in these cults are snared by Satan, and must perish without hope. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission."—Hebrews 9:22.

A WORD ABOUT THE PROGRAM

The theme of the Pastors' Conference is "The Country Church and the Kingdom." The program is built around the theme. It is of special interest to those brethren who are now pastors of country churches; but it is of interest to all of us, because we either are or have been or will be country pastors.

I am of the opinion that the country church in North Carolina, as indeed of all the states, regardless of denomination, is facing a crisis. We must do our part in helping solve the problems that will become acute within the next five years. It is my hope, and the hope of the program committee, that as a result of thinking together in the Pastors' Conference we shall be able to come to some conclusions to present to our next Annual Conference.

We are especially anxious that every pastor of a country charge shall attend this Pastors' Conference. It may result in untold good for the future of our country charges.

The laymen of the country charges who are interested in the future of their churches ought to see to it that their pastors attend. But I know that many of them will not be able to unless their expenses are paid. So I appeal aagin that some one at every church on every charge get up enough money to send the preacher to the Pastors' Conference. Remember the dates: July 18-24, and get busy!

C. W. BATES, President.

DON'T BELIEVE IN A DEVIL

Some don't believe in a devil as their fathers used to do;
They've opened doors in broad gauged creeds to let his majesty through.
There isn't a print of his cloven hoof, or a fiery dart from his bow,
To be found in earth or air today; for Modernists have voted it so.

But who is mixing the fatal draught that palsies heart and brain,
And loads the bier of the passing year with the many thousands slain?
Who blights the bloom of the land today with the fiery breath of hell?
If the devil isn't and never was, won't somebody rise and tell?

Who dogs the steps of the toiling saint, and digs the pit for his feet?
Who sows the tares in the fields of time wherever God sows His wheat?
The devil is voted not to be, and of course the thing is true:
But who is doing the kind of work the devil alone should do?

We are told that he does not go about as a roaring lion now;
But whom shall we hold responsible for the everlasting row,
To be heard in home, in Church and State, to the earth's remotest bound,
If the devil, according to what they say, is nowhere to be found?

Won't somebody step to the front forthwith, and make his bow and show
How the frauds and crimes of a single day spring up? We want to know.
The devil's been ruled wholly out, and of course the devil's gone;
But simple people would like to know who carries his business on.

The WORK and the WORKERS

On Friday, May 27th, we started about the noonday hour for Brinkleyville where we spent the night with Rev. and Mrs. N. M. Harrison and their sisters in the old Harrison home. Then on Saturday we attended the First District Rally at Bethesda church, on Halifax charge. Saturday morning it was raining to the delight of us all, though that kept many from attending the meetings. Regardless of the rain, five out of seven pastors in the district were present, and a goodly number of others were in attendance. We had a good day. The rally continued over Sunday, and doubtless they had a much larger attendance on Sunday.

Rev. D. A. Fishel

On our way to Brinkleyville we stopped for a visit with Rev. D. A. Fishel and his daughter in their home at Vaughn. We found Brother Fishel cheerful and happy, though confined to his home. He says he is in much better physical condition than he was a few weeks ago.

Second District Rally

The second district rally was held in the Spring Valley church near Henderson. All three of the pastors in this district were present, and also a large number of their people. It was my privilege to preach the sermon at the eleven o'clock hour. This sermon served as convention sermon and also as dedicatory sermon. The Spring Valley people have added quite an addition to their church, painted the church outside and inside, cleaned the grounds, and added in every way to the attractiveness and usefulness of the plant. And they were ready to have the building dedicated, so we had the pleasure of participating with them in this service. The people of this church seem very much encouraged. Their Sunday school is doing well, and they have a Christian Endeavor society which has an unbroken record of 19 years of service.

Flat Rock, Vance

On Sunday night we were privileged to be with Rev. M. P. Chambliss and his people at Flat Rock. Here we were greeted by a splendid congregation, and it was a pleasure to preach to them. Here we also got a fine report from the Sunday school. The young people are also running a Sunday evening prayer meeting, which takes the place of a Christian Endeavor society.

District Rallies and Circuit Rallies

We know of two other District Rallies which were held on this fifth Sunday in May. I trust they were well attended and that they were profitable meetings. In some of the districts the chairmen and pastors are turning their attention to Circuit Rallies. This may prove far better, because in this way more people may be led to attend. We fully believe that these group meetings, where the Annual Conference work and the General Conference work are stressed, where we are led to think anew of our Children's Home, and of our College, will do a vast deal of good. This kind of meetings also bring our people of different communities together, and as we come to know each other better we also come to love each other more.

Children's Day Services

I am supposing that each pastor has received a good large poster which contains a splendid picture of Rev. F. C. Klein, D. D., and which calls our attention to the fact that the Children's Day services this year are to take the shape of a memorial to Dr. Klein, who served as our first ordained missionary to Japan and who for nearly nineteen years served as executive secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions. Our people loved Dr. Klein, and we believe they will respond to this special Children's Day offering, if their attention is properly called to it. Let each church and Sunday school plan for a splendid Children's Day service to be held during the month of June, and make a splendid offering. All that is thus collected helps to pay your General Conference Budget. This is a splendid opportunity to help in a good cause, to pay a part of our G. C. B., and to honor the memory of this faithful servant of the church. Some have already held their services, for which we are glad. Order supplies from Mrs. F. C. Klein, Berwyn, Md. Order soon so as to be sure to get the needed literature.

Summer Conferences

One of the bright spots in our lives each summer is the time for the Summer Conference at the High Point College. It is a splendid place to spend a week in social and spiritual fellowship with the other ministers and workers who gather there. We are trusting and believing that a larger number will be in attendance at these conferences this summer than ever before. Every church on every charge should have representatives in these conferences, and certainly every pastor should plan to be there to get the information and the inspiration of the occasion, and also to be an inspiration and a help to their own young people. Let us plan to be there.

Where to Send All Money for Budgets

I have tried to keep our people posted as to where to send money, but will say again, send all money for both the Annual Conference Budget, and the General Conference Budget to Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C. Tell him what the money is for and he will send receipt which must be inclosed in pastor's report to Conference next November.

All money for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society should be sent to Mrs. S. W. Taylor, Burlington, N. C.; and all money for the Woman's Home Missionary Society should be sent to Mrs. H. A. Garrett, High Point, N. C.

Our One Hundredth Year of Service

This is our one hundredeth year of service for the Master. We are urging the pastors and the people to strive to add at least ten per cent to the membership this year as an expression of gratitude to God for His goodness in leading us thus far. That would mean an increase of 2,790 members for the year. Some charges have already reported more than the ten per cent increase. I hope to give next week a few figures which have been rather encouraging to me.

Appointments

June 5th, Orange Circuit Rally.
June 12th, Mount Pleasant, Memorial services.
June 13th to July 5th, vacation.
July 18th to 25th, Summer Conference, High Point College.

Faithfully yours in His service,

A. G. Dixon.

OUR STORY PAGE

A POOR SPELLER

"Gee, Miss Prince," said Tom Hart, "I can't spell 'through.' All I know is that it don't look the way it sounds."

"You ought to be ashamed," said Miss Prince, the teacher. "You're the biggest boy in the school and you can't spell a little word like that. Well, you can just stay in after school and learn to spell it."

"Gee," muttered Tom, "what's the use learning to spell 'through'? Wish there wasn't any school."

"Keep quiet!" said Miss Prince, trying to look stern which was hard, because she was so young and pretty.

She was a new teacher in the mountain school and she was very anxious to have all her pupils do well.

When the afternoon was half over, she looked out of the window and saw that it looked dark and threatening outside, so she told the children that they could go right home before the storm came.

"You can go, too, Tom," she said; "it would be pretty bad to be snowed in here with nothing but green wood to burn and nothing to eat."

The children began struggling into their wraps, but Tom looked out of the window.

"It's too late," he cried, running to the door. "The Williams, Horton's and Sal and Joe Thompson live more'n a mile away. They'd get caught in the blizzard. The rest of you can make it to your homes if you run."

"Well, the Brown's farm is only half a mile away," said Miss Prince, "these children can stop there."

"Not Sal Thompson or the little Horton's or Dot Williams," said Tom. "I'll stay with them. The rest of you run for your lives and let the folks know we're here."

"But I'll stay too," said Miss Prince.

"You ought to go with the kids," said Tom. "I'm due to stay in for not spelling 'through' so I'll stay with the little ones."

There was no time to argue. The sky grew black and there was a greenish light over all and a stillness as if Nature were sick and holding her breath.

Miss Prince and the bigger children ran as fast as they could and managed to make the Brown's farm before the blizzard broke. The wind shrieked and drove the hard round pellets of snow in sheets across the landscape, so one could not see ahead for three feet.

"There are some children in the schoolhouse," gasped the teacher, as they crowded into the cozy farmhouse. "There's Sal, the lame girl, and four tots and Tom Hart."

"Wall," said Mr. Brown, "if that Tom Hart is there, the kids will be all right. That young fellow's got a head on him. We can't go out right now in the blizzard. Soon's it's over, we'll start right over with the sleigh and git the children."

Meantime strange things were happening at the schoolhouse. In the first place the schoolhouse had once been a church. It had a spire and it stood in an old graveyard. When the first fierce blast of the blizzard came, off went the spire. A few more terrible whoops of the North wind ripped the old roof, and there were the frightened children struggling around among the desks with the storm raging over them.

Tom herded his five charges into the large closet at the back of the school room. The roof was off, but he managed to make a little ceiling to keep the snow off. As soon as he had done this, it grew quiet enough inside to talk and he told the children that now everything would be all right, and Mr. Blizzard would not be able to get at them.

Sal was lame, but she was brave and she told stories and sang to the little ones until they fell asleep.

After what seemed a long, long time, they woke up and Tom tried to peep out and see what the weather was like. The snow had drifted against their little shelter and he had to dig his way out like a rabbit.

"It isn't blowing so hard now," he said, "but it's still snowing. It's night, and I can't tell what time it is. We'd better go back to sleep."

Inside the closet it was warm and cozy, for the snow had made a thick blanket over the ruined schoolhouse. The children huddled together and the little ones cried, but Sal comforted them by telling them lovely stories about the fairies. When they were asleep again Sal asked: "How long do you think we will have to stay here?"

"Say!" exclaimed Tom. "Use your head! How long do you think our dads are going to leave us? Why, they'll be after us in no time!"

Still, in a blizzard even the best intentioned people sometimes fail to rescue snowbound loved ones. Tom began to worry a little and Sal was worrying a great deal.

"The kids are hungry," she said. "I wish we could do something! Couldn't you go out and get help? I will stay here."

"I'll look out again," said Tom.

This time there was a little gray light and faint yellow streaks in the sky. Tom burrowed out of his shelter. It was still snowing, but the wind had died down. He stood a moment looking around and away off he heard a bark.

"Hurry!" he shouted. "They're coming! I heard a dog!" Then he began yelling at the top of his lungs.

Pretty soon, over one of the strange white lumps where once the schoolhouse had stood, came a big shaggy dog. It was Rex, Tom's own pet.

"Go bring Dad!" shouted Tom, but Rex seemed tired out and lay down at Tom's feet.

"I bet you've been out all night looking for me," said Tom. "Dad has too. They can't find us with the snow so high. Why, our closet is quite hidden! I'll write a note."

He felt in his pocket and got a pencil and an old envelope. Then he scrawled: "We are under the snow in the skule house." He next found a bit of string in another pocket and tied the note around the dog's neck.

Rex seemed to understand, for off he trotted limping a little.

Tom hastened back to tell Sal that they would soon be found. The little ones were awake, and as Sal feared, they were hungry and crying.

"In just a little while they'll be here," Tom said. "I gave Rex a note to take to Dad. Come on, let's sing something."

After what seemed a very long time, Tom went out again, and this time he saw some people coming pulling sleds. Of course, he hurried in to tell the little prisoners. They all came out and shouted and waved to the rescuing party.

"Look! They've got spades and blankets and baskets which I bet have food in them!" cried little Dot.

It was a glad time then for everybody, because the parents had feared that the children had been killed in the ruins of the schoolhouse or else frozen under the snow. They had been to the ruins during the night and had not found the children's hiding place because the snow had drifted over it.

"Tom saved us!" said Sal.

"Knew he would," Mr. Brown said. "Tom's got a head on him."

Then the fun began! The children were put on the sleds, wrapped up in blankets and given delicious things out of the baskets. Tom jumped on the back of Sal's sled and said something in a low voice. Mr. Thompson who drew the sled, heard his little girl answer:

"T-h-r-o-u-g-h, through, through."

Tom sat back, his lips moving mysteriously during the rest of the ride.

When they reached the Brown's farm, Miss Prince and a number of other ladies, mostly mothers, ran out to meet the party.

Tom ran to Miss Prince and said: "I can spell 'through' now."

"Good!" she cried. "But there won't be any school for awhile until we can fix up a suitable place. Anyhow, Tom, I'm very proud of you. You may not be able to spell but you certainly are a smart boy and a brave boy."

Tom was pleased, but he replied:

"Well, I'm going to learn to spell now. I think I spelt school wrong on that note I gave Rex. Being brave don't make up for being dumb."—Selected.

TOMMY'S GARDEN

Tommy had been looking forward to his birthday for weeks.

Not that he expected to have a party or a lot of nice gifts, because he didn't. His daddy had been ill for so long that it had been nip and tuck to stretch the money far enough to pay the bills, and Tommy knew that unless his mother had helped out by sewing, there would not have been enough sometimes to pay the rent and the doctor.

So Tommy who was a manly little chap, was quite ready to be happy just because he was to be six years old in place of five. And now that the day had come, he had been remembered after all.

Even before breakfast, a lovely bouquet of fragrant and beautiful pink roses was brought in to him by the old lady next door. They were in a wonderful old blue and white handled pitcher.

"There," said the old lady, "that pitcher belonged to my mother and I want you to have it. It will be worth a lot of money some day, for it is a real antique—and in the meantime, you can use it for your milk when the flowers have wilted."

And right after breakfast, the quiet little lady who lived on the other side, called Tommy and handed him a package. When he opened it, it was a story book with lots of pictures, and written on the first page which was blank, was this message:

"To Dear Tommy on his sixth birthday. May he live a great many years and have lots of happy returns of the day, and go on bringing sunshine into the lives of other people. Perhaps he too, will come to know and love these story book friends as I did when I was a little girl.

"Your neighbor,

"ELSIE STRONG."

Tommy's mother read the message and it made the little fellow's eyes sparkle.

"My," he said, "but it's fine to have neighbors, isn't it?"

"It surely is," smiled his mother. "But just see here what Daddy made for you!"

And there behind the door, was a little red cart. For a minute Tommy was disappointed. He had wanted an express cart—a fine red one with four wheels, which would go down the hill in front of their house as fast as the express carts the other children had. But, of course, he wasn't going to say a word about that! What if this cart did have only two wheels and was home-made at that! His father was getting better and had made this to please him.

So Tommy ran downstairs and cried gaily, "Oh, Daddy, thank you for the nice cart. I can draw a loaf of bread in it from the bakery, or go on errands for you. I'll be a real 'spress man."

"That's fine," nodded his father, "Your mother and I would have liked to give you an express cart or a little toy automobile, but we couldn't do it just now. And I like to know that I have a small son who is ready to make the best of things.

"But listen! Isn't there someone stopping out in front of our house?"

Tommy was down the stairs like a shot. And my! but he was excited, for there was the really, truly express wagon all piled high with packages and bundles, and the expressman was coming up the front steps with a big box in his arms. It was really more like a crate, for there were slats over the top.

Tommy could scarcely wait until it was set down.

"Does Tommy Harris live here?" inquired the man.

Tommy nodded.

"Then please hurry and get someone to sign the book for this dog is for you."

Tommy hopped right up and down and clapped his hands, for sure enough, inside the box was the brightest little dog you could imagine. He was wagging a stub of a tail and looking as pleased as anything, as much as to say, "Well, well! Here I am and I want to climb right out of this box and get acquainted with you."

It didn't take long to loosen the slats and let the frisky little fellow out. He began to bark and to lick Tommy's hand and to sniff of everything. Tommy laughed with glee.

By this time, Tommy's father had come down stairs.

"Why," he said, "here's a letter tacked inside of the box and it is addressed to Thomas Harris.

"Please read it, Daddy," begged the little boy who was having such a splendid birthday.

"This dog," read Mr. Harris, "is a birthday present to my little friend who never tired of being eyes for a blind man."

If ever there was a delighted child, it was Tommy.

"Just see," he cried, "this dog's ears are marked exactly alike, and the little brown patch over his back is just like a blanket. My, this is the very nicest birthday I ever had!"

"That's because," smiled his mother, "you planted seeds in your garden from day to day, and now you are enjoying the crop of friendship which has grown!"—Selected.

A SERMON

A bright-eyed, shabby little fellow was working his way through a crowded car, offering his papers in every direction, in a way that showed him well used to the business and of a temperament not easily daunted.

The car started while he was making change, and the conductor, passing him, laughed.

"Caught this time, Joe!" he said. "You'll have to run to Fourteenth street."

"Don't care," laughed Joe, in return. "I can sell all the way back again."

A white-haired old gentleman seemed interested in the boy, and questioned him concerning his way of living and his earnings. There was a younger brother to be supported, it appeared. "Jimmy" was lame, and "couldn't earn much himself."

"Ah, I see. That makes it hard; you could do better alone."

The shabby little figure was erect in a moment and the denial was prompt and somewhat indignant.

"No, I couldn't! Jim's somebody to go home to; he's lots of help. What would be the good of havin' luck if nobody was glad? Or of gettin' things if there was nobody to divide it with?"

"Fourteenth street!" called the conductor, and as the newsboy jumped out into the gathering dusk, the old gentleman remarked to nobody in particular: "I've heard many a poorer sermon than that."—Forward Magazine.

SEEN AND HEARD IN JULIAN LAST SUNDAY

Julian is always an interesting place to the editor of the Herald because it was the birthplace of his mother and the home of his grandfather. We are always glad of an opportunity to visit the place. Last Sunday we were given a special inducement to go in an invitation from Brother W. T. Hanner to attend the District Rally held in the Julian Church. In company with our good neighbor, Mr. Cicero Kime, we went Sunday afternoon. We will here tell part of what we saw and heard.

On entering the church we saw and heard Rev. H. C. Carmichael, pastor of Moriah charge, speaking on The Task of the Local Church. He described the moral and spiritual qualities that the church must possess in order that it may achieve its ends. It must be consecrated to its work, it must be concentrated as well as a consecrated, it must give to Christ the pre-eminence, it must be progressive. He illustrated the need of progressiveness by a story of a church that was so ultra-conservative that it would not even permit the singing of new songs. According to this story some of the elders of this church went up to the Celestial City and were met by St. Peter at the gate. In answer to their inquiry as to what city they had arrived at, Peter told them that it was the New Jerusalem. That word "New" gave them pause. Then they heard a song sung with great volume and deep emotion, and they asked what song that was. They were told that it was the new song of the redeemed. When they heard that, they said one to another, "We don't want to stop here where they sing new songs." Before the speaker told this story he referred for justification to the fact that Brother Millaway had told a number of stories. (He perhaps does not know that Brother Millaway is full of them and cannot help it.)

Next we heard Prof. Paul Kennett speak of Our College. He told of the great development witnessed in North Carolina during the last thirty years in the matter of schools. High schools have been opened, elementary schools have been improved, colleges have greatly increased their attendance. Without discounting the value of state colleges or universities, he stressed the need of church colleges. The first point he made was the churches save the state money by aiding in the work of higher education. The church colleges educate nearly half those receiving college or university training and thus save to the state about half the cost of this training. The second point was that it is better for the student to be trained in the small college under the control of his own church. He learns about his own church and its leaders and is brought into personal sympathy with his own church in its enterprises and is better prepared to take his place and do his work for the Kingdom. The third point naturally follows, that it is better for the church to educate its own young people in its own institutions. Coming to High Point College, he referred with just pride to its rapid development and brightening prospects, but did not make any effort to conceal the fact that the college must be paid out of debt and amply endowed to insure its continuance and complete success.

Chairman Hanner expressed the hope that good results would follow this district rally. Brother Millaway remarked that it had dawned upon him that the rally had already been a success. The attendance was not large, but the interest was good. The Julian church is not the meeting-place of great congregations, but it is the meeting-place of some of the most faithful Methodist Protestants in North Carolina. In the congregation last Sunday we saw the following ministers besides those already named: W. M. Pike, W. F. Ashburn, W. F. Kennett. Brother Gibbs and perhaps others had attended earlier sessions. After the benediction was pronounced, the members of the congregation lingered on the grounds for social intercourse. It was an exponent of the friendly feeling that characterizes the people of this community.

It was our privilege to go home with the people that now live where our ancestors formerly lived. Before the Civil War Grandfather Julian sold out and moved to Illinois. We do not know how many times the place has changed hands since. It now belongs to the Hardin family, Brother C. H. Hardin and his sons. Brother Walter Hardin who lives at the old Julian place gave us a drink out of the old Julian well, pumped up by a gasoline engine, soon to be replaced by an electric motor. Interest is added to this place by an incident of the Civil War. A squad of about twenty soldiers was sent to this place as a guard and possibly with the purpose of rounding up the bushwhackers. These soldiers were old men and boys, a little too old or too young for regular army service. One night the bushwhackers came in a body to attack. The soldiers were housed in a store-building. The bushwhackers fired on the building. One of the soldiers opened the door and was shot down, falling just outside the door where he was left till the next day. The others tried to fire in self-defense, but their guns had been so long loaded that they refused to fire. Unable to use their guns the soldiers fled through a rear door and rushed into the woods. That front door is still in existence, though now it does service in a crib or granary. It contains a number of bullet holes made that eventful night, and thousands of tacks driven in from time to time to post notices. It was in this storehouse we believe that Mr. Odell, founder of Odell Hardware Co., began his mercantile career. While we were inspecting this old door last Sunday, strange to say, the man who, then a boy, drove the wagon that conveyed the dead soldier to Greensboro came up and told of his part in the events of that exciting time. He said he was greatly relieved when the corpse was delivered to the railroad company in Greensboro. He showed us marks on the bark of a large oaktree which he said were made by balls from the soldiers' guns. The next day after the attack they succeeded in getting their guns to fire at this tree. The man just referred to is Brother Samuel Divinney, now upwards of seventy years old.

While we were walking along, talking of the war incident, a Greensboro boy, formerly a Georgia boy, picked up an Indian arrow. It looked almost new, so sharp was its point and keen its edges. Just think of that, finding an Indian arrow in the streets of Julian where it had been walked over thousands of times.

Here is a rare sight in North Carolina: stretching away from Brother Walter Hardin's residence is a field of ripening wheat containing ninety acres, which will probably average 20 bushels to the acre. There was boasting some years ago over the great quantity of wheat raised in the town of Asheboro, but if we mistake not, Julian has Asheboro beaten in this regard.

Approaching the home of Brother C. H. Hardin we found a table spread with rich viands out in the yard and Brother Carmichael and others surrounding it and partaking of its bounty. We mention Brother Carmichael especially because he seemed to be the principal participant. Brother E. P. Sharp had retired beaten. We thought Brother Carmichael looked happy while he was speaking, but it occurs to us to say that he looked still more happy eating. We will not say it, however, because the remark might seem disparaging. We will simply say that we don't want to be sworn on that point. We believe that he could without any great effort bring himself to eat with publicans and sinners and that he could thus lead them to aspire to be something better than sinners.

While we were in the home of the venerable Brother Hardin, his son Ernest and wife, accompanied by Mr. Bradshaw and wife and two boy relatives, came from Greensboro. Though Ernest is one of Greensboro's most busy business men, he does not fail to visit his aged father frequently. He is devoted not only to his father but also to his sisters who remain in the home and care for their father. The oldest daughter is well known to many of our readers, Mrs. W. T. Hanner. She and her husband and their daughter (a High Point College student) were part of the family group that we left when we took our leave. It was a family reunion, too sacred to be intruded upon.

FROM PRESIDENT CALVIN COOLIDGE

There will be mourning in every part of the religious world over the passing of Dr. Clark whose life was consecrated to the service of God. The Christian Endeavor Societies founded by him are now forming a union that girdles the globe with an active and lasting memorial to his earnest and unselfish work. I knew him as a friend whose high character I respected and whose opinions I was always glad to have. Mrs. Coolidge joins me in deepest sympathy to you and the members of your family in this hour of sorrow.

—The Moody Bible Institute has installed a Jewish Missions Course for the training of both Jews and Gentiles for that work, and which is offered to them free. The special subjects are: Hebrew, Yiddish, Jewish History, Jewish Customs, Messianic Prophecy, Rabbinics. In addition to these special subjects, instruction is also given in the English Bible, Gospel Music and Religious Education, the whole course covering two years and four months.

—Forty-five states will be represented by the 500 farmers who will go abroad in July to study European agricultural methods. The American Farm Bureau is promoting the trip with the co-operation of the Agriculture department.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

THE POSTAL CARD

W. F. Kennett, Editor

Additional requests that the Postal Card shall continue to appear stimulate us to furnish this issue.

The fourth Sunday in this month the editor of the Postal Card preached to a fine and appreciative congregation in First Church, Burlington, while Pastor Taylor was away assisting in a special meeting. The Sunday school was in session when we arrived. There was present the largest number we have ever seen assembled for Sunday school. Pastor Taylor certainly has a great field for usefulness. This is his seventh year of successful work at Burlington.

Yesterday, on the urgent request of Mr. H. L. Coble, we were present at a memorial service held by the Junior Order at Pleasant Garden M. E. Church, South. Pleasant Garden is near the scene of our childhood days, and as we stood before an audience that filled the auditorium, memories of the camp meeting days at Pleasant Garden, Bethlehem and Tabernacle flooded the mind, and voices from Heaven seemed to whisper in our ears.

After a sumptuous dinner spread on a long table, consisting of fried chicken, country ham, cakes and pies, etc., and after mingling with the people for some time, we journeyed on to Julian M. P. Church, where a Fifth Sunday Rally was in session. After listening to a number of addresses we headed for Greensboro by the way of Tabernacle, where we stopped for a while and walked through this large "city of the dead." We stood by the grave of "Uncle Billie" (Rev. W. C. Kennett), for 65 years a minister of the gospel in the Methodist Protestant Church—then on nine miles over good roads and we were back at 417 North Elm street. This was a great day for the editor of the Postal Card, and was much enjoyed also by our traveling companion, Mr. J. E. York.

Greensboro, N. C., Monday, May 30, 1927.

DISTRICT RALLY

The eighth district rally met at Pleasant Hill church of the West Forsyth circuit, May 29th, 1927.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. A. L. Hunter and Mr. Ira Hauser.

In the absence of chairman R. M. Cox, Rev. Geo. L. Curry was elected chairman protem. Floy Hunter was elected secretary.

Mr. Ira Hauser made a short talk on Sunday school work, in which he stressed the preparedness of teachers.

Mrs. W. C. Hammer, president of the Home Missionary Society, made an excellent talk on Home and Foreign missions, followed by a short but impressive talk by Mrs. T. L. Spease, secretary of Young People's Work.

Rev. Geo. L. Curry made some timely remarks on the subject, Forward Be The Watchword.

The meeting then adjourned for lunch.

Afternoon session opened with Chairman R. M. Cox presiding.

Song, Amazing Grace, followed with prayer by Rev. C. H. Whitaker.

Two anthems were rendered by the Pleasant Hill choir which added to the enjoyment of the occasion. Rev. C. M. Compher of First Church, Winston-Salem, made an impressive talk on Evangelism.

The roll was called and the following six churches were represented: First Church, Winston-Salem, Hickory Ridge, Maple Springs, Mt. Zion, Shoals, and Pleasant Hill.

Stewardship was effectively discussed by Mr. J. Norman Wills.

There were four pastors present: Rev. C. M. Compher, Rev. Geo. L. Curry, Rev. C. H. Whitaker, and Rev. A. L. Hunter.

It was decided to hold the next Rally at Maple Springs church the fifth Sunday in April, 1928.

There being no further business the conference was adjourned.

FLOY HUNTER, Secretary.

Hollister, Halifax Circuit.—Our Sunday school is doing fine. We are adding new members nearly every Sunday. We are trying to get the people in our community who do not attend Sunday school anywhere to go to Sunday school somewhere. We are always glad to have new members in our Sunday school and church, for we need them in our work.

At our last appointment our pastor brought to us one of his best sermons. He used as his subject Personal Responsibility. Sorry we had such a small congregation to hear this splendid sermon, but most of our people went to the Sunday school convention at Aurelian Springs. Mr. Spencer announced that our revival would begin the fourth Sunday in August and Rev. Edw. Suits would assist him in our meeting. As his name is "Suits" we feel like he is the one that "suits" us. Let us begin now to pray and work that we may have a great revival in our church.

The Rally Day at Bethesda was a great success. I believe every charge in the first district was represented. The sermon by Rev. A. D. Shelton was one of the most powerful and inspiring sermons I have ever heard. His subject was the man that was true to his vows. Are we true to our vows? especially are we true to to our church vow? We heard some splendid messages on different subjects of the work of the Rural church, the Rural Church being the main subject discussed.

Our Home and Foreign Missionary societies will meet with Mrs. W. E. Knight on Tuesday p.m. after the second Sunday in June. We want all the members to be present as we have some very important business to bring before the society.

KATHLEEN SHEARIN, Reporter.

Weaverville Circuit, Clarks Chapel Church.—Clarks Chapel has not sent in a report lately but nevertheless we feel that we are receiving many blessings. There has been quite a bit of illness in the community during the latter part of the winter season, but at present our religious activities are well supported and we have a good attendance.

Our pastor, Rev. J. D. Cranford, gave us a very interesting and helpful sermon last Sunday morning.

Mothers' Day, Mr. L. T. Watts, the president of the Christian Endeavor Society, prepared a special program and as the topic for the evening was "The Home," the society suggested that he give the program at his home. Every one enjoyed the Home Meeting so well that Mrs. Bill Stroup entertained the society with a program last Sunday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Eller. Mr. and Mrs. Eller are members of the church and when they were young enough to attend services were very active members. In gratitude the society visited them. They seemed to enjoy the program very much and extended a welcome invitation to come again.

The members of the church meet this week to clean off the cemetery before Decoration Day which will be held June 5th. Annual revival services will also begin June 5th. We are expecting splendid services and would ask the cooperation in prayer from those who should be interested and can not attend.

Mebane.—Our special meeting closed the third Sunday night in May after having been in progress for two weeks, the preaching being done by the pastor. There were 17 or more conversions and reclamations and nine received into the church.

Yesterday morning we had 134 present for Sunday school and very good attendance for church service. Yesterday evening at 7:30 the service was in charge of the Christian Endeavor society, a number of the younger boys and girls taking part. This service was very inspiring. It is hoped a senior C. E. society may be organized here at an early date. Short talks were made by the pastor and Miss Grace Barnette, encouraging C. E. work.

Monday evening after the third Sunday the missionary societies met jointly with Mrs. Carl Sykes. A very interesting meeting was held. Reports were given by those who attended the Branch meeting. We hope to accomplish greater things this year in our missionary societies than ever before.

During the social hour Mrs. Sykes served block cream and nabiscos. Our June meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Jack Smith. Most of our organizations are doing very splendid works, but we hope to improve from time to time.

REPORTER.

First Church, Burlington.—After an absence of ten days, pleasantly spent with Brother Pierce and his people of Welch church, we are back home and busy with local work. We are indebted to Brother W. F. Kennett and Brother J. A. Burgess for preaching at the Burlington church during our absence. These are helpful preachers, and we are sure the people were edified by their messages. Sunday, May 29, was Near East Field Day in our city. A visiting speaker in the interest of this cause occupied our pulpit in the morning. At night we were favored with a good sermon by Rev. E. M. Vance, author and publisher of "All The Sayings of Jesus." The congregations of the day, including the Sunday school, were very encouraging. The Sunday school music, under the direction of Mr. J. G. Rogers, is being greatly improved. An orchestra has been secured, and this, with the large Sunday school choir and congregational singing, makes the music a very helpful part of the Sunday school program. If we had room to accommodate a larger number, we would have very little difficulty in increasing our Sunday school attendance to an average of 400.

Our special meeting, of ten days, closed on Wednesday night, May 11. Brother R. A.

Hunter was with us during the meeting, and preached in his usual characteristic helpful manner; the singing, under the direction of Mr. Nelson Miles, was good; and the attendance for the most part during the meeting was up to the average, if not a little better. The visible spiritual results were not what we had hoped for, but perhaps more good was done than we can now estimate. We are indebted to Brother Hunter and Brother Miles for their faithful work.

Under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Rogers, our registration agent, we have already a goodly number registered for the Young People's Convention. We hope to increase the number to at least 100 adults.

We still have sick folks in our congregation, and some are critically ill. All of them have our tender sympathy and prayers. Our good neighbor, Dr. W. D. Moser, had the misfortune to break his arm last Sunday. The break occurred just where the arm joins the shoulder, and the pain has been very acute. We hope that he may have a speedy recovery.

S. W. TAYLOR.

Asheboro.—Our reporter has been out of town the most of the week ends for some time, so it seems to fall to the pastor to do the most of the reporting. We are now in the midst of our preparation for the revival which begins next Sunday. All the churches in town, six in number, will hold meetings at the same time. Our cottage prayer meetings have been of a union nature and have been held in various parts of the town at the same time, six of these being held each night. Dr. T. M. Johnson of Gibsonville will come to us on Monday, June 6, to stay for ten days or more. We invite the people living around Asheboro to come and hear him. The service at 8:30 a.m. will be a union service and will be held in the M. E. Church while the evening services will be held at the various churches at 8:00 o'clock.

The past Sunday morning was somewhat unfavorable from the standpoint of weather, but we had a reasonably good-sized congregation. At the evening hour all the churches of the town were closed and the service was held in the graded school auditorium where a large congregation assembled to hear the sermon to the graduates of the High School, the writer being the preacher of the evening.

Mrs. W. F. Redding, who is taking treatment in the High Point Hospital, is slowly improving. Miss Edith McDowell who was seriously hurt by an automobile several weeks ago has been moved to High Point Hospital and seems to be somewhat improved, though she is still in a serious condition.

We are now making plans for our Daily Vacation Bible school which will be held following the revival.

For the benefit of the ministerial part of the Annual Conference I will say that I never knew so much interest to be manifested in raising poultry as is in the county at the present time. Perhaps some of it is due to the fact that the next session of the Conference will be held here. Preachers, whet up your appetites for chicken.

J. E. PRITCHARD.

Palestine, Flat Rock.—Everything seems to be moving along very nicely with us and we hope by the help and prayers of Christian people to continue in doing more for our Master in the future than we ever have in the past.

Our Sunday school has been doing splendid work this year under the management of J. C. Tucker and he is always on hand.

We now have a large number on roll and hope to continue increasing.

Our pastor, J. B. Trogdon, is aiming to have a circuit rally at Gideon's Grove chuurch the first Sunday in June, and we are looking forward to this meeting. There will be five speakers from our Sunday school to recite.

Love and best wishes to everyone.

T. G. YOUNG.

Chatham Circuit, Piney Grove and Flint Ridge Churches.—Sunday, May 22, was a full day at Piney Grove. At 11 a.m. the Children's Day exercises were held. A large crowd was present for the splendid program rendered. A liberal offering was given for the General Conference Budget.

At 2:30 p.m. the Memorial Day exercises took place. The sermon was preached by Rev. F. L. Gibbs. Although I was absent in the afternoon on account of having to preach at Flint Ridge, I learned that the service was good and well attended.

At Flint Ridge the attendance was good; we were glad to have General Wright, who has been ill for some time, back in the service. Memorial services will be held at Flint Ridge Sunday, June 19th. Let us look forward to a good day here. C. G. ISLEY.

Chatham Circuit, Zion Church.—Sunday, June 5th, will be Memorial Day at Zion Methodist Protestant church. The program covers the entire day beginning at 11 a.m. In addition to the sermon a number of addresses will be made. Singers from various points will render special selections. Everyone is invited, especially those who in past years attended church here. C. G. ISLEY.

—Mrs. Cameron whose illness with sleeping sickness we reported last week succumbed to the disease and was buried one day last week. She leaves a number of small children besides her husband.

—Mr. Allan Adams was the speaker in the Memorial Day service here last Monday.

Page

Mrs. Martha Eliza Page, daughter of the late Rev. W. H. Wills, was born in Tarboro, N. C., May 30, 1839, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. B. I. Dunlap, of Ansonville, N. C., May 9, 1927.

On December 2, 1856, she was united in marriage to Rev. Jesse H. Page, for a number of years an honored minister in the Methodist Protestant Church, later transferring to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mrs. Page was a life-long member of the Methodist Protestant church, uniting with the church in Brinkleyville early in life and transferring her membership to the Henderson church after the death of her husband in 1903. She was the mother of seven children, all of whom survive except one son, Marion Lee, who died at the age of seven years. The names of the surviving children follow: Mrs. F. R. Harris and Mrs. L. R. Gooch of Henderson; Mrs. S. W. Steele, Rockingham, N. C., Miss Annie M. Page, Augusta, Ga., Mrs. B. I. Dunlap, Ansonville, N. C., and Frank L. Page, Philadelphia, Pa. Seventeen grand-children and five great-grand-children also survive.

It was not my privilege to know Mrs. Page but a little more than a year, but during that time I had learned to love and respect her as one of God's faithful servants. She was intensely interested in the affairs of the Kingdom and when she had the privilege of attending the services of the church she manifested a true spirit of worship and never failed to have a kind and encouraging word for her pastor. She will be missed very much by all who knew her, but our loss is her gain and we feel sure that the hearts of departed loved ones were made glad because of her tarnsfer to the Church Triumphant.

The funeral service was held at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. R. Gooch, by the writer, assisted by Rev. H. B. Porter of the local M. E. church, and interment was made in Elmwood cemetery. A large number of friends and relatives attended the service and the floral offering was the largest and most beautiful that we have seen in a long time.

If your church does not appear in the above list, see your pastor and ask him to appoint an agent for your church. If there is an agent for your church, and you have not been solicited for a registration, don't wait for the agent to come to you, hunt the agent up and register.

All of the agents will please send me all of the names they have, if it is not more than two. We would like to have a long list of names in next week's Herald.

The registration fee is fifty cents for adults; twenty-five cents for children under twelve years of age.

The money derived from this campaign helps to put the cost of the conference in reach of every person of the Methodist Protestant church in North Carolina who desires to attend. If it was not for the campaign the cost would be prohibitive to but a few. I am sure every loyal Methodist Protestant will consider it a privilege to have this little part in making possible this conference for our youth.

EFLAND HIGH SCHOOL CLASS POEM, CLASS OF '27

The time at last has come, my friends,
Where the ways for us must part,
Though the climax still is unattained,
Of the high hopes in our heart.

The days have come, the days have gone,
And the years too swift, it seems,
Have brought us to our parting ways,
To be re-lived but in our dreams.

Our High School days we will not forget,
When life's realities have begun,
Long we will cherish the golden ties,
Of the friendships here we've won.

Ah, true it is, a friendship good,
Is more than a song of life,
Is more than a gentle cadence,
To be disturbed by petty strife.

A friendship true is grander far
Than any earthly song,
Its greater than the wealth of mines,
In its power to build life strong.

Looking back across the years
We've been together here,
The flood of memory stirs our hearts,
To our eyes there comes a tear.

Yet time will make the best of friends,
And even loved ones part,
But parting binds them closer still,
Each heart to noble heart.

Farewell, our Efland school, farewell,
Our fond farewell is given,
May blessings rare attend the school,
And the class of '27.

TRUTH

The truest and highest expression of truth
Is not in the words alone spoken.
But truth is life, made safe and secure,
By faith in God's love never broken.

Truth is more than a message proclaimed,
It's more than a mere thoughtless word,
It's more than a compliment or a rebuke—
It is faith to be known, but unheard.

Truth may be read in lives that have grown
Stronger in thought, life and deed,
Truth is expressed by the harvest reaped,
For the harvest reveals the seed.

If life and service alike are false,
The tares then most surely will grow.
But if wheat is the yield, we willingly say—
Then wheat is the seed that you sow.

Dare we pronounce a life to be false
When directed by God's mighty hand?
Dare we question the motives and deeds, I say
Though circumstances we may not understand?

—The editor in his trip to Adrian College is to be accompanied by Brother Henry Hunter, a former student and near-graduate of Adrian College. We expect to make the trip in an auto, and hope to have less tire trouble than we had in our trip to Ohio some years ago; or rather we did hope so until yesterday when we were told that new tires have a way of picking up more tacks than old ones. We are thinking of devising a set of magnets to precede the wheels and pick up the tacks that would puncture the tires. If we get this improvement perfected, we may not have any punctures.

China's Troubles Traced to England's Wrongs

Last Friday night there came to us by radio transmission an address delivered in Pittsburgh, Penn., by the Chinese ambassador to Washington. He had the same evening addressed an audience of Pittsburgh ladies' clubs who had requested him to speak to them on conditions in China. We presume his address by radio was a substantial repetition of his address to the Pittsburgh audience. He addressed his radio audience as "Ladies, gentlemen, and friends." After expressing his pleasure at being permitted to broadcast to the American people a statement of conditions in China, he proceeded in a dispassionate way to speak of China's troubles and to trace them back to their causes. He found the root of most of China's present troubles in the Opium War of 80 years ago. In this war China suffered defeat at the hands of England and was severely punished by the conquerors. Not only was the island of Hong Kong taken, but China was put under tribute to England in that a certain per cent of import taxes was demanded by England. This has left China without adequate revenue and weakened the administration of government ever since. He appealed to the America npeople for their sympathy with China in her effort to throw off the yoke that Great Britain imposed 80 years ago.

Ridpath, an American historian, says of the Opium War: "If there be a single instance in the recent history of mankind more highly illustrative of the possible meanness, avarice, and arrogance of the strong—an example of the willful persecution and unmerited punishment of an unoffending people by one less numerous, but more mighty than themselves —it is that of the Opium War of Great Britain with Chnia."

As to the justice of England's course, it would be paralleled if in these days England should make war on the United States because we will not permit English merchants to sell alcoholic liquors in our seaport cities.

This great wrong that England has done to China should somehow be righted. It stands and must ever stand in the way of world peace.

Taking a Vacation

"Come ye apart and rest awhile," said Jesus to His disciples. The Master saw that they needed a vacation. In this time the need of vacations is appreciated perhaps as never before. And it may be that the need of vacations is greater than ever before because people are driven at a more rapid pace by their work. This is an age of steam and electricity, and steam and electricity outstrip horses and oxen in their gait. Then there is the spirit of the age which tends to quicken the efforts of workers in almost all lines. Greater production and increased efficiency are goals almost everywhere. This stimulates and urges on to the utmost effort. The result is tired brains, muscles and nerves. The human machine becomes worn. It is endowed with recuperative power, but there is a natural limit to this, and when that limit is passed there is deterioration. Permanent loss is likely to be incurred. Prudent people recognize the finitude of their powers and stop before they do themselves permanent injury. Some, however, are so absorbed in their tasks that they lose sight of themselves and overtax their energies and do themselves lasting injury before they realize it. The sabbath was given us in part because we need vacations. Those who decline to take the sabbath vacation do themselves a greater wrong than they know. But to many people the regular sabbath rest is not sufficient. They need a more protracted period of rest, they need a vacation of days and in some cases of weeks. The man who is doing nothing may excite a smile by the announcement that he is going away for a rest, but the other extreme is more common in these days, that of men really overworked working on without heeding the necessity of giving themselves a chance to build up their lowered vitality. Taking a vacation is a necessity to all busy people. Some will say that it is better to wear out than to rust out, but there is a better way than either. We have no right to wear out prematurely the bodies that God has given us.

Cornelius

What a beautiful story is that told us in the 10th chapter of Acts regarding Cornelius. We might have expected a very different story when we learned what position Cornelius held. He was a soldier and a captain of soldiers. His occupation was not conducive to the development of fine character. War as then practiced tended to make men inhuman, brutal. It still does. The finer feelings of human nature would naturally wane and perish in such a pursuit. We might have expected to read that Cornelius was a cruel, godless man who cared little how he lived or what he did. But the sacred writer tells us that Cornelius was "a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, who gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always." Such a character would have been notable among the most pious people, but it shines with special luster when appearing in a Roman military captain. Then the story pictures this man of war engaged in prayer at three o'clock in the afternoon. He did not simply pray a hurried prayer at bedtime, but in the midst of the busy day he turns his mind and heart to prayer. We are not much surprised that an angel comes from heaven to visit him. In his spiritual life he has come very near to heaven. God hears his prayers very plainly and answers by sending one of the Shining Ones. The angel has a message that surprises us a little. He tells Cornelius to send for a man who will tell him what he ought to do. Why did not the angel tell him what he ought to do? That was not God's way. The work was a work for men and not for angels. The man to be sent for would be helped in the telling and the message would come to Cornelius with greater force if it came from a fellowman. Two men were to be helped by the meet-

"FATHER ENDEAVOR" CLARK

By Amos R. Wells

After a devoted, earnest, and wonderfully fruitful life of seventy-five years, eight months, and fourteen days, the founder of Christian Endeavor societies, Dr. Francis E. Clark, died in Newton, Mass., on May 26. His death will be mourned in literally all parts of the globe, in every land, by people of all races and tongues. His life-work established a permanent religious institution, the young people's society, which has trained and is training many millions of young people and rendering them vastly more serviceable to Christ and the church. The idea which Dr. Clark developed and visualized in his church in Portland, Me., in 1881, and which he has pressed upon the churches with apostolic zeal through the nearly half a century since, has quickened the church, furnished them with enthusiastic leaders, stimulated missionary activity, broadened fellowship, intensified civic ardor, deepened consecration, inspired evangelism, and brought into the church everywhere the happy spirit of youth. All of this Dr. Clark was permitted to see and to rejoice in abundantly before he passed away.

Probably no person in all the world has been so widely beloved as Dr. Clark. His name is a household word throughout all continents. The sincerity of the man, his modesty and humility, his friendliness and good cheer, his love for the Master and for all of Christ's children, endeared him wherever he went. He never failed to arouse his great audiences to white-hot zeal. All the millions of Christian Endeavorers gave him a personal devotion such as few religious leaders in the world's history have been able to gain.

A very quiet and unassuming man, Dr. Clark possessed all the powers of leadership which he was so eager to implant in the lives of young Christians. Following his example, the world-encircling organization which he established has never known a single strife for precedence. The Endeavorers have been ready to conduct great enterprises and keep in the background while doing so. That was the spirit of Dr. Clark.

Another factor in Dr. Clark's success was his persevering devotion to one purpose. He was deeply interested in many important matters, but never swerved from the cause of the youth of the world. Dr. Clark could have done many things in addition to his work in and for young people's societies. He was a very efficient preacher and church organizer and a deeply loved pastor; the largest churches of his denomination were open to him. He was a master of graceful, vigorous, and charming English, and wrote thirty-six books—volumes of travel, Bible studies, essays, and books concerning Christian Endeavor. He was one of the great travellers of the world, circumnavigating the globe five times, and in addition making many journeys to the separate continents—all of them. He was called to numerous important fields of labor, but he thrust aside all these honorable and lucrative opportunities and held his course true to its original direction, the establishment of the young in ways of Christian consecration and usefulness. "This one thing I do," said Dr. Clark, and few men that have ever lived have so manfully carried out that motto.

It is interesting and instructive to note how completely through these forty-six years the Christian Endeavor societies have held to the fundamental principles on which Dr. Clark founded them. The first of these is definite commitment to ideals, to standards, which is called the Christian Endeavor pledge; though no fixed form is required, and each society is free to formulate its own pledge or statement of purpose. The second of these is the principle of individual responsibility. Every member of a Christian Endeavor society is expected to make his contribution to every meeting, and do his part in all the work of the society, and this expectation has been marvelously successful in developing personalities and the spirit of co-operation. "Everybody is wiser than anybody" is a Christian Endeavor saying. A third principle has been the cultivation of the private devotional life—daily prayer and Bible-reading, and the reading of devotional books. Dr. Clark was a very busy man, but he always found time for the Quiet Hour with God, he delighted in family prayers. He was a man of God, and commended His way of life to all by the refreshment he found in it and brought from it to others. All of this was carried out in the societies by a splendidly complete system of committees, of officers, and of organizations. No business in all the world is better planned and conducted than "the King's business" in the hands of the young people's societies of Christian Endeaor.

One of the most beautiful sides of Dr. Clark was seen in his home—that place where so many great religious leaders grow careless and fail. The Clark home life has always been one of ideal beauty and charm. With his noble wife, and with their fine family of children and grandchildren, Dr. Clark has been a boon companion, eager for all sorts of fun, while at the same time he was the revered priest of the little flock. For wit and sprightliness, for solid intellectual worth, for far-reaching helpfulness, for abounding hospitality, for true affection, and for sincere and unobtrusive piety, the family life of Dr. and Mrs. Clark would serve as a model of what a Christian household might and should be.

One of the marked characteristics of Dr. Clark was his fondness for outdoor life. He always, when he could, spent his summer by the sea, at first in Maine and of recent years at Sagamore Beach, Mass. Even in his old age he was always among the very last to "go in swimming" as cold weather approached and among the first to begin again in the spring. He rejoiced in outdoor games, in "hiking" and the like. His first book, Our Vacations, was an account of a camping trip in the White Mountains taken before that region had become in any degree fashionable tourist ground. He was happiest when on his little farm on Cape Cod, with its two-century-old farmhouse, its quaint furnishings, and its walls crowded with Christian Endeavor mementoes from many lands. There he rejoiced to gather his friends and large parties of Christian Endeavor pilgrims, and was at his very best when conducting outdoor services on "Pine Ridge."

Dr. Clark did not enter into the theological controversies of the times and was deeply grieved by them. The ranks of Christian Endeavor counsellors have always contained men and women of all phases of belief, but in all the vast Christian Endeavor gatherings there has never, it is safe to say, been a single doctrinal controversy. Dr. Clark has always held that when Christians work earnestly together for a cause that is near to Christ's heart, they have neither time nor desire for disputes, and the history of nearly five harmonious decades in an organization made up of fully eighty different denominations amply justifies his faith.

The founder of Christian Endeavor societies was singularly indifferent to the precise form those societies might take. At various times he proposed numerous committees and subordinate organizations, but only as means of setting the young people at work for Christ, only as methods for the time; and if the methods grew stale or the times changed, he changed as swiftly as the times, forgot the old methods, and invented new ones. He knew that the good is the enemy of the best, and that new occasions teach new duties. He was jealous for the essentials. He was vigorously opposed to any plan that took from the young their opportunities for initiative, for the direction of their own affairs, for their training in service and their individual development; but if these ends were gained, he cared not how they were gained.

This remarkable leader drew to himself a great host of young leaders and made them his trusted associates. A splendid set of them are now hard at work at the Boston headquarters of Christian Endeavor, young men and young women who would make the success of any movement. A product of Christian Endeavor societies—Rev. Daniel A. Poling, D. D., Litt. D., LL. D. Though still a young man, Dr. Poling is pastor of the oldest Protestant church in America, the large, wealthy, and influential Marble Collegiate Church on Fifth Avenue, New York City. He is also director of the J. C. Penney Foundation, the editor of The Christian Herald, the president of the New York Federation of Churches, the president of the United Temperance forces of the country, and leader in many other good causes. He is author of widely-read stories and essays, and is an orator of wonderful power. Dr. Clark was very happy in his choice of a successor to carry on his great work, and this choice is only a fair sample of his skill in choosing his partners.

Dr. Clark was an ardent patriot, profoundly interested in many national causes, such as prohibition and the welfare of the immigrants, but his every instinct, as well as his rich experiences in all countries, made him a cosmopolitan. With Christian Endeavor children in every land, Dr. Clark hated war with a perfect hatred, and much of his later years was devoted to intense labors in the cause of world peace.

Indeed, as the years go on, we are likely to think of Dr. Clark quite as much in the light of an apostle of peace as in the light of the founder and advocate of Christian Endeavor. He felt the two aims to be one. Each of them meant the fellowship of all Christians and the union of mnay Christian bodies. Each of them meant also the fellowship of sections, of races, and of nations. One year Dr. Clark gave to the Endeavorers of the world this inspiring motto: "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." Another year he chose as the Christian Endeavor motto, "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister." On a recent year his selection of a motto was, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." All of these mottoes, which were gladly adopted by the Endeavorers, came right out of Dr. Clark's life. He took Christ sincerely as his Master, and knew all men as his brethren. He lived not to be ministered unto, but to minister. And he humbly sought to be a friend of Christ's by way of the path of obedience. Thus living and loving and serving, "Father Endeavor" Clark blessed his generation and all generations to come. What glorious service must be his in the Courts of Heaven!

—The fallacy of the levee system to confine streams during flood times is emphasized by Mr. Lincoln Colcord, of the Minneapolis Tribune. In a recent article he speaks of the way the Yellow River, "China's Sorrow," has been filling up its bed with sediment while the levees have been constantly built higher. Now the Yellow River is said to be in some places 60 feet above the level of the plain. He declares the bed of the Mississippi river is filling up in the same way.

FORT BRAGG MEMORIAL CHAPEL, FAYETTEVILLE, N. C.

A place of worship for the living; a fitting memorial to North Carolina's heroic dead: this is the keynote of the plan for the Memorial Chapel at Fort Bragg, the state's only United States Army Post.

Articles of incorporation of the Fort Bragg Memorial Chapel Association were filed at Raleigh last week, thus bringing to a head the long-cherished hopes of the late Dr. John A. McKethan of Fayetteville. After his death, these plans were adopted by the Business Men's Evangelistic Club of Fayetteville, in co-operation with Chaplain Walter B. Zimmerman, U. S. A. A state-wide organization is now being formed with the purpose of enlisting the interest of the entire white population of the state. Headquarters have been opened in the Prince Charles Hotel Building at Fayetteville.

Dr. J. M. Lilly, of Fayetteville, is president of the newly chartered association, with Charles C. Rose and Frank Stedman, also of Fayetteville, as vice-president and treasurer, respectively. C. C. Chadbourn is secretary, and Chaplain Zimmerman ex-officio member.

Although Fort Bragg has a population of approximately 3,400, religious services must be held in the War Department Theater there. It has not been the policy of Congress for some time past to appropriate money for church buildings on Government property, and the Fort Bragg Memorial Chapel Association has been formed to finance, build, and present to the Post an adequate and fitting community church for the use of all denominations.

ing God planned for them. How many meetings of two people are planned of God we cannot tell, but this story of God's action in preparing both these men, Cornelius and Peter, for their interview suggests that to this day many meetings of people are providentially arranged. Of course this is true among God-fearing, consecrated people. God leads them to mutual service.

We can imagine what Cornelius expected from Peter who had been discovered to him in such a miraculous way. It is little wonder that when Peter came Cornelius prostrated himself before him in an act of worship. This was a mistake on the part of Cornelius, but it was rather a beautiful mistake; certainly we cannot censure him for it. But we would censure Peter if he had allowed Cornelius to worship him. But Peter promptly protests against it, raising himself in our esteem. Peter's speech was an extemporaneous one, revealing some sense of embarrassment, but at length getting into the proper channel. He supplemented what Cornelius already knew with the essential parts of the gospel story, not trying in any formal way to tell Cornelius "what he ought to do," but leading on to the believing faith in Jesus which was at once rewarded with the gift of the Holy Ghost, bringing Cornelius up to the highest and most assuring Christian experience. Cornelius' life was ennobled and Peter's mind was broadened by this important interview. God's ways are always beautiful and beneficent.

—Official announcement has been made that President Coolidge will spend his vacation in the Black Hills of South Dakota.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

A Reasonable Appeal

Such is the appeal that your Foreign Missionary Board is making for Extra Special Offering this Children's Day. The offering goal is $50,000. This, in lump sum, might seem unreasonable at first glance. But when we remember that this amount is being asked from a constituency of 190,000 Methodist Protestants its unreasonableness becomes a mere passing fancy. On the other hand, in many ways this appeal is surpassingly reasonable. May I mention a few?

It is reasonable because of the worthiness of the cause for which the appeal is being made. No cause is more worthy than the great missionary cause. No investment can be made, say some of our wisest and best informed financiers of world affairs, that will bring as large returns as the investment in Foreign Missions. So worthy is the cause that it was the theme of the last message that Jesus gave to His Apostles, known as the great commission—"Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have told you." Dr. H. L. Elderdice, in his Thirtieth Baccalaureate Sermon, calls it "The Greatest Commencement Address." So worthy is this great cause of world-wide evangelism that Jesus gave not only this last "Great Public Farewell" as His last commission, but He gave Himself to it and for it. Worthy, indeed!

It is reasonable because of the great need. Yes, your Board of Foreign Missions is financially involved at the present time. Likewise all other Boards of our beloved Zion dependent upon the budget income that has not been incoming. This financial condition is not because of careless or thoughtless extravagance or through lack of careful economy. Economy has been guarded on every hand. Our former Executive Secretary, Dr. Fred C. Klein, was one of the denomination's most careful economists, as well as one of her most self-sacrificing servants. As time goes on more and more will be revealed the self-sacrificing spirit of this great and good man. No sacrifice was too great for him to make for the cause that was uppermost in his heart, for the cause he loved, for the cause to which and for which he gave himself.

Furthermore, the Foreign Missionary Board constantly plans for the closest economy. This has been its past policy. It is its present policy. With a personnel like the present it will be its future policy.

No! The present financial condition of the Board is not due to extravagance but is due to the lack of realizing the budget in full. Given the budget in full for the two quadrenniums that will now soon be history your Board would have all its obligations met in full, its work greatly enlarged and a neat balance in the treasury. Given the budget in full we would have no cause or reason for asking for this special memorial offering. And that we may see the grave need of going forward and not take one step backward may I again refer to Dr. Elderdice's Baccalaureate and quote, "Statisticians tell us that the non-Christion world is greater in area and population than the Christian world, and that over sixty-five per cent of the world religions are non-Christian. No missions have been established to meet the needs of twenty-six million of the natives of Central Africa. It has been recently estimated that in India there are eleven million Animists, twelve million Buddhists, sexenty-one million Mohammedans, and two hundred and thirty-four million Hindus. And in China proper about forty million of the inhabitants, scattered over four hundred and eighty thousand square miles of territory, are without any missionary contact." Need, indeed!

This special offering is also needed to give encouragement to the growing liberality of our foreign constituency and friends. Take, for instance, this special appeal for increased offerings at Children's Day for the purpose of paying for the Klein-Coulbourn Memorial Church at Nagoya. While we have been making appeal after appeal for this necessary and worthy enterprise, have the Japanese been sitting idly by and supporting in no way financially? By no means! A new Science Hall has been built at a cost of $5,644. Of this amount the Japanese have paid $4,500. In addition to this they added $150 for rostrums for each of the class rooms and a covered walk between the two buildings, and $361.90 for the purchase of new desks, book-cases, etc. In other words, during the past year "Our Japanese friends have put into our school work a total amount of $4,961.00; and this amount was in ready cash when the work was completed. Should not this fine and generous work on the part of the Japanese be encouraged and emulated?

Well, here is the new Klein-Coulbourn Memorial Church doubtless completed. Our American constituency has been asked to pay for this church. It cost, in round numbers, $20,000. Your Foreign Missionary Board, at its last meeting, was asked by our missionaries either to cable the balance of nearly $9,000 unpaid or to cable our missionaries to borrow this amount in Japan so that the necessary funds might be in hand upon the completion of the church. Because of the financial embarrassment of the Board the latter course had to be pursued. The loan, however, is to be made for a very short period of time in the faith that our American constituency will arise to this emergency in our Children's Day offerings. We have faith in the pledges made at the last General Conference being paid, also.

A Three-Fold Request

First: If you have not yet ordered your Children's Day programs, do it today! There is time yet. On May 28, 750 orders had been received. They are still coming. Order yours now! Send orders to Mrs. Mary E. Klein, Berwyn, Maryland.

Second: Make the appeal for the largest Children's Day offering ever from your Sunday school and church, keeping your eye and heart constantly on the goal for $50,000.

Third: Send your offering immediately to your Conference Treasurer and mark Children's Day offering so that you get proper credit and your Foreign Missionary Board the money. Come on! "Let's go!"

HOME MISSIONS

The annual meeting of the Board of Home Missions was held in Rhode Island Avenue Church, Washington, D. C., Tuesday and Wednesday, May 17 and 18. The meeting was held simultaneously with the other General Conference Boards and the President's Council. This gave an opportunity for fellowship with many of the leaders of our denomination from every section of the church.

We were disappointed in the opening in not having the two lay members of the Board with us. Mr. H. A. Sicker, our President, sent his regrets that, on account of important business engagements it was impossible for him to be present. Mr. J. M. Millikan arrived on Wednesday morning and remained until the close of the session. Dr.Turkelson was elected President pro tem.

The Secretary's report presented a review of the work accomplished during the year, also an outline of the work for the new year. During the last quarter of a century the Board, by the supervision given, and financial aid extended, has made it possible for many new churches to be established, many of which have become strong organizations with large church memberships and Sunday schools. These have not only given character and prestige to our denomination in the towns and cities where they are located, but are contributing liberally to our Foreign Missions, educational institutions, and other activities of our denomination.

The great opportunities arising, and many calls for assistance, with the belief that the Annual Conferences would meet at least a large part of the General Conference budget, prompted the Board to pursue a liberal policy in its appropriations with the result that a large debt was incurred. It was, therefore, found necessary two years ago to institute a policy of retrenchment. We are gratified to report that a very creditable part of this debt has already been paid.

Much time was given during the sessions of the Board to personal interviews from brethren who were present, and written applications for help. It was a painful experience to every member of the Board not to be able to respond faorably to these requests. If the churches needing help will be patient it is to be hoped that in the near future, with an increased income from the Budget, and other sources the Board will be in a better position to respond to the worthy and urgent appeals coming from almost every part of our denominational area.

A Budget was presented indicating the approximate receipts and expenditures for the ensuing year. This showed very plainly there would be little margin for new work without involving the church in increased indebtedness. This the Board is striving to avoid. I have never known a more painstaking or conscientious body of men in handling the Lord's money, or more sympathetic toward every worthy cause. The Secretary was instructed to visit many of the churches and conferences where the new fields are located, and with counsel and co-operation do everything possible to encourage and stimulate the churches and ministers in their efforts to establish our denomination and advance our Lord's Kingdom.

The reports of the Easter service were most gratifying. There was strong approval given of the effort made to emphasize the spiritual observance of this joyous season of the year by urging the churches to engage in a concerted effort in soul-winning and the reception of new members. In doing this the financial part of the Easter program was not overlooked.

The Board through its Secretary appeals to the entire church for a sympathetic and hearty co-operation in the important work assigned it. It is the great desire of the Board that this year may be a notable one in its history and that it may be able to present a gratifying report to the General Conference in 1928.

COMMENCEMENT AT WESTMINSTER COLLEGE

The school year at Westminster College began last fall under a cloud of doubt and uncertainty, but ended satisfactorily. Hope and confidence had taken the place of pessimism and despair. Before the ideals and goals of those interested are realized, however, much hard work, many painful sacrifices and endless patience, persistence and prayer will be necessary. But for the moment at least the trend is certainly in the right direction.

Commencement at Tehuacana is the high tide of the year. It is a climax of weeks and months of planning and preparation. Situated in a small inland community the college is the one most important industry. Tehuacana without Westminster College would be a body without a soul. In all probability without the college there would be no community; the villiage would vanish. Therefore the interest of the people is readily understood. They attend the exercises by the scores and their presence is a real inspiration.

The commencement program is rather elaborate including as it does recitals, contests, society programs, investiture service, alumni luncheon and program, baccalaureate, class day, commencement, etc. The student productions were of a high order revealing talent and training that would be a credit to a far larger institution. The operetta "Hearts and Blossoms" given on Monday evening was splendidly rendered. Any school could be proud of young folks capable of producing an entertainment of that character.

The baccalaureate sermon and commencement address were given by Rev. Harlan Luther Feeman, D. D., president of Adrian College. These messages were not only appropriate and timely but scholarly and eloquent. He also spoke to the Board of Regents. It was an address epitomizing the experiences of his last ten years at Adrian.

A special feature of the Sunday service was the dedication of the new chapel windows. They are the gift of the local Ladies' Aid Society. When the plan was proposed some two years ago it seemed an impossible undertaking. But the windows have been purchased, installed and paid for in much less time than was expected. It is our understanding that these splendid women contemplate other improvements which will increase the beauty and utility of the main college building.

The graduating class consisted of five boys and ten girls, three of whom will receive their diplomas at the close of the summer session. It was a splendid group of young people and all united in expressing hearty appreciation for the benefit of Westminster College had been to them. They repeatedly voiced their gratitude to Dean Willis and the faculty and promised to exert their influence to the full in behalf of the college.

The summer school opened June 6. Indications were encouraging for a good attendance. It is too early to estimate the prospects for the fall opening but it is certain they are decidedly better than last year. In fact, good words and hopeful were heard on every hand. The only cloud in an otherwise bright sky was a deficit of around $3,000. This was incurred due to the fact that bills inherited from former years had been paid to the extent of approximately $5,000. To liquidate this obligation and to take advantage of a special proposition from the Board of Education as well as to make the most of the returns anticipated from the Centennial Gratitude Gift, Rev. E. M. Mouser was appointed the agent to liquidate the indebtedness. In addition, the plans to secure 500 friends to underwrite the college for the next five years will be aggressively carried forward under the competent leadership of President G. O. McMillan and Dean Willis. A better day is dawning for Westminster College. Success will not come suddenly but the trend is in the right direction.

WHY NOT HIGH POINT COLLEGE?

When summer comes we want to take a trip. We want a rest. We want to change our environment for awhile. For some, a nice trip to the seashore would be appealing indeed; for some, nothing could be better than a trip to the mountains; while for others nothing would give greater joy than a trip out to Aunt Mary's, out on the farm away from the noise of the city. As you make plans for the summer, please do not overlook the fact that a most profitable week may be spent at High Point College. Listen to what Lawrence Little has to say:

"Soon to thousands of young people will come the lure of the great out-of-doors and we shall all be eager for the hike and the camp. The vacation season is upon us. Some of you will be wondering what to do with yourselves during the period when you may be away from your regular tasks.

"To Methodist Protestant young people who wish to get most out of their vacation period, this is a clarion call: Spend your vacation gloriously! Instead of just 'taking a vacation,' realize some eternal values this summer. Under ideal natural surroundings, study the fine art of Christian leadership. Enrich your circle of friendships. Know the leaders of your church. Become acquainted with the finest young people in your state. Enjoy the finest recreational advantages under the best leadership that can be secured. Come into closer fellowship with God and into more intimate contact with His wonderful outdoors. Drop your tasks and come to camp!"

The following names complete the list of faculty members: Rev. M. J. Shroyer, Rev. P. E. Lindley, Rev. N. M. Harrison, Dr. H. W. Maier, Mrs. H. W. Maier, Miss Lillian McCormick, Miss Mary Dozier, and Rev. R. W. White. These and the other members of the faculty are consecrated men and women of God. They have made special study of the subjects which they will teach. To come under the instruction and influence of these people means that you will be better fitted to wrestle with and solve the problems in your local church.

Come on, folks, let's go to High Point College for the Young People's Summer Conference, July 18-24.

CHILDREN'S DAY

In many of our Sunday schools during this month, Children's Day services will be held. Eight hundred and forty-six orders have been received, but that represents more Sunday schools, as pastors sometimes order services for the several schools on their circuit, without telling how many schools will use them.

Of course the same amount of good is accomplished, but it would be helpful to know just how many schools are receiving the training by using these missionary services.

Samples were sent to every superintendent and pastor whose names could be secured, yet all have not sent in their orders. Some have ordered, saying they reecived no sample. Who is to blame? If we do not have the names how can we send samples?

The supplies are free, and are as follows: Services which contain songs, responsive readings, pictures of some of the work being done by the Union Board, with a brief outline written by Dr. Broomfield (together with the readings and memorial); recitation sheet, a memorial pageant, envelopes, and a large poster to hang in your Sunday school.

Will not each pastor and superintendent see that supplies are ordered, as they will cost nothing and you will have an interesting service and get your people acquainted with our work in Japan, China and India.

Send me your order at once. By mailing your order early in the week you will get them by Sunday. Parcel post is often slow.

Have you received the Pageant?

Have you received the Memorial Poster?

Have you received the Services, Recitation Sheets, and Envelopes?

If not, why not? They are yours for the asking. Act at once.

Mrs. Fred C. Klein,

WIDELY KNOWN

During my school days at Wofford College, 1890 to 1894, a true story was current among the boys of a personal experience between an incorrigible student and that grand old man and much beloved president, Dr. James H. Carlisle.

The faculty and the "Old Doctor" had exhausted every known means of effecting a reformation in that particular student but with no avail, until finally the president summoned the boy to his library for final expulsion.

The Doctor in dismissing him said: "Young man, you will never amount to anything!" Some years elapsed, the boy expelled appeared in the old college town star actor of a well advertised but notorious stage company. Thinking it his chance to "come back" at his old tutor, he sent by a special messenger to Dr. Carlisle a complimentary ticket to his performance, upon which were written these words: "Doctor Carlisle, you dismissed me from college with the statement that I'd 'never amount to anything' but now I am more widely known than you." The wise old Doctor turned the ticket over and wrote "So is the devil," and returned it to the sender.—Selected.

—A gift of 40,000,000 francs, about $1,600,000, by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., for the conservation of the Versailles and Fontainebleau Palaces and the continuance of the restoration of the Reims Cathedral is announced in Paris. This gift is in addition to the $1,000,000 given by Mr. Rockefeller in 1924 for the same purposes.

The WORK and the WORKERS

Sunday, June 5th, was spent with Rev. B. M. Williams and his people on Orange Circuit. They held an all day service at Union Grove beginning with Children's Day services. Mrs. Dixon spoke on Missions immediately following these exercises and the offering amounted to $39 and covered the apportionment for the Board of Foreign Missions for Union Grove.

If all our churches will do that well at Children's Day, North Carolina will do better by this Board than it has ever done before.

In the afternoon I had the privilege of preaching to a house full of earnest listeners. This is one of our smaller churches, but they are wide-awake and progressive.

For the night service we were at Efland, where we were greeted by a good congregation and we enjoyed preaching to them. Mrs. Dixon also spoke on Missions. Twenty-one years ago it was my privilege to serve Orange Circuit as pastor, and it always seems like going back home when I visit these people. Brother Williams is greatly loved by his people, and together they are rendering splendid service for the Master.

A Census of Our Churches

This last week Mr. W. M. Stewart, of the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., wrote and asked me to send him a complete list of all our churches and pastors. This I did, giving him the name and address of each pastor, and the name of each local church. Once more he is going to make an effort to get correct statistics. If he writes you, please be prompt and explicit in giving him the facts. Our denominational statistics as published by the government will depend upon the accuracy and completeness of reports by our pastors.

The President of the General Conference has this to say: "The United States Census Bureau has assigned to one of its clerks the duty of looking after the statistics of our church. The government is trying to obtain for official publication in the next census complete and correct reports of all churches. It is sending out blanks on which each pastor is asked to make these reports. Postage is furnished for returning the blanks, and yet after waiting many months it appears that 700 of our pastors have paid no attention to this request.

"It is passing strange to me that our pastors are so indifferent to a matter that concerns us far more than it does anyone else. Do you want to see our church deprecated before the public in not having its proper credit for what it has and is? The government is doing, without any expense to us, all it can to present us in a correct manner. Will we not do our part? In the name of the Methodist Protestant Church, I urge you to attend to this important matter at once and fully."

If you have not already done this, and have misplaced the blanks, or if you have not received the proper blanks a note to Mr. W. M. Stewart, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., will bring to you the necessary blanks. Please do this without fail.

Some Encouraging Facts

Recently I was called upon to make a five-minute address before the Council of Annual Conference Presidents in Washington City. In preparation for this I gathered some statistics based upon a ten-year comparison. These figures were so encouraging to me that I showed them to a few friends, and have read them upon three occasions, and as a result several have asked me to publish them. I do this just for the encouragement of Methodist Protestants who may read and study these figures:

The Comparison

	1916	1926	Increase
Number of charges	61	92	31
Number of pastors	60	86	28
Number of church members	22,427	27,905	5,498
Number in Sunday school	19,187	27,179	7,992
Paid pastors	$ 34,951	$ 103,954	$ 69,003
Average pastor's salary	582	1,340	760
Paid A. C. B.	5,399	10,910	5,511
Paid G. C. B.	6,071	19,159	13,088
Raised for all purposes	97,698	365,833	268,235
Value of all church property	471,150	2,607,600	2,136,450

Some of this looks too good to be true, but if any one will take time to compare the Conference Journals for 1916 and 1926 he can verify these figures.

A new church building in Asheboro, new Sunday school rooms in Henderson, two new church buildings in Greensboro replacing one old one, a new building in High Point instead of the old, inadequate building there, two new church buildings in Thomasville, our new plant in Burlington, and also in Lexington, together with a number of new and improved church buildings in our country fields, has added very greatly to our property valuation.

Then during this ten years the Penny Brothers building for boys has been added at the Children's Home, and the entire college plant has been added to our assets.

Last year was a bad crop year, and when one stops to think that during 1926 we raised for all purposes $268,235 more than we did in 1916 it certainly gives us great reasons for rejoicing.

We are certainly hoping and believing that 1927, our century year, will be even a better year yet in Kingdom service.

Note, too, that our increase in church membership has not been commensurate with our financial increases. So let each of us strive to reach the goal of a ten per cent increase in membership this year.

Rev. D. A. Braswell

A letter from our brother, Rev. D. A. Braswell, brings the information that he is in the Charlotte Sanatorium, Room 322, for treatment. From his letter it seems that his condition is serious. The doctors seem uncertain about the real trouble, and it is to be several days before they can get him in readiness for an operation. Brother Braswell requests the prayers of the church in his behalf.

Mrs. W. D. Reed

Mrs. W. D. Reed is in the Clinic Hospital here in Greensboro, having undergone an operation for appendicitis. She seems on the road to recovery and her many friends will bear her up in prayer.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE BOARD W. F. M. S., PITTSTON, PA., MAY 11-16

May-days, bright sunshine, a setting of noble mountain peaks, hills and valleys, with the Susquehanna River winding in and out through the couuntryside, Pittston in the heart of the anthracite region, a Methodist Protestant Church miraculously changed from a little frame building to a fine modern plant complete and comfortable in every way, a pastor and people with a royal welcome! What more could heart desire than awaited the delegates to the 48th annual meeting of the Executive Board of the W. F. M. S. when they arrived to be the guests of the Pittston church!

The first regular session of the Meeting began on Wednesday afternoon with a very impressive devotional service on Prayer led by Mrs. W. E. Pettet of Eastern Branch which was like an opening strain of music; the keynote was sounded and was held throughout the session as Prayer was the central theme through all that followed. Miss Hannah Drury, president of the Pittston auxiliary, extended a gracious welcome to her guests which was acknowledged by Mrs. C. C. Harris of Washington in behalf of the Board. After the reports of the Standing Committees, Miss Mary Wilson of Pittston sang a soprano solo, "The King of Love My Shepherd Is." Mrs. E. B. McRoberts of Pittsburgh Branch talked on the study book selected for the coming year entitled "A Straight Way Toward Tomorrow" by Mary S. Platt with the plea that all women who study this book pray for the other groups of women in every land who will be studying and praying. Quoting from the foreward in the book, "With our different languages and customs there is just one great common need—One heart, One way and there is one Interpreter for us all,—The Way, the Truth and the Life."

The executive treasurer, Mrs. Lida K. East, in her annual report gave the total receipts from the Branches, $59,515.15; including Thank-offering, $13,976.98; Student Loan Fund, $573.46, Missionary Retirement Fund. Mrs. East gave the reports by Branches, a record of conscientious work by the women of the W. F. M. S. Pittsburgh Branch carried off the honor of raising the largest amount per capita ($7.54).

The corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. M. Sturgeon, likened the summing up of the year's work to a business man making up a balance sheet with the profits on one side and the losses on the other. Mrs. Sturgeon reviewed the work in Japan; Miss Alice Coates has returned to her kindergarten at Hamamatsu; Miss Ada B. Johnson is going out to teach English in the High School at Yokohama. The outstanding news of India is that Dr. Edith J. Lacey has been secured to go to Dhulia in response to long continued prayer throughout the extent of the Society. Dr. Roberta Fleagle is home on furlough from Kalgan, China, also Miss Ethel Hempstead from Nagoya and Miss Helen Barns from Yokohama. There is much concern felt over conditions in Kalgan, for the latest reports tell that the schools have been forced to close, and the missionaries have left for safer points; but a ray of light gleamed out of the night by the news that more Bibles were sold in China during the past year than ever before.

On Wednesday evening Dr. Fleagle of Kalgan, China, led the Devotionals, using as her subject "Service For God," followed by prayer by the pastor, Rev. John Hempstead. Mrs. C. E. Wilbur, First Vice President, was the presiding officer of the evening and introduced the President, Mrs. Henry Hupfield, who gave her annual address. The activities of the whole mission field were well covered by Mrs. Hupfield. The work in Japan is very satisfactory, our schools in Yokohama, Nagoya and Hamamatsu second to none in all Japan. The greatest need in Japan today is pioneer service, where the Gospel has never yet reached, out in the rural districts. According to Dr. Robert E. Speer there are cities of 6000 population with no ordained missionaries. Conditions in China are very perplexing as the new national spirit seeks to weigh the old and the new in order to bring about a new China that will be worth while. Meanwhile, the other powers still seek to interfere in China's affairs, fearful of losing their various strangle holds and so the problem seems no nearer being solved than in the beginning. Our schools are closed and it is believed that troops are occupying our compound.

India's greatest need is education and the example and teaching of Christian workers who live Christ as well as teach Him. Mrs. Hupfield spoke of her joy in the presence of our returned missionaries and of the young women who are receiving their training through the assistance of the Student Loan Fund. After the Benediction by the pastor, the large audience adjourned to the social rooms of the church where a "Get-acquainted Hour" was spent in much frivolity and "unbending" until the purpose of the hour was well carried out. Refreshments were served and the evening came happily to an end.

THURSDAY

After an opening devotional period by Mrs. B. J. Fults of Onondaga Branch, the President, Mrs. Hupfield, appointed the various committees to take care of the business of the meeting. The report and recommendations of the Executive Committee were given. This committee carries the burden of responsibility throughout the year and, as the minutes of the year's work were read, the Board felt anew their gratitude to these faithful women. At this point, Rev. C. S. Kidd of Brooklyn, New York, a member of the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration, was introduced and in the few moments allotted him, commended the work of the Board and spoke most earnestly of the importance of Missions. Miss Mattie Rittel, secretary of Life, Memorial and Perpetual Members, reported on the work of her department, Indiana first in Life Members, Ohio leading in Memorial Members, while Pittsburgh brought in the greatest number of Perpetual Members for the year. Mrs. F. W. Stephenson, unable to be present, sent her report on the work of the Tithers and Intercessors League, showing a gain of 299 members. Mrs. Stephenson had received many accounts of the observance of the Day of Prayer for Missions, the same prepared program was carried out in many parts of the world, making it a real Universal Day of Prayer for Missions for the first time.

Mrs. George R. Brown, Education Secretary, said that more auxiliaries are using the Question Box, and the Student Loan Fund is gradually assuming proportions. Two students at Adrian College who are preparing for Mission Work are receiving aid from this fund.

Greetings were sent to all absent members of the Board. Mrs. East announced the special plans for the observance of Children's Day, and presented the program that has been prepared. The great aim of the Board of Foreign Missions is a gift of $50,000 on Children's Day as a memorial for the late Dr. Fred C. Klein. Mrs. East made an earnest appeal to each delegate to take this matter home to the churches. If every member of the Methodist Protestant Church would give one dollar, the memorial fund would be raised and the Board placed on a solid basis. She closed with a prayer that the love and reverence felt for Dr. Klein coupled with the love and interest in the work of the Board might bring about glorious results.

On Thursday afternoon, Mrs. Mary D. Stricklar of West Virginia Branch contributed a very earnest prayer service after which the program was continued with the Greetings from the field. There were letters from Miss Evelyn Wolfe of Japan, Mrs. Carl Soderborn of China, Miss Mildred Miskimen of India, Mrs. Douglas who is assisting the workers in Japan and Miss Annie Forrest. Miss Miskimen wrote concerning a wonderful revival that has been going on at the school in Birdwood, the missionaries alone acting as speakers and leaders and in a still more recent letter received from Miss Grace Perley by the writer of this article, she said concerning this revival, "We had prayed long and earnestly for an awakening until the very windows of Heaven were opened. Such transformations! The first ones went out and brought in their friends and it was one continuous prayer meeting; one meeting lasted from 3:00 until 10:00 p.m." Mrs. Douglas wrote a most interesting letter from Japan in which, speaking of the opportunities and the need of more teachers with the spirit of Christ she said, "Let the Christ of the Indian Road be the Christ of the Japan Road."

Mrs. E. B. McRoberts again reviewed a part of the study book which points out that Straight Way which the Master had pointed out toward a glorious Tomorrow for the women and children of every land. The Branch reports followed all interesting and inspiring, also helpful as the Branch representatives brought news items and suggestions from their year's work that can be taken back by other representatives and put in operation in other Branches. Out of a total of nineteen Branches, seventeen reported.

The evening service on Thursday was in charge of Mrs. John Hempstead, wife of the pastor of the Pittston church. After prayer by Mrs. East, the young people of the church presented a Missionary play entitled "Unto the Least of These." The play was well given, with appropriate settings and costumes, with a lesson on the joy of giving to Missions.

The acts of the play were interspersed with musical numbers. Solos were rendered by Mrs. Raymond Voight and Miss Clara May Hastie, and a duet by Mrs. Daniel Williams and Miss Hastie. A very delightful feature of the evening was a Japanese prayer song by Eunice and Wesley Hempstead, who were dressed in Japanese costume and sang in Japanese.

Miss Ethel Hempstead, sister of the pastor, who is a kindgarten teacher in Nagoya, Japan, addressed the session describing the methods of work in Mission schools, how converts are being made one by one—largely through the influence of the children who are being taught Christian ideals in the Mission schools. Miss Hempstead paid high tribute to the native workers and pleaded for the prayers of the women at home for them as well as for the Missionaries. Thirty years ago the first Christian kindergarten was established with ten children in attendance. Today there are 12,000 children in Christian kindergartens. Miss Hempstead is enjoying her first furlough in the home land after five years in Japan.

FRIDAY

At the Friday morning session Miss Hempstead led the hour of worship with a Psalm of Thanksgiving followed by a season of Prayer for praise and thanks to God. During the business session of the morning an invitation to meet next year with the North Carolina Branch at High Point was accepted. The rest of the morning was taken up with the annual election of officers resulting in the re-election of all officers with but two exceptions. Mrs. Geo. Tillotson of Ohio Branch was elected Recording Secretary to fill a vacancy and Mrs. E. J. Burley of Michigan Branch was elected Secretary of Literature to succeed Mrs. T. R. Matthews who, through ill health, felt the need of being relieved. Mrs. Matthews has been most efficient in carrying on the many and constant demands of her office and too much praise and appreciation cannot be given to her as she hands over her duties to Mrs. Burley in whom the Board places every confidence, feeling that she will prove a worthy successor to Mrs. Matthews. Mrs. E. C. Chandler was made President Emeritus as a token of love and appreciation of her long years of service. The Board also elected the two members, to whom they are entitled, for the Executive Committee of the Union Board—Mrs. Henry Hupfield and Mrs. Lida K. East.

In the afternoon, after a short praise service, Mrs. J. E. Litsinger of Maryland Branch conducted a very impressive Memorial service for those who have dropped from the Ranks during the year that is past. There were many beautiful tributes paid to the late Rev. Dr. F. C. Klein whose life was so devoted to the Mission cause. The Board feel that they have indeed lost a friend, a true friend. There were a number of loved ones from many Branches who were remembered very tenderly, the service closing with those immortal lines,

"Sunset and Evening Star,
And one clear call for me
And may there be no moaning bar
When I put out to sea."

The reports of department secretaries followed, the young people's department showed a very gratifying increase in the number of new societies as well as the financial returns. This department under the leadership of Mrs. Lee Satterfield is coming to the front. The Thank-offering secretary, Mrs. Ely D. Miller announced an increase of nearly a thousand dollars, Ohio leading with the largest Thank-offering and Arkansas with the largest per capita gift. The Literature Department under Mrs. T. R. Matthews has grown greatly during the past year, due largely to the increased vision of the auxiliaries through their use of the unified program for study.

The secretary of Scholarships, Mrs. W. E. Pettet, prefaced her report by a beautiful story called "Unawares," illustrating how the Scholarship pupil often in later years becomes the teacher, thus proving that "In comforting the least of Mine, ye have comforted Me." In the report of the Union Board a noticeable item was the fact that the property at Birdwood, Dhulia, India has been sold and formally made over to the W. F. M. S. and the deed of trust has been received by them from the Board of Foreign Missions.

The Editor of the Missionary Record, Mrs. H. E. Amos, gave her report showing a balance with all expenses paid for the year. All hail to the Record and to its efficient Editor! Mrs. C. S. Kidd of Eastern Branch gave a very interesting and instructive account of the meeting of the Federation and Council of Women for Home Missions. This report was one of the many features of the Board's program that proves an "infilling" for the leaders of the various Branches who are constantly giving of their best throughout the year.

The Friday evening service was rich in material. It began with a very fine devotional period led by Mrs. E. J. Burley of Michigan Branch who took for her subject "The Rich Young Ruler." Mrs. J. Ray Stanton of Indiana Branch made a very comprehensive report on No. America and the Foreign Mission Conference held at Atlantic City in January. Mrs. Stanton said that Atlantic City is known not only as the play ground of the world but as a mission centre also. This great Conference, made up of sixty-seven Boards, dwelt largely on the problems growing out of the unrest in China for, in the words of a Chinese who is not a Christian, "If China is to come up out of the pit into which she has fallen it will be through Jesus Christ." There were present many speakers of note whose central theme, like a need of more Christ-like lives and greater Mission programs in our churches, programs that hold Christ as the guiding spirit in order that the great family of nations may at last belong to the Kingdom of God.

After a solo by Miss Mary Wilson of Pittston, Dr. Roberta Fleagle of Kalgan brought greetings from Chinese Christians to the Board and described her life and the methods by which she carries on her medical work. In speaking of the general opinion that the Chinese are a dirty and lazy people, she said this was a false idea and declared that from her own experience the Chinese are clean when they have the opportunity for cleanliness but with barely enough water for drinking purposes, few towels and no wash cloths, small unsanitary homes, what else can be expected. The people in Kalgan depend solely on wells for their water supply and often a bucketful must last a family for a week. Neither are the people lazy, for they will do the most menial tasks for a pittance. They are an appreciative people and it is characteristic of them never to forget a kindness. Dr. Fleagle exhibited beautiful articles that had been presented to her by grateful patients. She gave a graphic description of war experiences in Kalgan and the dangers that our missionaries faced so bravely when Kalgan was raided. She paid tribute to the Christian General Feng who made his head-quarters for sometime at Kalgan, his many kindnesses to the Mission and his wonderful Christian work among his soldiers. It is very much feared that General Feng has turned his back on his new found Christ but the Mission workers continue to pray that he may turn again toward the Right Way. Dr. Fleagle ended her address with expressing her appreciation and gratitude to the W. F. M. S. for their support of her and her work. The session closed with the Benediction by the pastor, Rev. John Hempstead.

SATURDAY

After a devotional service led by Miss Helen Barnes, English teacher at Yokohama, Japan, the morning and evening sessions were taken up with the considerations of the recommendations of the various committees, embodying the plans for the coming year's work both at home and on the Mission Fields. During this business session it was decided to send a Questionnaire to the Branches and, through them, to every auxiliary on the question of whether the Board shall recommend to the General Conference of 1928 the organic union of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and the Board of Foreign Missions and to secure a referendum vote of the auxiliary members on this very vital question.

Saturday afternoon had been set apart for an auto trip through the surrounding country and, though Mother Nature did her best to dampen the spirits of the Board, she evidently did not know that it just cannot be done and so the members of the Board enjoyed a drive through the historic Wyoming Valley over the Sullivan Trail that is rich in Indian history for many miles. It was a memorable ride, picturesque in its natural beauty of mountain and valley with the stately Susquehanna everywhere in evidence, interesting from its historical standpoint and delightful through its social side.

SUNDAY

Sunday was a day that stands out as a gem in its beauty of service. In the morning the pastor preached to a large audience using as his theme, "The World's Heart-Cry." This cry is for a revelation of God and can be answered only through the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The world needs a God that will satisfy the longings of the human heart; the world calls for a Father to love and care for His children. The greatest work in all the world is to be a revealer of God to those who know Him not, for, quoting Mr. Hempstead, "False religions are a reach after God, but Christianity is the reaching down of God to His children." The morning service closed with a very impressive Communion Service with first, the members of the Executive Board at the Altar, followed by the members of the church, a service long to be remembered. At the session of the Sunday School the Missionaries talked briefly to the children which was enjoyed alike by children, old and young.

At three o'clock that beautiful service written by Mrs. E. C. Chandler was held when Dr. Edith J. Lacey was formally consecrated for her work as Medical Missionary to Dhulia, India. After singing the hymn "Jesus Shall Reign," the call to worship was made by Mrs. J. E. Litsinger, mother of Mrs. Paul Cassen of Dhulia, India, followed by all uniting in the printed prayer. Israel's Marching Orders, first given in 1040 B. C. were read by Dr. Roberta Fleagle. The Church's Marching Orders were given by Mrs. E. F. Warner, mother of Rev. Paul Warner of Japan. After singing "Lead on, King Eternal," Mrs. H. E. Amos, representing Ohio Branch, presented Dr. Lacey (Ohio Branch has adopted Dr. Lacey as their own and assumed her support) Mrs. Henry Hupfield extended greetings from the Society while Miss Hempstead greeted her on behalf of the Field. After the singing of a beautiful solo, "I Can Hear My Savior Calling," Mrs. Lida K. East made the Consecration Prayer while the new Missionary knelt at her feet. Then followed an impressive responsive reading with Mrs. W. M. Sturgeon leading while Dr. Lacey made the responses and the Consecration Service came to an end with a Hymn and Benediction. Dr. Lacey is a graduate of the Richmond, Va., Medical School. She is planning to take a post graduate course in Boston during the summer and in the Fall will sail for India to take up her duties at Suvarta Hospital, Dhulia.

The Sunday evening service closed the sessions of the week. Dr. Fleagle made an address, giving additional information in regard to conditions of life in Kalgan, revealing the pitiful state of the people. One of the greatest difficulties of the medical missionary is to make people realize the importance of segregating contagious diseases; patients ill of small pox or diptheria are visited freely by their friends and so the missionary doctor's life is a many sided one, but while the task is great so, also, is the joy of gaining souls for Christ as well as freeing bodies from disease.

Miss Ethel Hempstead spoke on the kindergartens in Japan. The work is on the most modern basis. The teachers come together at stated periods to compare notes and learn new methods. The Christian Kindergartens lead in this work. Miss Hempstead related how a Japanese school principal sent his entire staff of teachers to her school to study methods. The third speaker of this closing session was Mrs. W. E. Pettet, president of Eastern Branch, who presented the question of the value of Foreign Mission work. She answered the question, 'Does it Pay?' by presenting definite results in the Field through the preaching of the Gospel of Christ.

At all these Sunday services the choir of the Pittston church rendered special music with solo work of a high order. The pastor pronounced the last Benediction on a session of the Executive Board W. F. M. S. that will go down into history as one of the finest in every respect.

The Board Meeting at Pittston was particularly happy and fitting as well as unique in that the meeting three years ago was held in this same church as the guests of the Eastern Branch and, as the time drew near for Miss Ethel Hempstead's furlough, these splendid people decided that, out of their love for their pastor, Rev. John Hempstead, they would invite the Board to be their guests during his sister's furlough in the Homeland and so these happy circumstances brought the members of the Board once more within the gracious hospitality of the Methodist Protestant friends at Pittston and the friendships already begun have deepened.

May the inspiration of those days be a beacon light to guide us aright during the days to come and may the rays from that light shine to the uttermost corner of the Society's bounds, scattering wisdom and a clear vision in its path.

MRS. H. K. GOWDY.

Our editor announces that there will be no Herald next week. We wish him a fine vacation.

This will give all charges and churches two weeks in which to improve their records as in the above lists.

It is less than five months to Conference. We must begin to hustle to do our best financially for the Master's cause.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. DIXON.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Union Chapel, Granville Charge.—On the fourth Sunday morning Mr. Fogleman preached to a large audience. He used as his theme "Prayer." We had no special music; but the offering was very good. Our pastor announced that Mr. J. D. Williams would help in our revival meeting which will be in July. We will be very glad indeed to have Mr. Williams with us; and we are looking forward to a good revival.

Our Home and Foreign Missionary Societies met with Mrs. Cappie Edwards Friday evening. We had fifteen members and several visitors present. After the meeting the hostess served delicious refreshments and we enjoyed a social hour.

On Thursday, May 12th, at high noon, Miss Bessie Hedgepeth became the bride of Bernard B. Wright. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Ellis at the Baptist parsonage at Henderson and was witnessed only by a few friends of the bride and groom. They will make their home in Raleigh.

Mrs. Wright has for a number of years been a teacher in the Sunday school and was also treasurer of the Home Missionary Society.

We wish to extend them our congratulations and good wishes.

We are glad that we do not have very many on our sick list. Mrs. Ben Woodlie is improving.

Mr. S. V. Floyd is taking treatment at the Mariah Parham Hospital at Henderson.

We regret to report that Mr. J. W. Overton has been confined to his room for some time and has not been able to attend services.

Let us remember these in our prayers and may we be more thankful for the health that we enjoy. REPORTER.

Siler City.—Rev. L. W. Gerringer who helped Rev. F. L. Gibbs in the revival meeting recently held here brought us wonderful Gospel messages.

A number of people remembered Mr. Gerringer helping in a revival meeting here eight years ago.

I feel that everyone who attended the services in the right spirit received great blessings. There were seven to join the church at the close of the meeting.

A good number of people attended both morning and evening services.

REPORTER.

Halifax.—It has been some time since we reported through the Herald. Not because we had nothing to report, but we have been very busy, and we have been leaving this up to our reporters. We have not reported any poundings for some time, not because they have ceased to be, for they have been comeing in all along; for the sake of the modesty of the donors we will not report the items to the paper.

We had one first district rally at Bethesda church last Saturday and Sunday, which was a great success. Our president, Dr. Dixon, was with us and gave us a splendid lecture on Saturday on the work of the church. Mrs. Dixon and their daughter were also present. We had a very large crowd Sunday and several subjects were discussed, and everyone seemed to be well pleased with the interest of the rally.

We are planning to have a Children's Day service at Bethesda in June.

Mrs. Spencer, both the boys and the writer left Brinkleyville Monday morning for the land of the sky and we are now enjoying the mountain scenery around Asheville, in the land of the sky, but we have not forgotten those we have left on our charge. We have one of the finest and best charges in eastern North Carolina, and the best people in the world to serve. They cooperate together in a spirit of harmony.

The Ladies' Aid at Eden, and the Missionary Society at Hollister are both doing good work. C. L. SPENCER, Pastor.

Liberty, Siler City.—Our special meeting at Siler City closed May 25. Rev. L. W. Gerringer did good preaching and our church and community was helped greatly by the Gospel messages. Seven were baptized and received into our fellowship. Others will join later.

The Junior Christian Endeavor has been reorganized and will meet each Monday afternoon at four p.m. The new converts are members of this young society and under the care of their superintendents, Mrs. L. L. Woody and Miss Lebus Stone, we are expecting great things from them.

Our special meeting will be in progress at Liberty when you read this. Dr. J. D. Williams, West End, Greensboro, N. C., will preach for us. Some preparation is being made in the way of prayer services and choir practices. Mrs. J. O. Overman, church organist, who hasn't been well for some time, agreed with the pastor to secure the help of some other person to help in the playing and special selections. Miss Henri Reece has been secured and a good choir has been organized.

The Senior Christian Endeavor is planning to give a play to raise mony to send a group of our young people to the Summer conference. We pass this suggestion on to others. We hope to have a goodly number of our people present both from Siler City and Liberty.

Almost enough money has been donated by friends to paint the Liberty church and the Sunday school rooms. This work has been needed for some time. Thanks to the donors! F. L. GIBBS.

Spring Valley, Vance Circuit.—Last Sunday was a good day for the fifth Sunday Rally was held at this church, and in connection with this the church was dedicated. Dr. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon were with us and Dr. Dixon preached the dedicatory sermon, and seemed at his best.

Dr. Dixon used to preach for us when the services were held under an oak tree in 1903 and 1904, and in the fall of 1904 the church was built, since that time the church has grown and since Christmas has been turned into a new plant which we are proud of, and were indeed glad to have Dr. Dixon at this service.

Mr. F. G. Hester made a helpful talk at the morning service, and in the afternoon Rev. M. P. Chambliss preached a very helpful and inspiring sermon in his usual manner.

Mrs. Dixon spoke on Missions, which was enjoyed by all. We are always glad to have Sister Dixon visit us. She organized a Young People's Society 19 years ago, and it is still active.

The singing was good both in the forenoon and the afternoon. It was voted to carry the Rally to Gillburg next fifth Sunday. The free will offering that was taken for the benefit of our church was $56.56. We thank each contributor, but if you were not there and wish to add to this offering send it to C. B. Baskett. Henderson, N. C., R 3.

Mr. Polk Garrett, who has been president of the Rally for a long time, offered his resignation and was succeeded by Rev. R. A. Hunter. REPORTER.

Orange Charge.—The pastor and family left here Sunday evening, May 29. Spent the night in Denton with old friends. We were permitted to visit our splendid church at Denton. The writer preached for them Sunday night.

From there we drove to Weaverville for a three days stay. We saw a number of our old friends. Our visit to these splendid people was greatly enjoyed.

We were permitted to see all of our pastors West of the Ridge. Each one seems to be happy in the work and getting along nicely.

Yesterday was a good day for us. Dr. and Mrs. Dixon came on schedule time. Services began at 11:00 a.m. Union Grove church. First Children's Day exercises followed by an address by Mrs. Dixon. Dinner was served on the ground, then afternoon Dr. Dixon gave us one of his splendid sermons.

The offering for Foreign Missions was $39.00 which pays our assessment in full for this cause at this church.

Sunday night Dr. Dixon preached at Efland church after which Mrs. Dixon presented the work of the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

The sermons and addresses by Dr. and Mrs. Dixon were earnestly delivered and favorably received.

We feel that yesterday was a day well spent.

Sincerely, B. M. WILLIAMS.

Mt. Zion, Pinnacle Charge.—We had a beautiful day today. There was a very noticeable increase in attendance and contribution over last Sunday.

The program committee, Mrs. Augusta Micky, Mrs. E. S. Stone and Mrs. Edd Jones, had the children practicing in earnest after Sunday school for the children's day exercise which will be held fourth Sunday night in June.

There have been some new song books ordered and we aim to get them among our folks and revive our singing right away.

Miss Mildred Stone has been duly appointed to serve as agent for Mt. Zion in the interest of the Young People's Conference. We are hoping that she may be successful in interesting many of our young people to attend.

We are very sorry to notice some old 'Stand bys," continue to remain absent from Sunday school.

The farmers are away to a good start with their farm work this year—done planting corn, and are working between these fine showers we're having.

We ask that all Christians pray that Mt. Zion may have a great revival this year. It starts the fourth Sunday in June at 11 o'clock a.m.

P. S. I would be very glad to get in touch with some one having an Invalid's Wheel Chair that they don't need. I would like to borrow one for about three to four months, or would buy one. I will appreciate very much any information whereby I may get one.

Denton Church.—Rev. Mr. Henderson filled his appointment yesterday morning, bringing a good message which was inspiring and was much enjoyed. On May 29, Rev. C. H. Hill, of Friendship, at the morning hour preached for us. At the close the Lord's Supper was served. On the same Sunday night Rev. B. M. Williams was with us. He gave us a good talk after Christian Endeavor Society.

Our good pastor didn't preach for us last night. The revival services began at the M. E. church here last night. Christian Endeavor Society was also called off.

Our Sunday school is still gaining; our people are getting interested in Sunday school and church work. Our attendance yesterday was 117. Offering, $5.35. This goes to the Children's Home at High Point.

Best wishes to the Herald.

Saxapahaw Charge.—A very interesting Christian Endeavor meeting was held at Concord church last Sunday night. Helpful talks were made by Brother C. O. Ferguson, the president, Brother L. E. Guthrie, Mrs. Clara Ferguson and others. The society decided, on recommendation by Brother L. E. Guthrie, to equip the church with good lamps, or to improve the ones already there.

The preaching services at Concord and Orange Chapel were largely attended. A number of visitors were present at Concord, among them Rev. C. B. Way, of Lexington. We were glad to have Brother Way worship with us.

The good people of this charge continue to remember their pastor with gifts from time to time. It is always a pleasure to serve such people. H. L. ISLEY.

Gideon Grove, Flat Rock Circuit.—Our Sunday school is increasing very much, though far from perfect; we have greatly crippled this year in the loss of some of our main members, most especially in the singing. Yesterday, June 5th, was a good day for us. All the Sunday schools on this circuit met with us at Gideon Grove and all had real good programs except one and rendered them well. The singing was fine. I think we will have to give Bethel a tip for her singing class. The church that had no program had been handicapped greatly by the measles which became epidemic in that locality. Our pastor presided. We had the several different programs in the afternoon and with a large congregation and a long table and a dinner that would make anybody feel good at 12:30 o'clock. In the afternoon we had some very interesting talks from some of the superintendents and representatives of different churches and on the origin of some of them. Also had two Brothers from the Christian that made good talks; they were Brother J. C. Preston and Brother Harvey Brookbank.

We have increased pastor's salary at our place a little and are buying some pulpit chairs and are going to have our special meeting the first Sunday in July. Pray for us that we may have a good meeting.

Yours for Christ,

REPORTER.

The Philathea class held its regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Asa A. Hardee, May 26th, with Mrs. Claude Harris, and Mrs. W. T. Nuckles associate hostesses. Mrs. C. F. Tankseley, Jr., president of the class, called the meeting to order. Mrs. Clyde L. Finch conducted the devotionals, followed by prayer, offered by Mrs. R. A. Hunter. The business of the class was discussed and it was voted to send a delegate to Mount Airy to attend the State convention of the Philatheas and Baracas. However it was learned later that the appointed delegate could not go and no alternate could be secured. At the conclusion of the business session, the program committee gave a splendid report. The hostesses served delicious refreshments.

The Christian Endeavor Society has had some splendid programs of late and they have been well attended. On last Sunday night, May 29th, several of the Intermediates were promoted into the Senior Society and are proving a great help by rendering active service already. The attendance is increasing.

On Sunday night, May 29th, Rev. R. A. Hunter preached the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating nurses of Maria Parham Hospital, of the city.

This school is for boys and girls from kindergarten age to 16 years, and there will be instruction in manual training besides Bible lessons. Mrs. J. C. Whitesell, who is a splendid teacher and has had much experience in this work, has been engaged to teach during the session. One hundred and fifty pupils are expected. This is an experiment for our church, but it is expected to prove a great success.

The two Missionary Societies held their monthly meeting on Monday afternoon in the home of Mrs. J. G. Snipes on Steele street. In the absence of Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, president of the Foreign Society, the vice-president, Mrs. S. D. Shelton, presided. It was decided to send $5.00 as a special gift to Rev. J. Clyde Auman, of Nagoya, Japan. After the morning service on Sunday, Rev. and Mrs. P. E. Lindley left in their car for Westminster, Md., to attend the commencement exercises of Western Maryland College, when the degree of B. At the regular preaching service the third Sunday in May, Miss Kate Reavis of the M. E. church, Middleburg, and Mrs. F. G. Hester, of Henderson, were received. We wish for each of them a successful career. May God richly bless them and make them a blessing to others.

REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN

Help Make This Line Grow. Register!

The above line has made some progress toward the 1500 mark. It is now almost one-seventh of the distance. Within the next six weeks it must cover the entire distance left, to reach the goal. We must go about one-seventh of the distance each week. REGISTRATION AGENTS, we are depending on you to make the line cover the distance. Let's set ourselves to the task, and see every member of our church. As you secure the registrations send them in, so we can keep the line advancing. Someone is holding back registrations, waiting possibly to get a long list. The pastors are frequently saying to me, "I registered with my agent sometime ago." Possibly others could say the same thing. Agents, DON'T WAIT, send in the names by today's mail. We would like to publish every name, in the Herald, next week, now held by the agents.

West End, Greensboro, last week had two registrations. In this issue they appear with forty-eight. Bethesda and Whitakers, close runners for the last two weeks, where are you? Are you going to let West End stay here to keep the lead?

We will watch with interest next week's issue to see what church comes from the second round of the ladder to the top as West End did.

Come on Asheboro, you were in West End's class last week, as was Saxapahaw, Flat Rock, Vance Charge; State Street, Lexington; Efland; and Friendship, Albemarle. Can one of you of this class do what West End did, or set a new class for her to reach?

Miss Mary V. White, Flat Rock, Vance Charge, deserves special mention for starting the campaign in her church, as well as securing registrations for Henderson church, before an agent was appointed. Miss White has secured six registrations for Flat Rock, in addition to assisting Henderson. ALL HATS OFF TO MISS WHITE. The Flat Rock agent must now keep the pace set going by Miss White.

Two of the ministers who have registered are not pastors. About seventy-four per cent of the registrations secured thus far come from the churches of these sixteen pastors who have registered. Adrian College

The entire Methodist Protestant Church has an interest in Adrian College, Michigan. It has played a large part in the progress of our church in the northwest. Many of the ministers and a greater number of the laymen of our church have received education and inspiration there. Seven students at least have gone to Adrian College from North Carolina and returned to spend their lives here. All these acknowledge their indebtedness to that institution for help received.

The institution has just celebrated the 75th anniversary of its birth. It began we believe as a union effort, later became a Wesleyan college, and still later was transferred to the Methodist Protestant Church. In the celebration a historical sketch was read by Rev. A. W. Kauffman. He traced two streams of educational effort, one resulting in the building of Adrian College and the other in the University of Michigan. One man who had a prominent part in the first of these movements forsook it for the other. The greater growth of the state institution has been due to the greater physical power of the state.

Adrian College as a Methodist Protestant institution has had a checkered career. Sometimes the future has looked dark; but men of faith have held on and the prospects have brightened. It is a common thing for colleges to face deficits. The necessary expenses are large and sometimes the anticipated income does not materialize and there is a distressing shortage. Sometimes boards of trustees are manned by impractical men and the management is not the most economical. Adrian College has learned by its experience and is now trying to bring about better conditions. It has learned that it is difficult to do business without sufficient capital. Colleges as well as banks and other businesses must have capital. Capital is the balance wheel that keeps the machinery running when without it it would stop. A campaign is now on to equip Adrian College with necessary capital. The Onondaga, Ohio, and Pittsburgh conferences have responded nobly and the other patronizing conferences are expected to come up with their part. Rev. J. W. Hawley, in charge of the campaign, expressed the faith that the campaign would result successfully.

The first location of the college was at Leoni, Mich., about sixty miles from its present location at Adrian. On Saturday of commencement week there was a pilgrimage in automobiles to Leoni where there was a brief service held. There was present a lady who was one of the original students. She is a white-haired lady with a very cheerful and intelligent countenance. She was called upon for a word and she said she wished she were young again in order that she might go to college again.

The old buildings remain in part. There was a three-story brick dormitory with students' rooms much as they were seventy years ago except that they are covered with the dust of the decades that have passed since they were occupied. A family lives in the front part of this old college dormitory.

Adrian College is the alma mater of the editor of the Herald, and he wishes her long life and an ever-brightening future.

Straining at a Gnat and Swallowing a Camel

There is a man in Greensboro who seems to take delight in opposing Christian teaching. He went to Sunday school last Sunday and after hearing the teacher tell the story of the crucifixion of Jesus intruded with this question: What would you think of a man who had two sons, one a good boy and the other a bad one, if he should allow a mob to kill the good boy in order to save the bad one? He prides himself on his ability to raise objections to the teaching of the Bible. We met him on the street on Monday and he told of what he had said to the Sunday school teacher, seeming to expect that we would approve his action. He then proceeded to cite Jesus' statement in Matthew 12:40 that he would be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, adding that he was in the grave only two nights, and saying that if there is an error at one place he could not tell what to believe and that he was free to reject all. We happen to know that this man some years ago announced that a prominent minister of Greensboro would preach at a certain country church on a certain Sunday, leading to the assembling of quite a congregation. When the speaker appeared, it was not the minister but the man who had made the announcement, and he proceeded, not to preach the gospel, but to make a socialistic speech. He seems to have progressed in evil since that time, and to have rejected the truth of divine revelation, not because he is free to do so, but because an evil heart of unbelief inclines him to do so.

Rev. D. A. Highfill's Funeral

This occurred in Liberty where he made his home for many years. We are informed that 28 ministers were in attendance. This is an indication of the esteem in which he was held by his brethren in the ministry. All but two or three of these ministers were members of Brother Highfill's own church and conference. We have thought before that there is an uncommonly fine fellowship among ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church. We believe this is due to our church slogan, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." Brother Highfill had selected Brothers Ashburn and Pike to conduct his funeral service if they survived him. They both lived as neighbors to him for years. This wish of his was carried out.

OBEDIENCE NECESSARY

Let a man refuse to submit his will to God, and the gateway of truth is closed to him forever. No daring of intellect will pierce its deeps, nor will any imagination see its beauty. Truth at the heart of it is always ethical, kindred in being to man's moral nature; and if that nature be choiceless and disordered, the power and majesty of truth are never known. That is the reason why the simplest duty has always an illuminating power. Do the next thing, and do it heartily, and the very brain will grow a little clearer. For the Word of God is a lamp unto our feet, and only when our feet go forward bravely will the circle of light advance upon the dark, and reveal what is always shadowed to the stationary. —Selected.

FIFTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT OF WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE

Commencement time is usually a very serious occasion, for some at least, but may be so interspersed with jollities and a few frivolities, perhaps as to preserve mental normalcy and make the week, all in all, tinged with colorful and happy memories for years to come. The exercises at Western Maryland College this year were, if possible, more impressive than ever. Our joy was less unrestrained in that President Ward, who has wrought so nobly for the present achievements and future growth, was unable to conduct the exercises owing to his recent serious illness; but all were cheered by knowing he was convalescent and near at hand, keeping in touch with administrative affairs and by the hope that he would soon be restored to health and inspiring leadership.

The Seniors, for whose benefit Commencement seems to have been inaugurated, had been constantly reminded for two or three weeks previous, that something was about coming to end, for farewells were many and spectacular. First, the juniors, with their beautiful ceremonies,—a dramatized prophecy, a play, and the Loving Cup Song and Farewell; then the sophomores with the planting of the senior ivy and oration by Mr. Nuttall; then the freshmen Lantern Chain and drill in the athletic bowl, where over fifty girls in white with colored lanterns, in college songs and artistic drills, pronounced their farewells in the darkness of evening in living illuminated figures of '27 and '30, and W M,— all these certainly impressed the seniors that they were going out into a great Questionable Somewhere pretty soon.

Baccalaureate Sunday

Sunday, June 5th, dawned beautiful and clear, and Alumni Hall probably has never held a greater or more appreciative audience. On this day the Protestant churches of the city, for the most part, dismiss their own services and join with the College in their worship morning and evening. This is a beautiful thing in itself, for, certainly, education of the right kind draws thinking minds together in happy fellowship, and leads to better understanding in dealing with the evils of the world. And certainly at Western Maryland College, as a Christian college, religion is recognized as absolutely essential to the finest approach to all worthy achievement. Here, as in most true Christian institutions, religion is looked upon as signifying the awakened interest of a living soul in the glories and wonders of this physical universe as an expression of God's wisdom and goodness, and the fellowship of man in society and government regarded as the finest school for the development of human character and personality. The greatest educational problem and task thinking men have today is to meet the splendid challenge of Jesus Christ to banish the lawlessness and ignorance and stupidity from the world, and establish in its place and in the hearts and minds of men, peace and an enlightened observance and love of truth and order.

Dr. Lewis' Sermon

The Baccalaureate sermon was preached by Dr. Thomas H. Lewis, President-Emeritus of the College. Dr. Lewis is known as one of the greatest preachers as well as great educators of America, and the sermon of this day was worthy of the man and the occasion. It was based on the words of Moses in Deuteronomy vi, 5-7, stressing the knowledge of God, supreme love for Him, and the teaching of this knowledge to the succeeding generations. After graphically describing the great English Jubilee of June 20th, 1897, celebrating Queen Victoria's sixtieth year as sovereign, and the pomp of the occasion, and the serious reflections of the poet Kipling expressed in the memorable lines of the "Recessional Hymn," Dr. Lewis reminded us that it was just sixty years since Western Maryland College was founded, and that the phenomenal growth in number of students, number of buildings, amount of equipment, resources, prestige, influential alumni, etc., might warrant great felicitation on past achievements and future prospects, yet there was the need of thoughtful consideration of present prosperity, and of continued recognition of God as the author of every blessing, and of obedience to His laws as the condition of future progress. There being no poet to write such a "Recessional" for W. M. C. at this juncture, the speaker would seize the present opportunity to offer his reflections in the plain prose of a sermon. "lest we forget,—less we too forget." Moses' words in his great Farewell Address were the true recessional that has inspired all poets and preachers to admonish men if in prosperity they were tempted to forget the hand that led and directed human affairs, "Remember God, and diligently keep His commandments and teach them to the generations following, lest they forget to do that which is right and good in the sight of the Lord" or cease to love Him "with all their heart, soul, and strength."

Then the speaker turned to another farewell address, of Jesus—that of Jesus in Matthew xxviii, 18-20: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth:—Go ye therefore and teach all nations,—teaching them to observe all things which I have commanded you,—and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Here, then, was the subject of teaching, and of education in general, and of religious and Christian education in particular. 1. What is teaching? It is the business of life, the business of everybody, not merely of professional teachers, to explain, inform, instruct, to help people to know, to make disciples, learners. We believe in the separation of Church and State, but that does not mean that they are to be so separate as to relegate teaching to one or the other, but in the big business of teaching so to divide the labor as to teach the more thoroughly and effectively. Nor must the separation eliminate God from the one or the other. There can be no Church without God. Equally true, there can be no state without God. Atheism destroys the state. To urge as some do not to read the Bible in the schools is simply ignorant fanaticism. 2. Who are to be the teachers? First, the parents. The home is the first divine institution. "These commandments thou shalt teach unto thy children." Many other agencies are included these days as education, but the first and primary emphasis should be on the home. The many demands of modern civilization have led to the turning over all child training to other influences, paid or unpaid. This is to be deplored. We are reaping a sad harvest in crime that alarms us and threatens peril for the future. God-fearing parents may not inevitably succeed in bringing up children that are God-fearing, but no non-God fearing parent may logically expect his children to be obedient and reverent toward God or man. Then, second, the schools, colleges, universities, and finally the state itself has undertaken the function of education. And there have been so many modification and theories that the true educational aim of knowing God and of how to live rightly has been almost forgotten. Moses was the real founder of education. Men who fear God, through the ages are men who try to keep their children from forgetting God. It was the problem with Israel of old. Our own Nation was founded by men who wanted to worship God without molestation and to be able to guarantee their children the same privilege. We are apt to forget these days the things that make character. Public education in Maryland as a system is hardly older than Western Maryland College. God-fearing men have promoted education always, by preaching, teaching, praying that their children might not forget God, and they will be so teaching when some educational systems cease to be. 3. What shall we teach? Most anything that is true. It is not of prime importance what particular field you teach, but it is important in that field to teach the truth. We have no right to teach students anything that will lead away from God. Teach all truth. There is no denominationalism in truth, no sectarian mathematics, no Methodist physics, no Presbyterianism in chemistry, or Roman Catholicism in philosophy. There is no irreligion in truth. With Milton we need not fear to let truth and falsehood grapple. It is and always has been the pledge of this institution to brinng the student face to face with truth, with all truth so far as it apprehends the truth, and it has not forgotten Him who said, "I am the Truth." We are to recognize God as the source of all truth. The glory of all truth is its discovery. The teacher who cannot discover God in matter is purblind. Man is not only fearfully and wonderfully made as to physical mechanism, but is so endowed with soul sovereignty as by his aspirations and hopes to see beyond all earthly hindrances into the sky of immortality. Man is akin to God, and he can find God. 4. Whom are we to teach? Our children and young people. Statistics show that most Christians have become Christians before they were sixteen. I know of no reliable statistics of Atheism, bnt it is safe to say not 1 percent of atheists become so before they are twenty-one. Atheists complain they cannot get recruits earlier than High School age. Children's minds are closed to their approach. This is significant, for children's minds are naturally open towards God. Atheism is a result of mental or moral irritation, or of both. There is mental irritation that the idea of God does not yield to the laboratory method, or moral irritation that one's own selfish pleasures are not supported and endorsed by the order of the universe. This irritation leads to the cry, "Let us break all bonds! Why be bound to the antiquated notion of a God?" To childhood, religion is beautiful, natural, full of great values. So you do not have to teach children that there is a God, only not to forget Him! If you have an idea too precious to lose, tell it to your children. They are the best safety-desposit box where neither moth corrupts or rust consumes. If you have a truth, tell it to your children, and let them tell it to the generations following. Tell it to your children and they will join the Heavenly host of those praising God. Dr. Lewis said in closing, laying a tribute at the feet of his Alma Mater, that in the forty-two years of his connection with Western Maryland College, as student, professor, and President, and Trustee, she had been faithful to God. In early morning chapel, in divine services, in the class-room, she has taught her children the truth,—all the truth she could find. She has done what she could, and sent them out with her blessing and with the parting words, "When the Lord thy God shall have brought thee into the land which he sware unto thy fathers,. . . . beware lest thou forget the Lord which broughtest thee forth out of the land of Egypt. Ye shall diligently keep the commandments of the Lord your God!" And upon the institution he had so long served, he pronounced a loving benediction. The College Choir then sang with magnificent effect Kipling's Recessional, and President H. L. Elderdice of the Theological Seminary, lifted the audience still nearer to God in inspiring prayer and benediction.

Commencement Day

We could not have had better weather for Commencement Day. And a big attendance of old students and alumni mixed with the notable throng present. The usual Processional and the opening prayer by Dr. E. C. Makosky, President of the Maryland Confeernce of the Methodist Protestant Church and a flute solo by John C. Bohl, director of Bohl's orchestra of Baltimore preceded the address of the day. This, a masterly discourse by one capable of keen analysis of the educational situation of today, called attention to the chaotic state of popular thinking,—or unthinking,—of mechanistic educational standards, and moral laxity generally prevailing, and pointed out the necessity of fine intellectual and spiritual leadership in order to save the world from disaster. He congratulated Western Maryland on its faith that the spirit of man needs only to be liberated and enlightened to know and serve the Spirit of God. "Education is the desire, the struggle to escape from darkness into light; from prejudice, passion, and selfish private-mindedness into the glory of the light-illumined mind and spirit-touched heart of understanding. We live in a world where deep shadows still brood over the spirit of man,—shadows of ignorance, of racial rancor, of religious bigotry and all the slimy things that crawl and breed in the dark." To great educational centres, "where is found the greatness and generosity of youth, free, happy, aglow with hope, in quest of truth and the great freedom of the mind which truth bestows,—to the Church college above all, where the scientific spirit and the religious passion are united in the holy task of enfranchising the human spirit,—we may turn for the best solution of our problem of ignorance, prejudice and sin. Man is naturally religious,—"incurably" so—and any system of education must provide for the development of the religious instinct and not its suppression or neglect. 'Religion! as Carlyle said, 'is the deepest thing in man.' It is also the highest.

Education that minimizes or ignores the religious nature of man,—is it morally or intellectually trustworthy? Says Gilbert Murray, "Man is imprisoned in the eternal present, and religion offers him a secret and permanent means of escape from that prison, leaving him standing still in the present, but in a present so enlarged and enfranchised that it becomes not a prison but a free world." Truth, and right, and God are not mere figures of speech, pictures of the imagination, but eternal realities. Science, theology, philosophy, must give us a valid world to live in, in order to give meaning to the great and final enterprise of humanity. True education is a discovery of reality, and reality is neither just materiality, nor is it pure subjectivism. In answering the questions, "Is truth the product of human thinking?" and "Is righteousness the product of human conscience?" and "Are the principles of religion a human product?" We are in quest of a valid world to live in. And, to live, we must find one. We must find reality, solidity, validity, somewhere that provides for all the changes that we see in an evolving world order. The constructions of truth change, but truth does not change. "Dissolving Ethics" only shows that our present views are unclear and must come into deeper harmony with eternal Truth. Eternal principles do not dissolve, but only men's views of things change. Progress in education must mean more harmonious adjustment to God's ways which, admittedly, are higher than man's ways. We must grow towards God, not away from Him. In Him is Life. Styles of buildings may change as styles of dress; architectural structures may vary in design, but the laws of the horizontal and the perpendicular,—the undergirding laws that stabilize and give security, do not change. So daily customs may change, yet the steps of daily life may be given a firm footing. It is of vast import to feel that in the things with which we are daily concerning ourselves, the Eternal is coming to a more or less open disclosure. The dignity and value in common matters is due to so much of the Eternal as comes to expression in them. We need a sanctified imagination that can see beyond the mere mechanical processes of life. We need eyes to see that life itself is a disclosure of the Eternal. Education, then, must give us men and women who will live for the excellencies of life,—who dare to dream of better and finer world than has ever yet been seen in our human story. The test of any set of opinions must be in the amount of the eternal ingredient of truth that they carry. The nervous and high-strung civilization of America is very tolerant of various opinions. So it has come about that every man has an opinion on every subject under the sun, and it is seriously believed by some that we can establish truth by popular vote. Usually the less a man knows about a subject, the more vociferous in announcing his opinion. Truth, which alone can give validity to opinion is often the thing that enters into it the least. Many "opinions" have not a trace of truth in them. It is idiotic to echo "every man has a right to his opinion" regardless of the eternal order and truth of things. An opinion, in the honest and appreciative shaping of it, is an attempt to frame in form of human thought a reality that is so old that its age can be measured only by the years that measure the age of God. It is solemn work, momentous work, to reach opinions that are valid. Only a devout soul is fit to have an "opinion," for only a devout soul can handle the eternal without sacrilege. That which is from everlasting to everlasting constitutes the foundation of life. With regard to Ethics, new times and new occasions do teach new duties and new approaches to new relationships. A proper conservation does not insist on seeing only what our ancestors saw, but in pressing our vision beyond the point at which their vision stepped,—in having not a new prospect, but a profounder prospect,—seeing with the Master Teacher that we are not to destroy but to fulfill. The law of righteousness is implicit in the very nature of things and it is as unaffected by the shifting moral standards that men set for themselves as are the stars unbruised by the stones we fling at them or the dust we raise down here in our little earthly atmosphere. The validity of the world we live in depends on the integrity of right at its heart. We must not forget that righteousness is involved in the very structure of the universe,—part and parcel of the very Being of the Eternal. Some may not deny this fact, and yet, keeping the mere forms of truths and conduct, yield to the tendency to live as if there were no God, or eternal truth, and cease to be controlled by their sanctions. So, slipping our spiritual anchorage, we wonder why life drifts onto the shoals. Building our house not on the rock, we wonder, when the storm comes, why our house comes down. If our ethical outlook is to be determined by our own personal desire and selfish appetite, and not God's will, or the eternal truth, then we will find ourselves in a world without any enduring values. Only as we lift life to the style and manner of the sky can we escape the danger of being lost in the fog banks of our lusts and desires. We face, just now, the danger of allowing an assembly of information to outstrip the achievement of insight. And here come in the certitudes of religion. Not religion as a huddle of sects, divided about liliputian issues, but the conviction that the Kingdom of God will be achieved as man moves toward his own ideal in obedience to the laws of God. Religion involves the life of the soul, the dynamic of love, the fellowship of light,—living in the faith that the spiritual alone is real, enduring, creative, triumphant. We need not be victim of the unfaith that issues in intellectual confusion, moral instability, and spiritual bankruptcy. With Paul we admit that we know only in part, but with faith like his, are assured that the part that we do know is a part of a larger and finer world where we can find all the validities of truth, goodness and love regnant and controlling. And here, in spite of fogs, are unmistakable signs that we are moving towards a scientific spirituality that will make us masters not only of the material world, but of the spiritual world inside of us. It is the old faith in a new insight, showing the validities of religion not only as the forces of history, but as facts of the cosmic order, in which the words of Jesus shine like suns and stars. We are on the verge of discovering that what Jesus said about the world and life is true. The eternal faith is appearing in new forms. There is no truth, no morality, no religion, worth being called such, unless it is deeply tinctured with the eternal—rooted in God. In this valid world we are to live, called to a higher loyalty to truth, a devotion to the right, and an adventure to mobilize the spiritual intelligence of the race to defeat ignorance, iniquity, and sin. It can be done, and we can have a part in the Divine enterprise lifting our fleeting lives into epic worth, and meaning,—into companionship with God."

EMERGENCY GIVING

The generous heart of America is always deeply moved by the dire need that arises from floods, hurricanes, earthquakes and other great disasters. Money is poured out to shelter the homeless and feed the hungry. Such emergencies bring aid from every part of the country, a cause of rejoicing to all.

Another Emergency

And now another emergency has arisen. Giving to the Near East Relief has suddenly diminished to the point where it threatens a serious handicap to the adequate aid of the approximately 35,000 children under American care in Bible Lands.

The summer time is always a season of small returns. What will happen if America does not meet this emergency?

Two Possible Courses

There are two possible courses open to us:

To turn out as many children as possible, thereby rendering our previous work for them of little value.

To take care of them by securing generous immediate responses.

Which Children Must Go?

Shortage of funds will necessarily mean that Near East Relief must cease to maintain hundreds of children who have no one else to aid them. They must be turned out to take care of themselves as best they can in city streets and country roads.

But it was from this that Near East Relief rescued them; must they be pushed back now that they have known hope?

If You Do Not Give—

Suppose that you do not give—hundreds upon hundreds must be released. How shall they be selected? Shall any of the little children under thirteen pay so bitterly for their few privileged years in American care? Can we look at their pleading faces and say "Go?"

Or shall it be the young girls, who are being carefully taught to be the future home-makers of their race—shall they be turned out to an unknown fate, perhaps a fate unthinkable?

Or shall it be the boys eagerly learning trades to fit them to be self-supporting and the industrial leaders of their generation, Must they give up that hope? Must their people give up that expectation because we do not give?

This Is Giving-Time

Near East Relief needs money immediately to carry these children through the summer.

$100 a year pays for a "sponsorship" that will feed, clothe, shelter and train a definite child whose picture and story you may have.

$5 a month will feed, clothe and shelter a boy or girl. Your gift whether large or small will be welcomed with gratitude and put immediately to good use. It will save a child from a broken life. Send your money at once to Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

India

Having given detailed reports of the work in China and Japan in former articles I will now give a similar report of the work in India.

The reports coming from India are just as encouraging and hopeful as those coming from our other mission fields. More hopeful than those coming from China, of course, owing to the unsettled conditions there at the present time.

The first sentence in the personal report of Miss Mildred Miskimen reads: "Our year started out rather sadly, for on the second week of January one of the old women in the compound died." This old lady's name was Gungabai. For years she had taken care of the little babies that were brought to the compound and every little babe brought there she took to her heart and cared for as though it were her very own. Not only so, but this good and faithful woman was a "mother" to every girl in the compound and they loved her dearly. Her departure is keenly felt by them.

One very interesting item of this part of the report is that on the first of June all the children in the compound are "due to get a new outfit of clothes." Some six hundred pieces of clothing are required. All this clothing is made in the compound by the girls who do not go to school. This is quite a large undertaking but it is interesting, educational and economical. It takes us back to the more primitive days of our own national life.

One of the outstanding needs for a long time has been a well that would furnish water on the farm through the dry season. In harmony with the instructions of the Union Board, Rev. Cassen was given permission by the Mission to begin this work the first week in January. Rev. S. B. Kasote, one of the native pastors is overseeing the work. He spends the whole day by the side of this well, seeing that the work is well done and that the men employed do an honest day's work. The well is likely to be fully completed by this time as Rev. Cassen was hoping to have it finished by the first of June. This is what he says about it: "I might mention the fact that this year is a very dry year, and lots of wells have dried up already, and there are two more months of dry weather. The lake, near the farm, has been practically drained, there being only a little water near the gate. We are hoping that the fact that we have struck water in this dry weather, and that we have struck it in quantity, is a good sign for the future of the well. We are not able to say yet, but we have high hopes for the future of the well." It is difficult for us to fully appreciate the blessing that a well of that kind means to those living in a land that has its long continued dry seasons accompanied by excessive heat. Especially, since in most parts of our country we have been visited with such heavy rains resulting in destructive floods. So while this well of cool, fresh flowing water may not mean so much to us to our workers and the natives of India it means everything.

This farm is proving a great blessing to these poor people of India. It not only helps greatly in the food supplies but it gives employment to so many of these needy people and the hope is that through this farm many of these people may become self-supporting.

After having waited in hope and expectancy for the community to take over the support of the school pastor this was partly realized recently. Mr. Minnie called a meeting of all the people who work in connection with the boys' school to determine what could be done along the line of such support. At this meeting the people agreed to pay one-sixteenth of their salaries toward the support of this preacher. They further agreed that just as soon as proper organization was completed they would become tithers. Another advance step in our work in India.

Don't forget the orders for Children's Day. 900 orders sent out and more orders received every day. Send in YOURS and help us reach the 1,000 orders and the $50,000 goal.

Union Board Meeting

The Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration held its Annual Meeting in the Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Protestant Church, Washington, D. C., Tuesday, May 17, 1927. All the members of the Union Board were present except the Recording Secretary, Mrs. S. W. Rosenberger. The Board had the pleasuure of having present at this meeting, Mrs. H. E. Amos, editor of the Missionary Record, and Miss Dr. Roberta Fleagle, our returned missionary from China, and Miss Ethel Hempstead, our returned missionary from Japan. In the absence of the Recording Secretary Mrs. Lida K. East was elected Secretary pro tem.

China

Owing to the impossibility of Dr. Fleagle being able to remain throughout the sessions of the Board the work of China was taken up first.

Interesting and encouraging reports of the work and letters from Rev. Soderbom were presented. The Board approved of the closing of the schools, owing to the war conditions and were gratified over the precaution and care taken in placing the property and mission funds in the New York City bank, in Tientsin, before going to Tientsin.

The report of the medical work was highly gratifying and this part of the work will now be cared for by the native physician, Dr. T'Sui Shih Feng and three helpers during the furlough of Dr. Fleagle.

At the request of the mission and in harmony with our Church law the Mission was granted the privilege to ordain Mr. Yao and to give licenses to perform marriages and administer the ordiances to Evangelists Wang Wan Chih and Wu Wen Yu, who have been selected to act as pastors for one year.

The recommendation from the W. F. M. S. that Dr. Fleagle be returned to China at the end of her furlough was heartily approved by the Board.

It will be gratifying to all to know that Rev. C. H. Reed, of the Eastern Conference, was presented as a candidate for missionary work in China. This is truly providential because Rev. and Mrs. Soderbom are planning to come to America on their furlough this fall if conditions in China are favorable. Rev. Mr. Reed and family (his wife and two children) will sail for China just as soon as the necessary physical examinations are passed and the conditions in China will permit.

Japan

The following actions passed by the W. F. M. S. at the Annual Board meeting in Pittston, Pa., were approved by the Union Board: $150 for special Evangelistic work and the purchase of a lot for the Kindergarten at Ijiri.

A cable, authorizing the purchase of a lot for the Shield's Kindergarten and the negotiation of a loan, in Japan, for a short period sufficient to cover the balance due on the Nagoya College Church, was ordered. In this same cable the mission was informed that the necessary funds would be sent for the lot for Shield's Kindergarten, the lot for the Chapel at Hamamatsu and the balance due on the Hiratsuka and Mommoku kindergartens.

A request came from the Mission for the Union Board to give its approval for Rev. Ito, pastor of the Hamamatsu Church, to attend Westminster Theological Seminary for an advanced course in Theology and English. In this the Union Board acted as follows: "We do not see our way clear to assume any responsibility regarding the education of the Japanese pastor, Rev. Ito, in America."

Passage money and traveling expenses for Rev. J. Clyde Auman and family for their furlough were granted.

Keen appreciation for the splendid services rendered by the teachers in the Tiwa Jo Gakko schools and the fine work accomplished by the Japan Mission were expressed.

India

Furloughs for Rev. J. F. Minnis and Miss Mildred Miskimen in the spring of 1928 were granted; provided they desired to take their furloughs at thaat time.

Sincere sympathy was expressed to the Mission in their loss, by deaath, of Mrs. Gungabai. Mrs. Gungabai waas one of their most faithful and trust-worthy workers. She was known as "mother" among all.

The request for repaairs on the Birdwood buildings were approved and referred to the W. F. M. S. Plans for the Girls' School building were also ordered to be sent as soon as possible.

The reports of the India Mission were also very gratifying and showed growth. The Evangelistic work was especially encouraging. A more extended report of the India work will be given in a future article.

Children's Day

Orders are still coming in for Children's Day. Requests are even being received for sample copies. Let them continue to come. It is not too late. May our Churches and Sunday schools become more and more awakened and aroused to this great need and the opportunity to meet it through this Memorial Children's Day service. Continue to send in your orders to Mrs. Mary E. Klein, Berwyn, Md., and she will gladly see that all orders are promptly filled. And now let us all pray that there may be large financial returns from the services.

Please be prompt in sending the offerings to your Conference Treasurer marked Children's Day Offering.

TO PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS

Three weeks ago the Union Board cabled to our mission in Japan to borrow for a short period enough money to complete the Klein-Coulbourn Memorial Church at Nagoya College. The amount needed was not specified, but it will approximate $10,000. To meet this situation we urge you to hold the Children's Day service, and send the offering right away to your conference treasurer. Mark it for Children's Day, and urge him to send it to our national treasurer, Mr. H. C. Staley, 516 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md., as soon as possible. By holding the service, and sending in the offering right away, you will be doing your part in this commendable memorial enterprise.

At this writing over nine hundred schools have ordered supplies for Children's Day. This is a fine record. If you have not yet ordered supplies for the service in your school, send your order to Mrs. Fred C. Klein, Berwyn, Md.

HE CHANGES NOT

God's immutability which is expressed in the uniformity of natural law age after age, is the rock on which His changeable creatures can assuredly rest. But for His unchangeable truth, the qualities of matter would play us foul, and water might burn us, and the sun rise in the west, or north, and every sequence of causes be upset, to the utter ruin of all life and happiness. The Scripture says, "It is because God changes not that the sons of men are not consumed."—Geo. D. Watson.

OUR STORY PAGE

WHEN JOHN HAD TO DECIDE

"Mother," said John Roberts, one Friday morning as he started off to school, "I've never asked Billy Dobson out here to spend a Saturday, and he wants to come so bad. May I ask him?"

"What sort of a boy is he?" asked the mother.

"Well, he seems to be a good-hearted chap," answered John a little nervously, remembering some of the things he didn't like about Billy; "but he looks kind of neglected, and I know he wants to come the worst kind."

John's mother smiled. She knew he was to be trusted, so she said: "Certainly, dear; bring him out if his mother is willing."

"His mother is dead," said John, choking over the words as he thought of their meaning.

And then John's mother stooped and kissed his hair as she said: "Be sure to bring Billy with you tonight if they will let him come."

That was how Billy came to be at Oak Ridge, for that was the name of John's home. Friday night John's father played games with them, and his mother read them a story. When she went up to show Billy his room she had made everything ready for him as carefully as if he had been her own boy.

Saturday morning the boys were raking the leaves in the yard when they broke the rake, and John's mother said they could go to the store and get another one.

John telephoned to the store, and the man told them that the rake would cost thirty-five cents; but his mother didn't have the change, so she gave him a dollar to get the rake.

When they got to the store the man found he had made a mistake and the price of the rake was twenty-five cents instead of thirty-five.

"What are you going to do with the other ten cents?" Billy asked eagerly, and John replied shortly: "Take it home. What do you think?"

"I wouldn't;" said Billy; "you bet I wouldn't. Your mother thinks the rake cost thirty-five cents, and she would not care, and besides she won't ask anything about it."

For answer John laughed goodnaturedly in order to keep from saying anything rude to Billy, and then turned to go home.

"Aw, come on, kid; I want some candy," said Billy, beginning to whine.

Then Billy tried a new game. He went up to the storekeeper and said: "Give me ten cents worth of stick candy."

The storekeeper gave it to him, and when Billy got the bag he stuck a piece of candy into his mouth at once and said: "John's got the money to pay for it."

John looked up and heard what Billy had said and saw what he had done. He knew that if he asked his mother for the ten cents she would gladly give it to him, and he also knew that she would not ask about it anyway; but John was honorable to the very core of his being. He knew that Billy was his guest and that he was partly responsible for Billy's doing on that account, and he didn't want the storekeeper to take the candy back and so lose what Billy had eaten. Just for a minute then he remembered that, no matter how kind his mother might be about the matter, the money he carried was not his own; so he said to the merchant: "I am sorry that Billy ordered the candy, Mr. White, for I have no money of my own with me; but if you will charge it to me, I will pay you out of my next week's allowance."

"Certainly, John," said the merchant; "I am very glad to do it for you."

Billy was listening and thinking all of this time, and when they were safely outside of the store he said: "John, I'm ashamed of myself, and I'll bring you that money to school on Monday," and he did.

Billy wanted to be as trustworthy as John was, and that is one way that a friend can help a friend.—Boys and Girls.

THE CHINA DOG

Little Miss has a china dog. It had a funny little pink mouth through which one could feed it only pennies, nickles, and dimes. Its stomach must have been rather empty, for the three pennies in it rattled loudly as Little Miss tossed the poor dog about.

"I wish I had some one to run over to grandmother's for me," Aunt Bess called from the window.

"I'll go," cried Little Miss, who had often been down the road alone.

"Thank you, my dear. Take this note for me, and when you come back maybe there'll be some more pennies to feed doggie," said Aunt Bess.

Little Miss had left the note at grandmother's house and was on her way home when she spied something glistening in the road. It was a dime, a beautiful, shining dime, unlike any one she had ever seen before. She picked it up and was about to drop it into doggie's mouth when she remembered that it wasn't really, truly her dime. It might belong to some one who had lost it. So she carried it home held tightly in her palm.

"See what I've found," she told Aunt Bess.

"O, my dear, a five-dollar gold piece! I wonder who has lost it? We'll try to find out, and if we do not then it will be yours," said Aunt Bess.

At the end of the week no one had been found to claim the treasure. It must have been lost by some one who had traveled from far away, for many passed along the high road every day.

"The five-dollar gold piece is yours," said Aunt Bess at last; "but before we feed it to doggie let us take it to the bank and have it changed into pennies and nickles and dimes, lest the gold piece might sometime slip out of his mouth and be lost."

And so Little Miss went to town in the big car with her aunt, and the gentleman at the bank took the gold piece, and then, O my, how many pennies and nickles and dimes he did feed doggie till the little china stomach was stuffed quite full and wouldn't rattle at all!

Little Miss had never dreamed that one bit of money could be changed into so many pieces or that one china dog could hold so much. But he didn't hold it so very long, for one fine day the little pink mouth was opened wide, and all the coins were taken out to help buy a shiny new bicycle which Little Miss had wanted very, very much.—Selected.

A REMARKABLE DISCOVERY

"Recently, the proprietor of some land used as a market garden, had his ground trenched up deeper than usual, to bring to the surface richer soil. During the digging, the workmen came upon slabs of stone, which proved to be the roof of a large vault for the burial of the dead. An inscription was found upon these slabs, which, when translated, reads thus: 'A vault for the members of Caesar's household.' Within the vault many tombs were found with inscriptions dating from the birth of Christ to the death of Paul.

"These dates at once wakened the deepest interest, to see if any names mentioned by Paul might be found on any of the tombs. To the delight of all Christian hearts, the names of 'Tryphena,' 'Tryphosa,' 'Urbane,' 'Hermas,' and 'Patrobas,' were found, inscribed upon five different tombs; and all these names are found in the sixteenth chapter of Romans."—From Finest of the Wheat.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Friendship, Stanly.—It would be supposed if any one thought of us at all that we had gone out of existence, but we are still here and doing a great work, pressing on to the goal. It is the carelessness of the writer that there has been no report from here.

On the fifth Sunday in May we had the pleasure of having with us in the absence of our pastor, Rev. Mr. A. Ridge, of Lexington. He made the remarks that "it was his rest day and had come to visit and not to work." We let him off at the 11:00 o'clock hour but as he was asked to preach at 8 o'clock he was willing to do his part as always. He filled the pulpit with an inspiring sermon and using as his theme, "Love," and pressed upon everyone the need of Love toward each other.

It recalled to memory old times to see him stand before us and hear his voicce again.

Our pastor, Mr. Hill, is and has been, so faithful to aid in any work for the benefit of church worship. He filled his appointment Sunday with a thrilling message as always. Mr. Hill brought out new thoughts to an audience of attentive listeners.

There are two of our faithful Sunday school teachers who are being kept away from church on account of sickness. They are greatly missed; pray for the afflicted ones that they may be restored to their normal health and for the teachers that they may soon be back to their places in the church work.

Best wishes to the Herald readers.

MARTHA ANN NORWOOD.

Mt. Carmel, South Lexington Charge.—Brother Ridge filled his appointment June 5, with another of his forceful and helpful sermons. He pointed out the fact that we have a soul that shall never die and that in this life is the time to prepare for Eternity and in early youth is the best time to prepare for that home Jesus has gone to prepare.

We are always looking forward for the preaching days which are the first Sunday at 11 o'clock and the third at three o'clock, for our beloved pastor always brings us such an inspiring and helpful sermon.

Our C. E. Society met at the home of Brother H. G. Swicegood June 1st and held our regular meeting with a very good attendance. The subject was, Our Christian Duty to Health, which was interesting to all present. There were songs and debates and discussions and a solo with Irene Swicegood as leader.

Our Sunday school is growing, we are glad to say, both in number and interest. Pray for us.

H. V. SWICEGOOD.

Kernersville.—Revival services began at Kernersville M. P. church Sunday, May 15th, and continued ten days.

Rev. E. L. Ballard, associate pastor of First M. P. church, High Point, directed the choir, and did it well.

He also gave us some solos that added much to the music and in addition to this conducted two services for the children that were very much appreciated.

With the above exception the pastor conducted the preaching services.

There was an increase in attendance and interest that made us truly glad. We appreciate very much the cooperation of both pastors and members of other denominations in the meeting.

Two persons joined by certificate at the first servicee, and the following persons were baptized and joined at the close of the meeting: Lucia Linville, Dorotha Whicker, Elizabeth Whicker, Kathryn Whicker, Endora McCuiston, and Roger Linville. I trust that each person who joined will prove a blessing to the church, and that the church in turn will also prove a blessing to them.

E. G. LOWDERMILK.

Union, Halifax Circuit.—It was a great pleasure to have with us at our last regular appointment Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., of Littleton, North Carolina, to fill the place of our pastor who could not be with us on that day. I truly regret that so many of our people were absent from services and feel that it was their great misfortune to fail to hear the splendid sermon which he delivered. It is indeed a pleasure to us to have Mr. Harrison with us at any time and extend to him a most sincere welcome.

Our Sunday school was well represented at the Sunday School Convention held at Aurelian Springs the fourth Sunday in May. I feel sure that the addresses delivered by various men were very beneficial to us all as Sunday school workers.

I hereby take the opportunity to entreat you members of Union church to register for the Young People's Summer Conference at High Point College. If you are not going your registration will help greatly in making this the greatest conference in the history of our great college at High Point.

RUTH LEWIS, Reporter.

Union, Halifar Circuit.—On Saturday morning, June 11, 1927, a quiet but impressive wedding took place in the Methodist parsonage at Halifax. There in the presence of only God and a few witnesses, Miss Annie Lewis, of Enfield, a member of this church, and Mr. James Laughter of Winston-Salem, N. C., were united by the sacred bonds of matrimony.

The bridegroom, a former resident of this community, and the charming young bride are held in high esteem by all who know them. The happy couple left as soon as possible after the ceremony for Winston-Salem where they will make their future home.

Miss Lewis was very faithful to her church, ever ready to be of service in any way possible, therefore she will be sorely missed by her co-laborers in His service.

Mr. Laughter is connected with the Reynolds tobacco Company of Winston-Salem and is very successful in his work.

We wish the young couple happiness and prosperity for the future.

REPORTER.

Union Grove, Orange Circuit.—The first Sunday in June was a delightful day for us. First a Children's Day service was given after which Mrs. A. G. Dixon gave an address on Foreign Missions which all enjoyed. She can make the need so real. In the afternoon Dr. A. G. Dixon gave us such a good sermon. He was our pastor 21 years ago and we are always glad to have him with us.

Our meeting is to begin first Sunday in August and we ask prayer for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on our church and community. We look forward to having Rev. J. Clyde Auman with us during his stay in North Carolina.

Our Sunday school and Missionary Societies are still moving on, not as well as we would like, but the best we have been able to so far.

Our pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, who gives us third Sunday p.m., gave us, as he always does, a good sermon Sunday p.m.

We trust there will be improvement made in our Primary Sunday school literature. We think a catechism of Bible question with short answers would be helpful.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

N. B. L.

Mt. Zion, Pinnacle Charge.—Sunday was a great day for Mt. Zion. Our Sunday school was by far the largest we've had this year and everybody seemed in high spirits. We believe this interest will continue.

Sunday was the day set for Memorial Service. Brother Hunter was at his very best with a strong and helpful sermon. He very beautifully told us how we as Christians and as a church should live.

Dinner was served on the grounds at the noon hour and flowers were placed on the graves in cemetery. At two o'clock the bell was tapped and the house filled almost to capacity for afternoon service which consisted mainly of songs appropriate for a memorial service sung by the home choir. Brother John Mickey of Mt. Pleasant M. E. church and his three sons gave us a number of fine quartets. Brother R. S. Barber and Brother John Mickey gave us splendid talks.

Monday night we will rehearse for Children's Day exercise which will be held next Sunday night.

Our special meeting will begin on next Monday at 11 o'clock.

Quite a number of visitors were with us Sunday from Winston-Salem, Mt. Airy and the country round about.

We are glad to have with us again Brother Charlie Mikles and his wife and baby; they were missed very much while away.

We just learned to our sorrow of the severe sickness of our brother, Mr. Geo. N. Butner, caused by a stroke of paralysis.

C. W. ALLEN, Reporter.

Concord.—Our pastor has just closed a gracious revival at Kannapolis, for the purpose of organizing a Methodist Protestant church in that city. Mr. Hendry did the preaching, assisted by Mr. N. J. Miles, of Enfield, who directed the singing, and accompanied at the piano by Miss Lula Riddle, of Burlington; all rendered a great service for the Master. Many lost souls were stirred by the splendid messages which the pastor preached from time to time and by the wonderful singing directed by such an able man. The meeting came to a close at the Sunday night service. We hope to see great good which was accomplished manifested in the days to come.

The newly organized Methodist Protestant church has eighteen charter members, and it hopes to more than double that number in a short while. The Sunday school, which is a necessary organization for any church, was organized Sunday afternoon, with Mr. Marshal Henderson, superintendent, and Miss Lillian Braswell as Secretary and Treasurer. The new Sunday school has an enrollment of twenty-five members at present.

Services will be held each Sunday afternoon, in the tent at present, at 3:00 o'clock, by Rev. G. H. Hendry, who will serve the new church until conference. The Concord church cooperated in every way during the meeting and is going to continue to pray and work for it. We want to ask the other churches to join in and pray that this new church may prove a great blessing to Kannapolis and to our whole conference.

The usual services have been held at our church each Sunday. We were very glad to have a number of visitors from Burlington with us last Sunday and want them to come back.

We began a two weeks Daily Vacation Bible School in the church Monday morning with a splendid enrollment. We hope to accomplish a great deal in the school and make it a pleasure for every girl and boy who attends. BERNICE NASH, Reporter.

Liberty.—Our loss in the death of Mr. Highfill is inestimable. His loyalty to God and the right is unexcelled. His faithfulness to his Bible class in Sunday school was indeed beautiful.

The great throng of people who assembled for his funeral, were witnesses of his noble life. More than twenty-five ministers were present and a host of relatives and friends.

Rev. J. D. Williams was the pulpit help in a series of meetings here the past week. He preached strong, forceful sermons.

Miss Margaret King Shepard who underwent an operation for appendicitis recently, is getting on nicely and will soon be home again.

Mesdames F. A. Shepard and R. L. Elkins, also Miss Marie Ward, were appointed to prepare our Children's Day program.

BERTINE SHEPARD, Reporter.

Jerusalem.—Our regular services have been held for the month of June, the second and third Sunday mornings. Fairly good attendance was had at each service. Last Sunday there were forty in Sunday school. This number seems small, but the Sunday school is small on account of the few children and also grown persons in the community of the church.

The Lord's Supper was observed at the service last Sunday and a large number participated in the observance of the ordinance. At the close of the service we selected nominees for delegate to the Annual Conference. Brothers H. L. Hedrick and W. J. Ward were named as the nominees, and the vote will be taken later on these two brethren, either one of them will make a good representative in the Annual Conference.

Our next preaching service will be held the second Sunday in July at 11 o'clock a.m.

C. B. WAY, Reporter.

South Lexington.—The work of the church and Sunday school has been moving along as usual since our last report. The Sunday school attendance has been decreasing some since the warm weather has come which affords people the opportunity of getting away from town on Sundays. There were 183 present last Sunday, and 185 were present the previous Sunday. Pastor Ridge was unwell for some time recently, but has been performing the duties of his pastorate, preaching regularly and is improving in health, we understand. He preached three times last Sunday; twice at South Lexington and once at Mount Carmel. A good sermon was delivered Sunday night on the subject of "The Cultivation of Soil of the Heart."

The vote for delegate to the Annual Conference will be taken next Sunday night. The nominees are C. L. Hedrick, of the South Lexington church, and H. G. Swicegood, of the Mount Carmel church. The third quarterly conference has been called to meet in the South Lexington church on Saturday afternoon before the second Sunday in July, at 2 p.m.

This writer will be brief this time, since there was no issue of the Herald last week and the Editor will probably have an overflow of reports for this week.

C. B. WAY, Reporter.

Canaan, Denton Charge.—Our pastor filled his regular appointment here Sunday, June 12, at 11 o'clock, bringing a good message which was inspiring and much enjoyed by the people.

Our Sunday school attendance has been rather small for the past few weeks, except for the last two Sundays when it was much better; but there is still room for improvement.

We are sorry to report the death of one of our good members, Mr. Columbus Ridge, who had been an invalid for many years. He was a true Christian, and a faithful worker. Mr. Ridge will be greatly missed in the home, and also in the church; although he was not able to attend church, he always had some good advice to give others. We are confident that he has gone to rest.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

REPORTER.

Shoals, Pinnacle and Mt. Zion Circuit.—Sunday was a wonderful day. Rev. Mr. Hunter preached very impressive sermons at the morning and evening services.

Our Sunday school is progressing very nicely since the warm weather has gotten here at last. We are happy over the good attendance last Susday.

Our revival meeting will begin the second Sunday in July. We do not know who is to help Brother Hunter. REPORTER.

Eden, Halifax Circuit.—Our pastor has taken a vacation and we are still exclaiming, "How remarkable!" He has been so faithful in filling his appoiitments with us that we feel he deserved a rest, and we hope he has been greatly benefited by his few days vacation. We thank him for getting Rev. N. M. Harrison to preach to us first Sunday. We enjoyed having Brother Harrison. Besides preaching a very good sermon he told us of a few of the great things in store for those who attend the Young People's Summer Conference. We are hopeful of having our church well represented at this conference.

Our Sunday school is on the upward trend both in attendance and interest. We hope to have curtains in the near future to divide our classes. This will be a great help to teachers and scholars.

We expect to have our Children's Day program on the third Sunday in July at 11 o'clock a.m. We hope to have a large congregation at that hour and for the regular preaching service in the afternoon. Lunch will be served on the church ground if you who attend will bring it along. There has been some discussion among our members recently as to who is official reporter. It lies between Mrs. Ben Puttingitoff and D. Linquent. REPORTER.

Mizpah.—The Mizpah Philathea class held its regular meeting Sunday at church. The meeting was called to order by the President; roll called and minutes read by secretary, with a goodly number present.

The class as a whole not being able to visit the sick and aged members of the church the class decided to send out cards to let them know we still love and think of them, even if we can't visit them.

We are sorry to know of our beloved pastor's wife's illness. May we pray that God be with her in her hours of affliction, and hope it is His will that she regain her health again. To let her know we are thinking of her we are sending her flowers.

The class will meet again in July.

REPORTER.

Liberty.—The Liberty special meeting closed Monday evening, June 13. Rev. J. D. Williams did the preaching. Regardless of four rains and the torn up roads large congregations heard his Gospel messages. During the meeting there were a large number of reconsecrations and some conversions. We feel that the church and community is helped greatly by having had this meeting. The reception of members will take place the fourth Sunday morning of June.

Mrs. Mamie Smith, Mrs. J. O. Overman and Mrs. J. A. Croson who have been ill are slowly improving.

The church and community have lost one of its best characters in the death of Rev. D. A. Highfill. A full account appears in another article of the paper

F. L. GIBBS.

Bessemer City.—We had services Sunday night with a very good attendance. Brother Carson delivered a wonderful sermon which was greatly enjoyed. We have a very good Sunday school at this time; there were 107 present last Sunday week. The weather being cloudy and rainy several were absent last Sunday. We want to begin plans for our Sunday school picnic next Sunday and hope we will have a success as the young folks enjoy being together on these occasions.

The Christian Endeavor society is still on the map. We do not have as good attendance in our Senior society as might be, but we want to keep up this good work. We organized a Junior Endeavor society Sunday night with Miss Gertrude Broom president, Miss Nina Wilson, vice-president; Miss Elizabeth Paire, secretary; and Miss Lacy Richardsos, treasurer. We hope these yousg folks will accomplish much and lasting good by their efforts.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Remember us as you pray, that we may still be faithfhl to the cause of the Master.

LUCY BLANTON, Reporter.

Harris Chapel, Vance Charge.—A splendid congregation attended the Children's Day Service last Sunday at 11 o'clock. Even though this service was not announced very extensively, yet the church was filled to overflowing. The children did well. Much credit to Mrs. J. B. Glover and Mrs. L. A. Wells for their loyalty in training the children. The collecction amounted to $12.26.

The young people's prayer meeting which was organized some six weeks ago is progressing nicely. The average attendance runs around one hundred. Miss Mamie Lee Boyd is leader for next Sunday night

Our special meeting begins the second Sunday in next month with Rev. R. S. Troxler of Lexington as pulpit help. Pray for us.

REPORTER.

Bethesda, North Davidson.—We haven't reported for some time, but we are still alive. We have Sunday school every Sunday morning at 9:45, preaching twice a month, every second Sunday morning at 11:00, and the fourth Sunday at 3:00 p.m.

Rev. Mr. Troxler filled his appointment yesterday at the regular hour, bringing a good message which was inspiring and was much enjoyed.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. Much interest is being shown in the Sunday school work. Each Sunday one of the class renders a program just after class.

We have organized a Teachers' Council meeting and it has started off with success, and we hope it will continue.

We are planning for a Children's Day soon.

Best wishes to Herald and its readers.

WILLIE YOKLEY, Reporter.

Hope Church, Chatham Circuit.—Rev. C. G. Isley filled his regular appointment for us last Sunday at eleven o'clock, and as usual he gave us a good sermon. We also had one new member added to the church, Miss Maudie May Andrew, of near Bonlee, N. C.

I think Mr. Isley is going to do his part for our church. We are very glad indeed to have him and his mother move to Bonlee to make it their home while he stays on our circuit. We welcome them most heartily, and want them to visit us and be at home with us. We gave the preacher and his mother a little pounding Sunday and they seemed to appreciate it very much.

We also have organized a Sunday school. We hadn't had Sunday school in a few years; think it is progressing in the right way. We started with 25 and last Sunday had 43. We hope we can have a good, lively little Sunday school and hope all will pray and work together for its good. We also want to furnish our church with new pews before the revival which will be second Sunday in August.

MRS. R. R. BREWER.

Orange Charge, Hebron.—Our work is moving along nicely. The Sunday school is increasing. A large black board has recently been purchased which will add greatly to the school.

Owing to the rain last Sunday afternoon we did not have any preaching; however the pastor was there—he never fails to go on account of weather or bad roads.

The meeting of the W. H. M. S. will be held at the church next Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. All members urged to be present.

The Children's Day exercise will be held next Sunday, June 26, at 11 o'clock and the Memorial service will be held in the after noon. Dinner on the grounds. Those having relatives buried here are urged to come and bring flowers to decorate the graves.

Our special meeting will begin the second Sunday in August with Rev. H. F. Surrat as pulpit help.

Asheville.—Our pastor has been called to Atlanta by Dr. Straughn to organize a church in that city within the next two weeks.

Mrs. C. W. Bates was recently elected president of the Asheville Inter-denominational Missionary Union.

The Christian Endeavor Society of our church here was recently entertained by Pastor Bates and Mrs. Bates in their hut in Weaverville.

Our Brotherhood held a delightful meeting at the parsonage on June 14th. Rev. A. E. Hayes, Baptist Missionary to Brazil, was one of the speakers of the evening. He delighted every one. He told how he was led into the ministry after he located in Brazil as a teacher of Agriculture, having volunteered for mission work in college. After arriving in Brazil, he saw that they needed Jesus most of all. He was soon ordained in the field. He also declared that no church can live unless a misionary church. The other speaker in this meeting was the president of our Brotherhood, Brother E. C. Fawcett. He gave an illuminating study of James Whitcomb Riley, telling many interesting incidents, and reading a number of his poems. As a farmer boy he was attracted to Riley as a writer because Riley was everybody's friend. He visited Mr. Riley once in his own home, just to lay eyes on him and to speak to him face to face.

Children's Day services were held in our church last Sunday morning—a good program and a good attendance. Offering, $25. Dr. Paul Ringer, one of Asheville's best physicians, recently spoke in our church at the evening service on The Christian's Duty to Be Well. He had a good audience and delighted them with his message.

Two Sundays ago, Mrs. Lucy Robertson, for years of the the faculty of Greensboro Female College, worshiped with us. Prof. T. C. Amick, of the faculty of Elon College, is teaching in the Asheville Summer School.

We are glad to have Miss Novella McIntyre with us for the summer. For most of the summer we will lose Miss Verda McIntyre, who goes to Columbia University Summer School, and Miss Elizabeth Carter who will attend the Summer School at Duke University. Miss Eudora Younginer, who has been teaching in the High Point schools, is expected home in two weeks. Her many friends here will welcome her.

Mrs. Joseph Patneaude, nee Miss Gertrude Bassett, has gone to Norfolk to live.

The Executive Board of the Woman's Missionary Society are expected to hold their post-poned meeting the first week in July.

REPORTER.

Calvary.—There has been no report from Calvary for some time. Our pastor was away for several weeks preaching in revival services but was here for most of the Sunday services. Laymen of the church conducted the mid week prayer services in his absence. We were very glad to have Mr. J. M. Stone of Grace church have charge of one of those services.

We held our Children's Day service on the first Sunday night in June. The exercises were very good considering so many interruptions of the program on account of the epidemic of measles in our community. The following Sunday night the choir gave a service of music. Both of these special services were enjoyed by large congregations.

On last Sunday morning our pastor delivered a very interesting and instructive sermon on "How We Got Our Bible." At the evening service his subject was, "A Greater Than Lindbergh Is Here." This was not a sensational sermon. He did not discount Lindbergh's greatness but thinks first things should come first.

During the summer months our church is planning to have a unified program for all the services of the week. Beginning with Wednesday of this week, we will have supper at the "Hut" at 6:45, prayer meeting at 7:30 followed by choir practice and Home Missionary meeting. Each week the prayer service will be followed by a meeting of any of the organizations scheduled for that week.

Our church lawn is beautiful now. We have a good stand of grass and the shrubbery looks fine. We have one of the most beautiful church lawns in the city. We are indebted to Mr. G. O. Coble for its attractive appearance. He has not spared time nor money in getting it in this fine condition.

His friends and members of the congregation are congratulating our pastor, Rev. L. W. Gerringer, upon the honor he has recently received. At the commencement at Western Maryland College, the M. A. degree was conferred upon him.

REPORTER.

Philadelphia, Greensville Circuit.—There will be all day services at Philadelphia church Sunday the 26. Children's Day in the morning and preaching in the afternoon. Everybody come and spend the day with us.

MELVIN PEARSON.

Asheboro.—Our revival meeting began on June 5th and ran through the 16th. As a preparation for the meeting we had union prayer meetings in the homes of the people. Every church in town was holding a meeting at the same time and there was a union service in the M. E. church each morning and services in the various churches at night. The morning services were largely attended and were very inspiring, the various visiting ministers taking turns at preaching. The evening services were also well attended considering the fact that all the churches were holding services. Rev. T. M. Johnson, D. D., came to us on Monday of the meeting and did fine preaching until Saturday. Dr. Johnson's preaching in the union service was highly complimented; in fact, one seldom sees an audience more deeply moved than they were. But on Saturday Dr. Johnson was taken sick suddenly and was not able to preach any more. He remained over until Monday and then was taken home. Our people are praying for his recovery. Brother Ballard of High Point who had done splendid work leading the singing preached on Saturday and Sunday evenings and his sermons were well received. On second Monday of the meeting Rev. S. W. Taylor came and preached in Dr. Johnson's stead until the close of the meeting on Thursday evening. Brother Taylor was at his best and he too made a fine impression in the union service as well as in our own church. While the Christians were greatly edified and strengthened yet our church had about the same experience as all the other churches, we did not reach the unsaved—they simply stayed away. It was a great treat to be associated with Brothers Johnson, Ballard and Taylor. In fact one would have to go a long way to find three more congenial, lovable and consecrated men. They will long be remembered in Asheboro.

While we were somewhat disappointed with the results of the meeting, yet we had almost the thrill of a life time this morning when we threw wide the doors of our church building to receive the children who had come to attend our first Daily Vacation Bible School. How many do you suppose came? Well, right around one hundred and twelve. We had not made any bid for large numbers since it was our first experience, but they came any way. Every church in town seems to be represented though of course the larger part are our own. Miss Cleta Rich is at the head of the Junior Department, Mrs. Pritchard the Primary and Miss Beatrice Lowdermilk the Beginners. Each of these has helpers. When all the Departments came together for the close of the first morning's program it was a magnificent sight. To hear them sing their songs, to see them salute the American and the Christian flag, was enough to put new life into any one. The pastor is acting as General Superintendent which is a new experience for him.

Mrs. W. F. Redding has returned from the High Point Hospital greatly improved. Miss Edith McDowell is doing nicely now though still in the High Point Hospital. Brother Lacy Lewis had such a quick recovery from an operation for appendicitis that some folks hardly knew he was in the hospital until he had returned home. Mr. A. Carl Cox, father of our reporter, Miss Mabel, seems to be recovering from a rather critical illness. Brother Earl F. Bulla, one of our most faithful members, was operated on for appendicitis in the High Point Hospital last week and is doing nicely. Brother Bulla has been working in High Point for some time but is very faithful here when it is possible for him to be with us. J. E. PRITCHARD.

Davidson Circuit.—Brother Ridge preached a good sermon today. Congregation fairly good and good interest. We like Brother Ridge.

Mrs. Wilson Loflin joined the church today She came from the Baptist church. We are pleased to have her in our church. We have prayer meeting every two weeks. But few go, but good talks are made. We like to go to prayer meeting and don't see why people don't. Come on, friends, these meetings will do you good.

There was a rally day at Chapel the third Sunday in May. Everybody enjoyed it. Brother A. G. Dixon preached at 11 o'clock and Mrs. Dixon spoke in the afternoon. Some old gentlemen made talks that were good and will be remembered for years. The children from different churches did fine. Good singing; the day was a success, I think. Hope there will be more such days.

LIZZIE CRANFORD.

Henderson.—The Ladies' Aid Society met last Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Henry T. Powell. The president, Mrs. S. R. Watson, presided. The general business of the society was disposed of and plans for raising money were discussed and voted on; general needs for the church having been supplied by the Ladies' Aid recently, makes it necessary to replenish the treasury. Mrs. O. O. Young gave a very helpful account of the life of Jane Addams, noted welfare worker. At the conclusion of the meeting the hostess served delightful refreshments.

The Baracca class had charge of the midweek prayer service last Wednesday night, with its teacher, Mr. Pope Garratt, as leader. He gave a splendid talk and one that was indeed uplifting. Quite a large number of Baracas were present and we hope they continue to attend.

The Children's Day program, in memory of Rev. Fred C. Klein, D. D., was given at the church last night by the children of the Sunday school. It was very impressive and the little ones brought out the true Missionary needs in our foreign lands. A pageant was also given by some of the larger children, which was also inspiring. The offering was over forty dollars, which will go to help build a M. P. church at Nagoya, Japan.

REPORTER.

Efland, Orange Charge.—Sunday was a good day for us. Our pastor preached a good sermon at 11 o'clock after which he administered the Lord's supper. A goodly number partook. Sunday night our Children's Day program was enjoyed by a large crowd.

The protracted meeting will begin at our church the second Sunday night in July. Rev. R. A. Hunter is the promised help for this meeting.

Our Sunday school is still awake, up and doing. The attendance is good, but could be lots better if every member would try hard to make it so.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

MRS. E. S. TAYLOR, Reporter.

High Point.—The Vacation Church School is now in its second week of work, having opened on Monday, June 13th. Sessions are held daily except Saturday from 9 to 12 o'clock a.m. It is proving to be very popular with the boys and girls, the attendance having passed the 100 mark, and it became necessary to announce that no more registrations could be made. Rev. E. L. Ballard has been untiring in his efforts for the success of this school, which is being tried out for the first time in our church, and many thanks are due him from the parents as well as the children. Mrs. J. C. Whitesell (nee Miss Madge Moffitt of Burlington) is the capable Director, Mrs. John S. Pickett is Superintendent Junior Department, and her assistants are Mrs. P. E. Lindley, Misses Louise Jennings and Alma Andrews, Ernest Auman and Wilbert Pritchard. Mrs. Ben T. Moore is Superintendent Primary Department; and her assistants are Mrs. H. A. Garrett, Misses Kathleen Welch and Vista Garrett. Teachers in the Kindergarten are Misses Blanche Leonard, Inez and Irene Reynolds, and Grace Koontz. Mrs. M. R. W. Green is Custodian of supplies. The school will continue through this week, and probably until July 1st.

Rev. P. E. Lindley on last Sunday morning delivered a beautiful sermon on "Kingly Kindness," basing his message on David's kindness to Mephibosheth, the crippled son of his beloved friend, Jonathan. A male quartet sang a lovely selection, "No Burdens Yonder," and the choir rendered a beautiful anthem, "Who is Like Unto Thee?" The evening message was delivered by the associate pastor on the subject, "What Will Thou Have Me to Do?"

The Ladies' Aid Society held a delightful meeting at the church on Monday, June 13th, with the following hostesses: Mesdames E. L. Auman, R. M. Andrews, Paul S. Kennett, H. A. Garrett, A. A. York, J. C. Whitesell, and Cora Vuncannon. The Society served meals for one day to the Community Chest workers, and realized $250 from this source. The debt on carpet has been materially decreased.

The C. E. Society held its weekly meeting Monday evening, when the topic for discussion was "Our Need for A Christian Sabbath," a most important one just at this time, when insidious efforts are being made to lessen respect for the Lord's Day by Sunday golf, moving pictures, baseball, and the like. God grant that we may never live to see the holy Sabbath of our fathers desecrated in our beloved Southland as it is in many sections of our country. New officers for the C. E. Society recently elected are as follows: President, Mr. Ralph Vance, vice-president, Miss Mary Sheppard; recording secretary, Miss Dennyce McAdams; corresponding secretary, Miss Nellie Martin, and treasurer, Miss Lalah Sheppard.

Children's Day will be observed by the Sunday school next Sunday. A competent committee is in charge of preparations for the program, which promises to be a success.

A number of people from High Point attended the Community Memorial Service at Jamestown M. E. church last Sunday afternoon. Mr. Fred N. Tate of this city and Dr. E. C. Perisho of Guilford College delivered addresses. A splendid portrait of the late Mr. Joseph S. Ragsdale, pioneer manufacturer, loyal Superintendent of the Sunday school for many years, upright and beloved Christian citizen, was presented to his widow for the remaining years of her life, and then to be presented to the Sunday school, and occupy a place in the pastor's study. A unique feature of this delightful service was a long list of names of deceased citizens of Jamestown and vicinity, which bears an unusually honorable record, these names appearing on the program as a memorial to these founders and builders of by-gone days. It is proposed to make this Memorial Association a permananent one to meet annually.

We are much pleased to know that Mr. A. L. Ellison is improving after a serious operation in High Point Hospital, and has returned to his home on Thurston Street. Many friends are hoping for his rapid recovery.

Mrs. Lewis E. Teague and small daughter left Saturday night for an extended visit to friends in Westminster and other points in Maryland.

Holt and Garland McPherson have returned from the State University for the summer vacation with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. D. McPherson.

Mrs. J. G. Snipes has joined a party of friends on a trip to Chimney Rock, Asheville, and Blowing Rock.

Miss Alive Scarratt of Charlotte has returned home from a visit to Mrs. Lewis Teague.

Wyatt A. Pickens returned home from Cambridge, Mass., last Sunday. He has been an Instructor and student in Harward University the past year, and is planning to return in September.

Mrs. H. S. Meredith, who is pleasantly remembered as Miss Jessie Pickett, is the guest of her mother, Mrs. W. P. Pickett, and is accompanied by her two sons, Fletcher Cox and William Meredith.

We are pleased to hear that the condition of Mrs. Harriett Guire of Lenoir, one of our older members who has been very ill in a Hospital, is much improved after a serious operation, and she has been rmoved to the home of her son, Virgil D. Guire. Her recovery is remarkable on account of her advanced age.

The weekly visit of the Herald was missed last week, and we are hoping that Editor McCulloch had a pleasant trip to his Alma Mater at Adrian, Mich., and a safe return.

Many friends among High Point College students and others were interested in reading an account of the marriage of Miss Pomona Johnson and Mr. Aubrey Amick, which was solemnized at Gibsonville last Friday, June 17th. The bride is a daughter of Rev. T. M. Johnson, was a member of the first graduating class of High Point College at the recent commencement, and is a fine and attractive girl of charm and personality. This splendid young couple has the hearty good wishes of countless friends for a happy and successful life together.

Pleasant Hill, West Forsyth.—Our pastor, Rev. Mr. Whitaker, filled his appointment Sunday with an interesting sermon on Foreign Missions.

We are glad to say that our Sunday school attendance is very good although there are several on the outside that we haven't been able to bring in yet.

Our Missionary and Christian Endeavor Societies are doing good work. We have recently organized a mission band among the children, Mrs. R. G. Holder, leader. We don't have many members yet, but hope to get more. The children are taking a great interest in the work.

We held our Children's Day program Sunday evening. The program was good, and enjoyed by a large congregation, much credit being due to Mrs. J. F. Hunter and Miss Lucile Sprinkle in training the children. The offering amounted to something over $18.00.

REPORTER.

Lexington.—Bible School closed last Thursday with a picnic dinner at noon and a very fine program at night by the children. There were 110 enrolled and more than half the enrollment made a perfect record attendance. The sewing class, lead by Mrs. Bethea, made 120 garments which will be given to the children at the Home. The boys, under Mr. Bethea's instruction made useful things of wood—book-ends, footstools, tables and a book case with a wooder book representing each book of the Bible. Besides this profitable instruction the children were taught to sing church hymns, to memorize scripture verses, the salute to the Christian and American flags and many other helpful things.

The teachers of the school were Mr. and Mrs. Bethea, Mrs. Rodgers, Mrs. Curtis Koonts and Misses Virginia Walser, Willie Veigh Leonard and Clara Taylor.

Mr. Bethea will leave for his appointments in Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma next Sunday night. Mrs. Bethea goes with him, so the parsonage will be quite a lonesome looking place for a while. Brothers Hardie and Way will fill Brother Bethea's appointments while he is away.

Sunday school and Christian Endeavor are growing and doing fine work.

REPORTER.

Guilford Charge.—We are becoming more and more active in our Master's business. We have organized a Ladies' Aid Society at two of our churches both of which are doing great things for their churches. The one at Hickory Grove is planning some great improvements on the church building, while the Mitchells Grove Society was only recently organized and has made no definite plans of expenditure yet, however they are raising money in various ways which they shall later plan to spend on church improvements. Also our recently organized Missionary and Christian Endeavor Societies at Midway are doing a splendid work. Speaking of our charge as a whole, we can say that there is an increased interest in every phase of church work.

The pastor feels very much indebted to the members on Guilford circuit for their generosity and the kindness they have shown him. They are a responsive people and ever mindful of their pastor's needs especially in the culinary department of his home. Their present pastor has been serving their work for almost two years and has had to buy only three small sacks of flour, scarcely any vegetables and canned fruits, and practically no sugar, coffee, etc., while serving here. He has received three poundings since Christmas, one each from Fairfield, Mitchells Grove, and Midway, which, with the gifts from individuals, have kept his pantry plenteously stocked with good things. O. C. LOY, Pastor.

Flat Rock, Vance Circuit.—Perhaps the largest congregation since our Easter program was given greeted our pastor, Rev. M. P. Chamblin, at the eleven o'clock service yesterday morning. The attention was unusually good and everybody seemed to be in the spirit of worship. I do not know the spirit or feeling that possessed Peter when he accompanied his Master on the Mount of Transfiguration and exclaimed, "Master, it is good for us to be here. Let us make here three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elijah." But I feel that everyone who attended the service yesterday felt like saying, it is good to be here.

Our Sunday school is still running in high-gear, and touching practically every home in this vicinity. Suppose we were to state our immediate home mission goals for America in some such simple terms as these: Every family cared for by some church. Every boy and girl enrolled in some Sunday school. Every church with an adequate and well-trained staff and a well-considered program of worship, nurture, and community ministry.

If we could provide for all the boys and girls of America as good opportunities for religious nurture as some boys and girls are now enjoying, and if we could interest our churches in the adults now unreached by them, we would not have much cause to worry about the America of the future.

Our Children's Day program is being planned for the first Sunday night in July. There will be an ice cream supper at Flat Rock church next Friday night. The public is cordially invited to attend.

LADIES' AID MEETING REPORT

The Ladies' Aid Society of Albemarle held its meeting Tuesday afternoon at the church. In the absence of the President and Vice-President, Mrs. John Whitlock acted as president pro tem. and opened the meeting by reading the 44th Psalm, followed by prayer by Mrs. M. Hatley. The roll was called and minutes of last meeting read and approved.

The committee reports showed that they are carrying out their work in a progressive manner. The Visiting Committee reported 65 visits. Flower Committee for next month will be Mesdames M. Hatley, C. W. Hatley, Arthur Furr and Dan Hatley.

It was decided that we serve a chicken supper at an early date, if a suitable building can be secured, and a committee instructed to make investigations at once.

We were very sorry to have to give up our faithful president, Mrs. Moton, who has moved to High Point. Mrs. D. F. Harkey, our vice-president, agreed to fill the unexpired term of president, and Mrs. J. A. Furr was elected to the officce of vice-president.

Two bills were ordered paid. One for a top to the cook stove in the parsonage and one for flowers sent by the society for Mrs. Hilliard Bowers, deceased. The society recently bought a new ice box for the parsonage, and also new hall curtains, which were very much appreciated by our good pastor and wife.

The next meeting will be held in the home of Mrs. Reece Smith.

This completing the business for this meeting, the Lord's prayer was repeated in concert and the meeting adjourned.

MRS. JOHN WHITLOCK, Cor. Sec'y.

A CIRCUIT CONFERENCE

A circuit conference composed of Kernersville charge was held at Pine Grove church the fifth Sunday in May.

At 11 a.m. the pastor, as best he could, emphasized the need of taking and reading good literature.

At two p.m. Rev. L. W. Gerringer, pastor of Calvary church, Greensboro, took for his subject, How to Build up a Church, and emphasized it in such a plain practical way that it will of necessity bring forth fruit. Prof. Lindley of High Point College followed, taking for his subject, Christian Education; he spoke of an education that would bring about a pure heart-felt religion that truly saves from sin. The greatest regret with me was that there were no more from the other churches to hear these addresses.

Many thanks to these good brethren for their excellent messages.

E. G. LOWDERMILK.

94th ANNUAL CELEBRATION AT PLEASANT HILL

Pleasant Hill Christian Church will be the scene of the 94th annual celebration this year of the Pleasant Hill Temperence Union, which was organized in 1833, and is the oldest in the entire South. Some years ago a granite and bronze monument was erected to mark this spot. Pleasant Hill is south of Graham, N. C., twelve miles on State route, No. 62, in one of the finest sections of the county; surrounded by the old homes of many of the county's oldest settlers, such as the Albrights, the McPhersons, the Dixons, and others of the pre-Revolutionary families. Lord Cornwallis passed through that section in 1781, and just west of it was fought the Battle of Alamance in 1771 between Gov. Tryon, and the famous Regulators.

Plans are under way for a notable celebration this year, and a home-coming of former residents of that section, on the church grounds on Monday, July 4th. The address will be delivered by Dr. W. T. Whitsett of Whitsett at 11 a.m. and various interesting features will fill up the programme for both morning and afternoon.

Many great gatherings have been held here in the years now passed, and those in charge of the work for this year are expecting to make this 94th annual celebration one of the best in the long history of the place. A general invitation is extended to the public and all those interested to be present for this year's celebration.

REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN

The Line Advanced From 186 to 258 This Week

We see that we are not at a standstill; we are making a little progress, but we are not moving as rapidly as we should, in order to reach our set goal by July 18th. The agents who are at work are doing fine work; they are regularly sending in almost weekly lists. There are some of our appointed agents who have not sent in any names as yet. I can't feel that they are paying no attention to the campaign; I think they are trying to get the name of every member of the church before sending in any names. Agents, don't do that, send in what you have each week if it is not more than three names. We are expecting some new churches to appear in the list next week.

Burlington First comes from the zero class to second place in the list of churches, and is running West End a close second. I hear rumor of this just being a starter for Burlington. West End, do you hear?

Albemarle also made a good gain, jumping from 12 to 32. Albemarle always "does up things brown." For two or three years, I think, she has won the registration banner. (If I am not right some one correct me.) Aspiring winners need to watch Albemarle.

A report from Bro. Harrison received too late to be printed this week brings the total number of registrations up to 435.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE

Many are asking for information as to the cost of the conference. The expense will be the same as it was last year: $10.00 for the entire week, or $1.50 per day if some one just stays part time. This, however, does not include text-books to be used in the class room. For the $10.00 an individual will be given board, room, tuition etc. for the week. Here is an opportunity to invest $10.00 in a most profitable way.

Perhaps some one may want to know what to bring. Bring all necessary toilet articles, bed linen, hiking clothes, tennis togs, musical instruments, baseball necessities.

Good News

We have been very fortunate to secure one of our returned missionaries to teach a course in misions. Dr. Roberta Fleagle has kindly consented to come to our conference and teach our mission course. She will also bring to us a lecture relative to her work in China. Dr. Fleagle has been in China for seven years and out of her vast experience she will bring to us much information concerning the work there. YOU ought to hear her! We have many outstanding people on our Faculty and it will be a great inspiration to be with them and learn of them, but I am sure that it will be a peculiar privilege to hear Dr. Fleagle and be in her class room.

Brethren of the ministry, Sunday school superintendents and workers, presidents of the Christian Endeavor Societies and ALL who have enlisted in our ranks, I ask for your earnest prayers, I solicit your faithful co-operation to the end that this may be the biggest and best conference in the history of the work.

FRED. W. PASCHALL, President of Board.

—Quite a number of vacation Bible schools have started up.

THE EDITOR'S VACATION

As planned, we made a trip to Michigan. This proved to be both pleasant and restful. We had a good car, good company, and met friends of former days. Our company included Brother W. H. Hunter, his wife and daughter, Miss Mary, and the editor's daughter. Brother Hunter had just bought a new Chandler Sedan, and we five just filled it. The distance traveled going and coming was about two thousand miles, and the car never failed to do its duty. We had one tire puncture from a nail. We put on the extra tire in a short time and were on our way. A roadside repair shop mended the punctured tire in about half an hour, and we had our reserve ready. We were gone nine days. We spent three days going, three coming, and three in Michigan. Our time in Michigan was divided between Adrian and Ann Arbor. Brother Hunter and the editor were former students at Adrian. The editor was for a year student and teacher in Ann Arbor and Brother Hunter's daughter, Miss Bessie, is now a student there, preparing to be a physician. We met quite a number of people we had been associated with in the past, and every one of them we were glad to meet again. We attended a church service in the old college church at Adrian. We looked into North Hall where we as students were domiciled for a time. We went to see the houses in which we had once lived. The city was not so much changed as the people. In the stores were new men behind the counter. New men were in the banks and law offices and the pulpits and editorial sanctums of the city. We were reminded of the observation of the author of the Book of Ecclesiastes: "One generation goeth and another cometh, but the earth abideth forever."

We crossed the Blue Ridge and also the larger mountains further west. We saw many beautiful mountain and valley scenes. We crossed many rivers and caught glimpses of the waters of Lake Erie with ships thereon. We stopped on the way back and saw the Shenandoah Caverns. We had heard much said, but what we saw surpassed our expectations. The wonders of nature in this cavern are indescribable. Some of the scenes under electric lights of different colors were entrancingly beautiful. It costs an admission fee of $1.65 to see this wonder, but we did not regret the cost. Some of our party also inspected the Natural Bridge; others, having seen it before, did not pay the cost (over a dollar) of seeing it again.

Our chauffeur for the trip was Miss Mary Hunter. She drove every inch of the way, exhibiting unusual power of endurance. She is clear-sighted, sees at once what to do, and is quick to turn, to the way of safety. Some of the wayside spectators looked with almost open-mouthed wonder to see one "so young, so tender, and so fair" with her hands on the steering-wheel, controlling the action of the powerful iron horse that raced forward with us over hill and mountain.

The editor's daughter stopped in Pittsburgh and remained there visiting the family of her brother, Leon McCulloch," while the rest of our party made our way to Michigan and back.

On our return trip we passed Gettysburg and Harpers Ferry. We stopped in Gettysburg and saw the famous painting showing the battle of Gettysburg in progress. The battlefield covered 20,000 acres. This painting stretches around the wall of a circular building and represents the entire field as seen from a central point of view. One sees the troops in action, both federal and southern. It is so well painted that it gives much of the effect of the real scene. Wounded horses and wounded men have a very natural appearance. Some are seen lying dead. For the most part what one sees is men in the most vigorous action, rushing upon each other in battle array. It is sad to think now that all these were Americans who ought to have been the best of friends.

In passing Harpers Ferry we thought of and spoke of John Brown's raid for which he was tried and hanged. One of the prisoners taken by John Brown afterward married and lived in Wilmington, N. C., where her daughter married C. E. McCulloch, a brother of the editor of the Herald.

Home again, we greet our readers and wish for every one of them that needs it as restful and pleasant a vacation as we have had.

—In returning from our vacation we met Rev. A. G. Dixon and party, consisting of Mrs. Dixon, her sister, Miss Hughes, and Miss Ratcliffe. They were headed for Gettysburg and we were coming from that place to Frederick. We stopped and exchanged a few words. It was then that we first heard of the death of Rev. D. A. Highfill. We trust Brother and Mrs. Dixon will have a very restful vacation.

—We were pained to learn on coming home that Rev. T. M. Johnson had suffered an attack of illness while preaching at Asheboro and had been compelled to stop work and rest for a time. We trust that his recovery of health and strength will not be delayed.

—Rev. L. W. Gerringer received the degree of Master of Arts at the recent commencement at Western Maryland College. But don't call him Master Gerringer: he might think you were mistaking him for a little boy.

—Adrian College this year conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon Prof. T. C. Miller, of Fairmont, W. Va., and the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Brother Turkelson of West Virginia and Rev. Edward Montgomery, Presbyterian minister in Adrian. There was a graduating class of good size—our impression is 25 or 30. They appeared to be older than the average of college graduates.

—Mrs. Rev. W. F. Kennett with her sister, Mrs. Stafford, and two others made an auto journey to Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Atlantic City, and New York recently. Of course they saw sights and will have a great volume of pictures in their memories.

—Rev. W. F. Kennett went to Bethlehem yesterday to attend the Fields reunion. He is invited to the Hanner-Kirkman reunion next week.

—Miss Pomona Johnson, older daughter of Rev. T. M. Johnson, was recently married to Mr. Amick of Burlington. The day of marriage was her birthday. The ceremony took place in the Gibsonville M. P. Church.

Asheboro Auxilary

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Asheboro Methodist Protestant church met with Mrs. John Swain on Monday afternoon, June 13, 1927.

The president, Mrs. J. S. Lewis, called the meeting to order and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard conducted the devotions.

Miss Esther Ross, program leader for the afternoon, took charge of the meeting and gave a very interesting reading and talk on "The Present Day Jonah" of the missionary cause and church work in general.

Miss Lollie Jones had charge of the question box which proved very interesting. The business part of the meeting followed: Roll call, payment of dues and treasurer's report.

We were dismissed by prayer by Mrs. J. S. Lewis.

MRS. JOHN SWAIN, Corresponding Sec.

THE VOICE DIVINE

The call of the Christ, sometimes we may hear,
Through the voice of a friend who cares;
The Spirit pleads in gentle tones,
In answer to someone's prayers.

Someone's vision may have pierced ahead,
And beheld what our eyes could not see;
Someone's soul may have understood,
The outcome that perhaps would be.

Jesus speaks through earnest lives,
He speaks in answer to prayer;
He speaks through the humble contrite heart,
He speaks to those who care.

We cannot expect His voice to sound,
To us through the gay worldly throng,
We cannot expect His call to come,
From a source that endorses wrong.

Perhaps the call in pleading tones,
May sound commonplace to our ears,
Perhaps we may choose an opposite way,
Assured that there are no fears.

Perhaps, and then as we onward go,
The way that the world has sent,
Perhaps there's joy for a little while,
Then the joyous time's soon spent.

We cannot retrace the way we've gone,
And follow the way we've missed,
We cannot grind the grain, 'tis true,
With water that has ground the grist.

Perhaps the call would have led us on,
To visions and victories great,
Perhaps, perhaps, if we only could,
But perhaps may be too late.

Teach us to know Thy gentle voice,
And to gladly trust Thy word,
Teach us to know the surest way,
By messages of love we've heard.

By REBECCA B. LINER.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Horner

Mrs. Bettie Lenoir Horner, wife of J. A. Horner, was born December 4, 1879. She departed this life June 5, 1927; her age is 47 years, six months and one day.

Mrs. Horner was the daughter of the late H. P. and Eliza Gray Jordan. She was born and reared at the Jordan homestead in Orange county, near Cedar Grove. After reaching young womanhood she was sought and won in marriage by Mr. J. A. Horner, with whom she lived happily until death broke the union. Her marriage occurred on the 24th of December, just after her 25th birthday. The union was blessed with six children, as follows: James Jr., Mrs. W. W. McCulloch, Bessie, Ruth, Marjorie and Hubert. These, with the husband survive. One brother and one sister also survive. They are Mr. J. M. Jordan and Mrs. Nannie Phelps, both of Orange county.

The religious life of Mrs. Horner began in her early years. Her connection with the First M. P. church of Burlington dates from June 1, 1881. Her number on the register is 254. As a Christian she was unpretentious but earnest, and remained faithful to the end. On Saturday evening before her departure early Sunday morning, she assured her pastor that spiritually all was well with her. At that time none of us thought that she was so near the brink of the river, and that the crossing would be so soon. But such is life's brief day.

Her life, though short, was lived to a worthwhile purpose. She was a devoted wife, a loving mother, and a befriending neighbor. And now that she has gone, the sorrow that we feel in giving her up is not the sorrow of those who have no hope. There is every assurance that "Her day has come, not gone;

Her sun has risen, not set;
Her life is now beyond the reach of death and change,
Not ended but begun."

And this is comfort, this is solace, this is ease to our hurt hearts.

The funeral service was held at the home, and was attended by many sympathizing friends and neighbors. The body was laid to rest in Pine Hill cemetery. The flowers that mark her grave there will soon fade, but amid the flowers of eternal beauty her spirit will abide forever. S. W. TAYLOR.

Kernodle

On the morning of June 1st, Brother R. A. C. Kernodle, after an illness of fifteen weeks, passed into the great beyond. He was the son of John and Polly Kernodle, pioneer settlers of Alamance county. The Kernodle homestead was near Elon College; it was there that the deceased was born, and near there, is where most of his earthly life was spent. The date of his birth is July 26, 1848. His age is 78 years, 11 months, and five days.

In his twenty-first year, on the 16 of May, 1869, he was united in marriage to a neighbor girl, Miss Mary Ann Tickle, daughter of Eli and Polly Tickle. For forty-nine years these two walked life's pathway together. On the 29th of March, 1924, the happy union was broken by her passing. Four daughters and seven sons were born to bless this union, three of whom preceded the parents to the spirit world. The surviving children are as follows: John W., Thomas R., Claude C., Grover C., Miss Grace, and Mrs. H. J. Simpson, Mrs. G. M. King, Mrs. R. E. Taylor.

About seven years prior to his death, Brother Kernodle sold his farm near Elon college, and took up his residence in Burlington, where he lived throughout the remainder of his earthly life.

One of the regrets of the deceased was that he did not become a Christian earlier in life. In 1924 he accepted Christ as his personal Saviour, and in October of the same year he united with the First M. P. church, Burlington. His years of Christian service were few, but it should be said that in those few years he was earnest and steadfast. It was his great joy to attend church, and the cottage prayer meetings held in his community. And always he entered most heartily into the prayer that was offered upon the visits of his pastor. During his illness he often expressed himself as being ready for his departure. He seemed to want to make up, as far as he could in these brief years, what he had failed to do in that part of his life which was not given to God. He was concerned for the welfare—spiritually and materially—of his children; his attitude towards his neighbors was one of kindness and hopefulness; and for the cause of Christ, both for himself and for others, he was zealously interested. We give him up with comfort and assurance. In the beyond he has entered, we believe, upon the larger life that awaits all the children of God.

The funeral service was held in the First M. P. church, Burlington, and the body laid to rest under a covering of flowers, by the side of his wife in Elon cemetery.

Our tender sympathies are extended to the family and relatives, and we pray that the circle may be unbroken in the homeland of the soul. S. W. TAYLOR.

Ridge

On Friday, May 27, at five o'clock p.m. our hearts were made sad by the passing of our dear Brother Mr. Lumby Ridge. He had been an invalid for some time and bore his afflictions with patiences. Though it was not my pleasure to know Brother Ridge but a short while. He was converted at an early age and joined Canaan M. P. church and remained a faithful member until death. Brother Ridge was a devoted Christian, a loving husband and father. To mourn their loss are his widow and six children, five boys and one girl.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. B. Trogdon, assisted by the pastor, after which the remains were placed to rest in Canaan cemetery.

May God comfort the bereaved ones.

She leaves husband, father, mother, four sisters and two brothers. We feel that their loss is her gain. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones in their lonely hours. T. A. WILLIAMS.

In Memory of Rev. D. A. Highfill

He was God's true soldier
Pure in mind, heart, and soul,
Pressing onward and upward
Striving to reach his goal.

Comforting those in sorrow,
Pleading with those in sin,
Feeding God's lambs and sheep,
Bidding cowards be men.

Climbing rugged mountains,
Fording their swollen streams,
Ready on life's battle front
Where Satan's armour gleams.

Standing erect and conquering
Ne'er the fight giving o'er,
Until his Captain bid him to Rest and fight never more.

Another Methodist Protestant Book

There came to our desk this morning a neatly bound book entitled Sketches and Reminiscences, Methodist Protestant Church, Fairmont, W. Va. This is one of the outstanding local churches of our denomination and readily lends itself to the task of the local historian. It is not every church that is so rich in material. And few churches have members so well qualified as was the author of these sketches for such a task. Prof. T. C. Miller, LL.D., is the author, and he has succeeded in producing a book of over 200 pages, full of interest from beginning to end, though, of course, the interest will be more intense in the case of those personally related to this church. This great church began in 1829 with seven members. It is one of the oldest and largest churches we have. It has had an unusually interesting history. In the Civil War, it furnished soldiers to both the North and the South. One of its members, Governor Pierpont, is represented by a life-size marble statue in the Capitol at Washington. Dennis B. Dorsey, Sr., one of the founders of the Methodist Protestant Church, spent his last years and was buried at Fairmont. Rev. Leigh Layman, one of our missionaries to Japan, went out from the Fairmont Church. The mind of Professor Miller has seized upon many points of interest in the history of this church or in its relationships to other churches and church workers. We thank him for remembering us in distributing this book. It will bring inspiration to all readers. It is formally "dedicated to the memory of those who have gone before, in the hope that our youth today will emulate the noble Christian character of their church forefathers."

Contracting Jesus' Vision

Jesus gave to men a grand vision, and with it a most inspiring hope. He spoke to men of the kingdom of the heavens, he spoke of the many mansions in the Father's great house, he awakened in us a hope of a translation to a world infinitely more grand and glorious than this. As we grow tired of the earth and its limitations, we can lift up our hearts to the heavens and console ourselves with the prospect of our translation to a realm of perfect liberty. We feel that this world is very good as a place of temporary residence, but we do not like to think of it as our everlasting abode. But the Russellites are coming along and telling us that we are to live forever on the earth. To be sure, they try to reconcile us to this fate by telling us that God will remodel the world and furnish it to our liking and that we will be forever happy here. But we can't think so, and the Russellites with their childish interpretation of scripture cannot make us think so. We cling to the large hopes Jesus has given us in his words about our destiny.

Modernism is the most dishonest of all false religions. The others are at least honest enough to have their own publishing houses, their own schools, and their own churches. But not so Modernism. Modernism by fair speeches and under scientific guise has stolen the churches, the schools, and the publishing houses of the orthodox denominations, so that today those denominations are being ruled and wrecked by a modernistic-political machine.—From "Grace and Truth."

What One Brave Woman Did

It was during the Stephens evangelistic meetings in 1926. People were flocking to the evangelist's tent nightly to hear his stirring messages. His meetings became the talk of the town. Most of the talk was in approval of the evangelist's teachings, but there were some adverse critics. One of these occupied a chair in an institution of learning, a professor's chair. He was so imprudent and so unfair to his position as to attack the Bible which Mr. Stephens honored in his preaching—attack the Bible in the presence of his class. He read from the Bible the command, Thou shalt not kill, then turned to the special command to the Israelites to exterminate one of the tribes that defiled the Promised Land with their abominations. He tried to show his class that there is gross inconsistency between God's teaching and His example, as though God did not have what men do not have—the right to impose death on men. The point he was making was that the Bible is an unreliable book as a teacher of morals.

A Greensboro lady, herself a former student in the same school, heard of this professor's attack upon the Bible, called him by phone and made an engagement to see him. In her talk to him she endeavored to show him the error of his way. Whether she succeeded or not, we venture to say that she succeeded in making him more cautious in his teaching about the Bible. The experience ought also to have shown him that he is poorly prepared to act as critic of such a great book as the Bible is. He reminds us of the stock picture made to represent the foolish man,—a man sawing off the limb he is standing on.

Help Where You Are

There are those who spend time in imagining what great and good things they would do under other conditions;—if they had wealth or high position or commanding eloquence. These advantages are not to be despised, but in the matter of doing good things for the world far more depends on the disposition of heart than upon any circumstances or conditions. If a person will not use what he has in the service of the world, it is hard to believe that he would do so if he had much more. The great thing is to be willing to do well, so willing that you will try with what you have and where you are. The person that does this is likely to find his power enlarging and his position advancing. He is given more talents and larger opportunities because he uses well what he has. But the person who does nothing because he cannot do great things is likely to lose the power he has. His talent will be taken from him and given to the person who has and uses ten talents.

LUTHER TO MELANCTHON

"He who attempts, as you do, to render visible, apparent, comprehensible, the unseen things of God, will have cares and tears as the reward of his labor, as you have. The Lord has announced that He will dwell in clouds, and make darkness His pavillion. Let who will have it otherwise; I shall not. Had Moses made up his mind to solve the problem of escaping Pharaoh's army, Israel might have been in Egypt at this day."—Selected.

THE RURAL CHURCH

In looking over the program for the Pastors' Summer Conference, I see that the rural church will be the general theme of discussion. Brother Stubbins gave us an address along that line at the branch meeting, and called on several, including myself, for a few words on the subject. About all I could say was that if my church was any farther away I would never get there. Out of date it may be, but some of us are still driving little mules—and some are walking.

Consolidation of schools may work all right when transportation is provided for the children, but I fear it will not work so well with our churches. The church and Sunday school are the main thing in a community, even though they are not half doing their duty.

I know a woman who walks two miles and takes her two little children to Sunday school, while hubby stays at home, too lazy to run the car.

I know another one who walks three miles with her brood of six because she has no other way to get there. What would these women and children do if the church was much farther? Would it be the right thing to do to take the Sunday school out of the lives of these children? Consolidation may be the only remedy in some cases but I fear it will only give the preacher a bigger church membership with less traveling instead of benefiting the country people. However, if we judge folks by their actions, goodness knows the majority of country people don't deserve a church, for they don't appreciate it enough to attend and support it.

And the trouble is not poverty as Brother Stubbins seemed to think. Of course we have the poor always with us, but they usually come nearer carrying their part of the load than the man with a bank account. Stinginess is holding the rural church back more than poverty. When a farmer gets hold of a dollar he never wants to turn it loose where he can't keep his eye on it.

And that is the direct result of ignorance and lack of vision. Not half of our people ever see a church paper. They have never seen our college or children's home. They never attend any of the conferences and mingle with our church leaders, and it is hard for them to realize that there is anything beyond the local church. Nor they don't want to believe it, for they know it will take money.

Brother Dixon seemed to think that prying the people loose from the grave yard would be the greatest problem, but if somebody can devise a plan to pry them loose from the dollar, the rural church problem will be solved, and your worries will all be over. What we need most is more church educators, more church love and more church going.

Now put your heads together and bring it to pass. We all know it is not fair for our rural people to share the blessings of the church, and then shirk every duty that makes the church possible. Some of our most able members think they have fulfilled the whole law when they pay the pastor's salary, when that is only the first step, and is really all for self. I have been in a rural church for nearly 40 years and I know full well we are a drag on the conference, but with all our short-comings, do what seems best, but go slowly in taking our little churches from us. I may tax the editor's patience so far that he will throw this article away, but while I am writing I will say a few words in regard to the Young People's Conference.

Go, by all means, for Brother Harrison is a good old soul and will welcome all who are under one hundred years old. Brother Gerringer may come around and insist that you have made a mistake, but tell him that you feel just as young as he looks, and send him about his business. Of course he will only be joking, but we have a little fun as we go along whether we are old or young. In times past the young people have written what it meant to them to go to the Young People's Conference. I am past the half hundred mark and haven't attended for the last two years, so I believe I can say what it means for the old people. Don't go to work unless you really want to, but go for a vacation. I think it is good for us to make a change. I think it especially good for a country woman to go where she will not see a cow nor a chicken (only on the table) for a week, and lie in bed till the breakfast bell rings, and then not to give a thought to where the dinner is coming from.

They feed you well, but if you are as green as I am you may not always know what you are eating. But if it is good, what difference does it make? However, feed for the body is not half what we get. The addresses and lectures are instructive and inspiring, and it is a pleasure to meet and mingle with our ex-pastors and the leaders of our present church, and also the leaders of our future church.

If more of our old people and also more of our young people would attend these conferences, it would help solve the problem of our rural churches.

WATCH YOUR WORDS

"Good talking, which plays a really vital part in daily life, can be learned," declares Grenville Kleiser, well-known American author who writes especially about public speaking and English usage.

The chief rules which should be learned and diligently applied if one would cultivate correct and pleasant speech are listed by him as follows:

1. The first and vital condition of attractive talk is clear and well-ordered thinking. Mentally classify your ideas. Accustom yourself to think logically.

2. Talking should not be a verbal nor vocal contest, but a mutual exchange of ideas. Monologue soon becomes monotonous.

3. Never give unsolicited advice. Advice which costs nothing is usually worth what it costs.

4. Do not let your desires and feelings over-colour your views, nor lead you into exaggerated statement. A flexible attitude of mind is more likely to win an opponent to your way of thinking.

5. Keep your voice low, think before you speak, repress unseasonable allusions, and let common sense hold the reins.

6. Avoid telling unduly long stories or lengthy personal experiences. If you cannot abridge a story, omit it.

7. Do not interrupt another, nor show impatience. Wait quietly for your turn to speak. Resolutely avoid the selfish habit of monopolizing a conversation.

8. Don't make a reputation for being a "funny" man. The habit of telling too many humorous stories is weakening and will put you in the class of lightweights.

9. It is not well to carry an argument to extremes. When you observe that your listener does not wish to be convinced, change the subject.

10. Sedulously avoid controversial debate about religion or politics.

11. Practice self-discipline in your daily talking. Promptly correct in yourself faults such as slovenly articulation, incorrect pronounciation, unduly high pitch, loudness, monotony, inflexibility, over-emphasis, vagueness, verbosity, circumlocation, and wordiness.

12. Be modest in manner and statement. Egotism is always objectionable. Resist the desire to be prominent in talking.

13. Talk deliberately, not in spasms. Pauses and rests are as necessary in speech as in music. Give the other man a chance to express his ideas.

14. Don't talk to the limit of what you know on a given subject. What is left unsaid is sometimes as eloquent as what is said.

15. Avoid gossip and censoriousness.
16. Talk at your best in the most ordinary circumstances.
17. As a general rule the use of slang should be discouraged. It is usually a subterfuge of the slothful.
18. Good talk implies a judicious choice of words.
19. Know how to stop talking at the opportune time. It is reprehensible to detain anyone unduly because you have more to say.

The use of the voice in talking is of prime importance. A good speaking voice can be cultivated by daily attention to your articulation, modulation and general expression.

Favour the low keys of the voice and speak in quiet tones. Many a good voice has been ruined by the habit of continuous and loud talking on the street or elsewhere amid noise and confusion. Eagerness and loudness should be repressed, and clearness and vivacity encouraged in your speaking.

Develop in the voice such cardinal qualities as purity, resonance, depth, brilliancy, flexibility, and adequate power. One of the best means of doing this is to read aloud daily from a standard author, and to give earnest attention to the cultivation of these desirable qualities.

EDUCATE IN YOUR CHURCH SCHOOLS

It is not our purpose in this article to discuss State or Church schools, but we have recently read an article written by Dr. Truitt and published in, "Watchman's Examiner," and we pass it on that others, especially Methodist Protestant parents in North Carolina, may also read it.

"The lesson is written as plainly as if it were written across the skies in letters of fire that our leadership in America in all realms comes mainly from our Christian schools. The record of leadership furnished by these schools is to the last degree revelatory and challenging. Ponder these striking figures: Eight of our country's chief justices were college graduates, while seven of the eight were from Christian schools. Eighteen of our Presidents were college graduates, and sixteen of the eighteen were from Christian colleges. Eighteen of the twenty Masters of American letters were college men, while seventeen of the eighteen were from Christian colleges. Of the members of our national congress, whose efforts or prominence have secured them a place in, "Who's Who," two-thirds of them were graduates of Christian colleges. Keep on looking into this deeply significant matter and you will find that members of small Christian colleges in our country have furnished many times the number of leaders furnished by our state and privately controlled institutions. These facts stand out as one of the most revealing and challenging facts in all the world today."

In this article there is real food for thought for all who have children to educate. If the denominational colleges of this country surpass our state schools in developing leadership, why do Christian parents send their children to these schools when their own church school needs their support? I say, why? In our church schools there is a wholesome, religious atmosphere conductive to the development of the very best there is in a boy or a girl. The Atheistic clubs that have been organized in some of our State schools do not help in the development of real manhood and real womanhood. We read that twenty colleges in the U. S. have had these clubs organized within the last 18 months. This hellish propaganda of trying to capture the youths of this country and make them Atheistic—haters of the Bible and true religion—ought to be stopped. Why should we allow the Bolshevists to come into our country in disguise and begin work that later may tear us asunder as China has been torn? What has become of our freedom when we are forced to pay taxes to support teachers who make light of the Bible?

If one drop of water were taken from the ocean there would not be as much left as there was before this small amount was taken. The ocean is made of little drops of water. Our part may be small in the building of our church college, but if it be withdrawn and our children attend another school, then the college is weakened to that extent.

WHY WETS WANT THE PRESIDENCY

Superintendent R. P. Hutton, of the Rhode Island Anti-Saloon League, in the following quotation from his annual report to the board of trustees of the Anti-Saloon League, clearly states why the wets are anxious to elect to the presidency a man who is out of sympathy with the prohibition law. It is well to bear these facts in mind, especially since it has already been stated by some friends of tentative wet candidates that it really doesn't make much difference what the attitude of the President is on prohibition enforcement so long as Congress remains dry.

Why the President?

Why do wets stake everything upon the President? The president appoints the members of the U. S. Supreme Court. Our last President appointed a majority of the present Court. The President might by appointment change the Supreme Court, which has been the foundation rock of prohibition. He appoints the Circuit and District Judges throughout the United States, and, if a local court acquits a prisoner, law enforcement has no appeal. He appoints the Attorney General and all District Attorneys who prosecute, and the marshals who arrest. The secret service men who detect are under his control through the Attorney General. He names the Secretary of the Treasury, the Prohibition Director, the heads of the Prohibition Department, the Customs and the Coast Guard who detect and raid and seize and interfere to prevent violations of the law, and grant or refuse permits to handle alcohol. He appoints the Secretary of State, our envoys, ministers and consuls to other countries who negotiate or fail to negotiate agreements for the prevention of liquor smuggling. Because a wet in the White House, single-handed, could by his appointments utterly nullify the constitutional expression of the collective will of the entire nation; and, having already done so for a tenth of the nation through the repeal of the New York State enforcement code, they believe they can depend upon Al Smith to do the same for the rest of the nation, if they can but place him where he will have such power.—The American Issue.

A PRAYER

O Thou who seest the sparrow fall,
O Thou who hear'st the raven call,
Can we not trust Thy watchful care,
Thy power to hear and answer prayer?

Then choose for us, O Lord, the way
That leads at last to endless day;
The good or ill that all must share,
Give us the grace alike to bear.

For love omnipotent hath sent
The seeming ill, or glad content;
So calmly trusting may we rest,
Knowing Thou sendest what is best.

We thank Thee for Thy ceaseless care,
That guides and keep us everywhere,
For love that sees beyond the years,
That guards our path and stills our fears.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

India

The earnestness, zeal and willingness to do for the Master, on the part of the men in India, is shown by the fact that "the second week in January a meeting of all the men in the Dhulia Christian community was called to discuss some special religious work to be done in and about Dhulia. The masters, fieldmen, and the big boys approved of some kind of Biblical instruction, such as Bible stories or simple talks on the Bible. A superintendent was elected to supervise the whole work and to make suggestions concerning places of holding such meetings and the kind of work that should be done." He, with Rev. Mr. Minnis, formed seven circles or centers where it was thought convenient for the work to be done. Forty men and boys were asked to help in the work. Every Sunday morning these seven places are visited and a complete record kept. Besides these places of work for and among the men and boys there are, including the mission school for boys, eight Sunday schools with fifty teachers and about five hundred and fifty pupils. When it is remembered that this work among men has been so recently taken up such a record is most encouraging.

On the sixteenth of January last, for the first time in the history of the Mission, English services were established. These services were in charge of the President of the Mission, Rev. J. F. Minnis, until the second Sunday in March. Since the establishment of these services they have been held each Sunday morning at ten o'clock. All the missionaries and any others who know English are invited to attend.

Another advanced step taken in the work, which both brings encouragement and reveals the influence that our missionaries are wielding and the gospel is making upon the lives of the natives, is the full payment of the salary of the school pastor of the Boys' School by the teachers and fieldmen. This is unprecedented in any department of our work in India.

Evangelism

The work in evangelism is most encouraging. Rev. Paul M. Cassen is in charge of the evangelistic work for men. He has given much time and consecrated devotion to this all-important work.

On November 2, 1926, the annual missionary evangelistic tour was begun. The evangelistic party consisted of four native preachers, one young man expecting to be a preacher, the cook woman, who cooks for the preachers, Mr. J. T. Uparde, better known as Joseph, to look after the horses and to drive the tonga, Rev. and Mrs. Cassen, the Ford car, furnished by friends and relatives of the Towson Church, Maryland, and a bullock cart to carry the baggage. Like the Apostle Paul they went from place to place, visiting the churches, holding meeting, and endeavoring to organize new churches. The tour lasted from November 2, 1926 until March 9, 1927. During this time they held eight evangelistic meetings in as many different places. Says Rev. Cassen: "We started out in the morning about 7 a.m. and would usually return about noon time. Then at night we would leave about 7 p.m. and return at 10:30 or 11:00. Saturday morning and Sunday evenings were designated as times when we were to remain at home and rest. But our night work received a bad set back. While we were at Arvi one of the lenses of the magic lantern cracked, and that made the pictures defective. Then, too, another part of the lantern broke, so it was necessary for us to suspend the night work. We would probably have had a much finer report to make if the machine had not gone back on us. I hope to have it repaired before next year, and also to get some new pictures, because we have shown the pictures in some places as often as three times. There are some very good slides which may be bought from the Y. M. C. A. in India but the price is rather high—about $10 per dozen. We need at least two or three dozen new slides and any contributions from interested parties would be very acceptable. While in the district we stayed in the Government bungalows where they were available, but at Vani and Laling we lived in the Mission tents. Tent life has its good and it bad sides. Personally, I prefer the bungalows, because they afford more protection from the sun, hot winds, dust, insects, scorpions, snakes and prying eyes of an ever curious populace."

I have let Rev. Mr. Cassen speak to us in his own words so that we might have, first hand, some of the experiences of our missionaries and what it means to "carry on" there.

Now I am wondering if there are not three or six persons, some where, in our home land, who are sufficiently interested to send me $10 or $5, respectively, so that I may send the $30 to Rev. Mr. Cassen with which he may purchase the three dozen new slides for his evangelistic tour next year. Who will be the first?

That Children's Day Offering

By the time this article appears most of our Sunday schools will have held their Children's Day services. I trust that they have been the best ever and that the offerings will be pleasing to the Master. Now please send the offering, post haste, to the Treasurer of your Conference that he may send it in turn to the Treasurer of the General Conference.

This Offering Is Needed Now

If you have not yet held your services I hope they will be your best and your offerings the largest. The orders are still coming in. 957 orders received up to June 16. Some of these were double orders. We are approaching the 1,000 mark. It is not too late to order. ORDER TODAY.

HOME MISSIONS

A Visit to the Middle West

Following the directions of the Board of Home Missions given at the annual meeting in May, I have recently visited several cities of the middle west, in which are located churches which the Board is aiding.

The first place was Chicago where I was requested to study the field and report back to the Board at its next meeting. We now have four churches in Chicago, Avalon Park, Wakeford, Southfields and Chatham. There are also two lots donated on one of which there is a portable building in which regular services are being held.

Our churches are all located in South Chicago, a fine residence section of the city. The Federation of churches assigns a certain locality to a denomination and, as far as it can, prevents other denominations from entering that field. This furnishes a fine opportunity of establishing our church in that great city. During the period I have been in my present office I have been in many cities of our country, and give it as my opinion, that no where have we a greater opportunity than in Chicago. While we do not have many original Methodist Protestants to start with, there is a strong tendency of the people to support the church in the local community. After becoming identified with the local church they gradually become interested in the denomination through the missionary and other denominational activities.

I was first at Avalon Park Church Sunday morning, June 5. There were 368 in the Sunday school, with an offering of $23.74. This was less than usual. The monthly average had previously been 404. We had a fine congregation at the hour of public worship. The church membership numbers 400. Dr. F. L. Church is the present pastor. He is preaching to large congregations and is receiving new members almost every Sabbath.

A largely attended meeting of the church officials was held in the afternoon when matters concerning the local interests of the church were considered, and also the relation of the church to the denomination. I am gratified to report that a fine spirit was manifested, and it gives me pleasure to express my confidence in the future of this organization. There has recently been built a three story Sunday school addition which, according to the statement given me, cost $57,300. The entire property valuation including parsonage and ground is approximately $100,000. As proof of the community interest in the church, a campaign was put on for the new building and pledges were secured for $44,000, running through a period of time. These pledges are being paid with a fair degree of promptness.

My appointment at night was at Chatham Church, Dr. C. O. Harvey pastor. Dr. Harvey has been associated with our Chicago work for a number of years and has had much to do with the location and organization of all the churches. The Chatham church is his last effort except where the portable building stands. At Chatham the first unit of the church has been built. This is a basement 65 by 115 feet and cost including the ground $38,000. There is a mortgage on the property of $25,000. This church also has pledges from the local community of $20,000.

The church has a membership of 80 with a Sunday school of 300, and an average attendance of 175. The entire community is developing very rapidly with a fine class of homes and while it will require time and perhaps sacrifice on the part of some, there is no reason why this should not become a strong church, taking its place with our other churches in meeting the requirements for the moral and religious welfare of this great city.

While at Chatham I had the pleasure of meeting with the Board of Managers of the Church Extension Society of the Illinois Conference, at which time matters relating directly to the progress of our denomination were considered at length, and some definite steps were taken which I trust mean much in the development of the work. Dr. Harvey, who has been the pastor of Chatham church since its beginning, wishes to be released that he may give his full time to the latest development where the chapel has been erected.

Further comments on my itinerary will be given in other letter. J. M. Sheridan.

COME ON! LET'S GO!

On the 16th I mailed 225 letters to as many Sunday school superintendents asking them to help raise the money to get all of our pastors to the Pastors' Conference. So far one has responded, but he sent me the cheering news that Halifax is seeing to it that their pastor goes. Good for Halifax! Up where I came from to be told to "go to Halifax" was equivalent to being told to go somewhere that isn't mentioned in polite society. But if the Annual Conference should tell me to go to Halifax, I should feel that I was being sent to one of the best charges in the conference. But I am jealous for the rest of the charges. I don't want Halifax to be the only one with a generous heart.

So, good folks, if your Sunday school superintendents fails to say anything next Sunday about sending your pastor, you get up and start something. Come on! Let's go!

It will cost $10.00 for the week, or $1.50 a day, plus whatever it may cost to get the preacher to High Point and back. But it will be worth more than that to the charge. Try it and see. C. W. Bates.

THE POWER OF SILENCE

Grenville Kleiser, the American author, advocates an Anti-Noise Week as the best antidote to present day unrest and nerve tension. Speaking of how silence gives rest and power he says:

Great is the power of silence. There is nothing more eloquent than the still small voice of conscience. Think of the silent growth of the giant forest. The world upon which you now stand is whirling silently through space. The greatest forces of nature are silent. How wonderful is the silent power of truth, constantly at work, without effort, sound or confusion. Only man is wasteful, prodigally squandering words, speech and energy. Silence will help you to solve the most difficult personal problems. Silence is golden. Silence will give you rest from inordinate ambition and desire. Silence will promote quietness of spirit. The more you cultivate a spirit of inward silence, the better you will have communion with God.

Millions of words are squandered in useless daily talk. The loss of time and vital energy from this source alone is incalculable. Add to this the incessant noise, especially in our large cities, and the need of some counteracting influence is obvious.

An Anti-Noise Week has been suggested by Grenville Kleiser by means of letters addressed to Mayors and Editors in large cities asking for practical cooperation in the movement.

An Anti-Noise Week observed once a year, will mean to the community an economic gain in thought, feeling, energy, health and self-discipline. The elimination of unnecessary noise does not imply dead silence nor inertia, but increased poise and power with which to do more efficient work. An Anti-noise crusade is one of the greatest needs of our time.

THE OLD PATHS

"Ask for the Old Paths." The phrase meant the old paths of faith in which the fathers of Israel had walked for thirteen hundred years—the paths of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; the paths in which the rule of life was the decalogue and the rule of worship was that elaborate, typical sacrificial system of which the essence was faith in a coming Redeemer. One chief medicine for the spiritual disease of the twentieth century is a bold, unhesitating inquiry for the old paths, old doctrines, and the faith of the days that are past. Error, no doubt, is often very ancient; yet truth is always old. This age wants nothing new. What it wants is plain, distinct, unflinching teaching about the old paths. There has never been any spread of the Gospel, any conversions of nations or countries, any successful evangelistic work except by the old-fashioned distinct doctrines of the early Christians and the reformers. "And ye shall find rest to your souls." Rest such as this the Lord Jesus gives to those who come to Him in the old paths, by showing them His own finished work on the cross, by clothing them in His own perfect righteousness and washing them in His own precious blood.—Bishop Ryle.

ONLY LOST HIS LIFE

Dr. J. Campbell White tells the story of a rich man who was murdered a couple of years ago. The motive was robbery. The murderer supposed that just at that time the rich man had a large amount of money in his personal possession. A daily paper describing the case said: "Fortunately for the deceased, he had deposited the money the day before." All he lost was his life! And that is what many men are losing because they are absorbed in selfish quests and follow no high vision.—Christian Intelligencer.

OUR STORY PAGE

I WANT TO BE HAPPY

Bobby Burns' ideal was one, or both, of the Katzenjammer kids, but somehow when he tried to play jokes on people, they did not turn out so successfully as the funny-paper boys' jokes. Besides, Bobby really minded getting spanked. The Katzenjammers didn't really mind because they aren't real boys. They could tie old gentlemen to donkeys and pour glue in people's ears and all that, without having anything to worry about. Bobby never tried any of these tricks. Something told him it wouldn't pay.

Still he enjoyed a little joke, and he decided that St. Valentine's Day was a good one to play jokes on.

"I'll fool everybody except Mother," he said.

You see, Mother was the kind of mother who understands a fellow and can almost read his mind. She was jolly, too, but not one to play jokes on.

For a week before the Saint's day, Bobby was very busy and his two older sisters remarked: "Bobby is getting ready to spring a Katzenjammer joke!" So they warned Dad and Emma, the cook.

One of the worse things for Bobby was the fact that he was almost the only boy in his school. He and his sisters went to a little private school kept by two nice ladies who were friends of Mother's. Bobby passed the big public school on his way, every day, and my! how he longed to be in the big yard with the other fellows!

"Maybe if I sent ugly valentines to Miss May and Miss Susie, they'll fire me out of school," he said.

He was talented in one way. He could draw the meanest pictures you ever did see! So he was getting ready for St. Valentine's Day, making cross-eyed, pigeon-toed, scowling pictures for his friends and family. But for his mother he spent a whole quarter and bought a red heart-shaped candy box. Then he spent ten cents for nice red and white candy to go inside, then he drew a pretty card to go with it. For Dad he made a nice card although it was funny, too. He drew a heart with arms and legs dancing. He wrote a poem to go with it:

"If you'll be mine,
Dad Valentine,
My heart will dance
And dance and dance."

He was careful to hide all his cards, because sometimes sisters snoop. But he did not hide them well enough.

Ellen and Helen, his sisters, found the cards and were very much shocked to see the dreadful pictures their brother had drawn.

"It's a disgrace to the family," said Ellen.

"Let's tell on him!" said Helen.

"No, Ellen said, "that wouldn't be nice. Let's think up something else."

And they did think of something else!

On St. Valentine's Day Bob was full of wicked glee. First he gave Mother her pretty candy box and got a kiss and such a loving look from her soft brown eyes! Then he gave his sisters the two dreadful ones he had made for them. Of course, they only laughed and gave him a dreadful one made out of pictures cut from the Funnies. Dad enjoyed his.

Then Bob went out to scatter his greetings. There was the little girl next door, whom he was really fond of, but he did love to tease her. He shoved his valentine under the front door, rang the bell and hid while he watched, hoping to see her open it. It was an awful one. A real cross-eyed ugly picture with the words "You're fat!" on it.

The little girl came running out and got her valentine. Bob saw her open it.

"Oh!" she cried. "Oh, Mommer! Look! From Bobby Burns! The loveliest Valentine you ever did see!"

Bob could hardly believe his ears, but there was the little girl jumping up and down with delight!

"Maybe she doesn't know anything about Art, and maybe she likes to be fat," thought the puzzled Bob.

He slipped away and met his friend Joe on the street.

"Hey," he said. "I got a Valentine for you."

He thrust it into Joe's hand, and then ran and climbed a fence ready to dodge away as soon as Joe should start for him.

Joe took the envelop suspiciously and opened it cautiously. Bob saw him take out the card and read it a long time. Then he put it in his pocket.

"Thank you, Bob," he said, real bashfully. "I'll give you a card later."

Bob sat on the fence wondering what was the matter with Joe. He had made a very ugly card for him, teasing him about a little girl in their Sunday School.

"Maybe Joe thinks I tried to please him," thought Bob sadly.

But there was Miss May and there was Miss Susie, his teachers. He knew they would be mad at their valentines. Bob hastened to school. Miss May and Miss Susie had lots and lots of valentines. They took Bob's and when they opened them, they gave little cries of joy and both of them kissed him.

"You darling!" cried Miss May. "You are a sweet, good boy!"

"Thank you, dear, for your lovely message!" cried Miss Susie.

Now, Bob had drawn dreadful pictures of the ladies and written a nasty poem too.

"Old maids you are,
Tra-la! Tra-la!
Glad you're not mine
This Valentine."

Bob had cold shivers when he gave the valentines to the ladies, and when he saw them opening them he felt like jumping out of the window. But here they were smiling and kissing him. He wondered what was the matter with them.

"Maybe they like to be called old maids," he thought. "Aunt Grace is one and she likes it. Maybe my pictures are really pretty."

Poor Bob was getting all mixed up! He had valentines for most everybody, and everybody was pleased and glad.

"Well," he told himself at last, "it is kind of nice having people happy. Guess that song about 'I want to be happy, and I can't be happy, till I make you happy, too,' is true."

Ellen and Helen were surprised to see how joyful their brother was.

"He doesn't know his joke is spoiled," said Ellen to Helen.

The cook had made some lovely cake for supper.

"Ah done bake it fo' Bobby," she smiled. "He done give me such a boofiful valumtime Ah had to do something fo' him. He mah little honey!"

Bobby, remembering the ugly black face he had drawn for Emma, wondered why she was so pleased with it.

Well, the mystery was soon to be solved. When he went up to his room that night he found an envelope with his name on it, lying on his pillow. He opened it and inside were all the ugly Valentines he had made. There was one pretty card, all lace and red hearts and Bobby read:

"St. Valentine by magic arts
Can change an ugly Valentine,
And so he cheers up human hearts
And fills his Day with love divine."

"Of course, it was Mother," thought Bobby. "I'm glad she did it! I see now how to be happy."

He took the ugly Valentines and rushed downstairs to his mother who sat by the open fire.

She took the envelope wonderingly, because she did not know anything about the trick Ellen and Helen had played on their brother by putting beautiful valentines into his envelopes instead of the ugly ones he had made.

"Burn 'em!" said Bob, giving his mother a kiss on the ear.

Then he rushed upstairs.

His mother was starting to open the envelope, when Ellen caught her hand and coaxed her to throw it into the fire without opening it.

"It's just a mistake," she explained.

Upstairs they could hear Bob getting ready for bed singing, "I want to be happy," but they could not read his thoughts. He was deciding to keep on shedding Joy and be "happy, to-o-o!"—Selected.

TWO VERY YOUNG SAMARITANS

It was Saturday morning in January. The sun came up beaming and found the world looking very different from the way it had looked when he went down. Snow had fallen in the night, and now the brown fields, the bare trees, the gray roofs, even the fences and gateposts were beautiful under their covering of glistening snow.

"Isn't it grand that the first snow we've had this winter came on Saturday!" cried Patsy.

Mother agreed that it was extra good luck.

"I'll wake Mike!" decided Patsy. She ran outside and scooped up a handful of snow and ran up and threw it in her brother's face.

"Hey!" he shouted. He sat up in bed and looked out the window. A broad grin spread over his face. "Just wait!" he said. "I'll pay you back, you little savage!"

Patsy ran downstairs, laughing. She pulled on her sweater and cap and went out to the barn. "I'll give Big Boy some extra corn this morning," she said. "He can't eat hay when the stack is covered with snow." She threw a dozen ears of corn into the feed trough. The pony gave her a welcoming whinney. He crunched his corn and gazed at her fondly.

A bird was hopping around rather forlornly in the barnyard as Patsy started back to the house. "Poor little fellow," said Patsy, "you don't like snow as much as I do, do you? I guess I wouldn't think it was fun either, if it covered up my breakfast! But you just wait, I'll give you something to eat!" she promised.

Breakfast was ready in the kitchen when Patsy got back. She sniffed hungrily at the fresh sausage and buckwheat cakes with maple sirup. It was very jolly, Patsy thought, eating breakfast in the kitchen, with the rows of yellow crocks and shining pans, and Boots, the Maltese cat, asleep under the table.

But all at once she felt an icy lump go down her back, and she wheeled around and saw Mike running out of the door. She flew after him, out into the yard, and then the battle began! They pounded each other with snowballs for half an hour. Then they decided to call a truce and make a snow man.

The snow man was a great success. His snaggled-tooth grin was very life-like. His black button eyes seemed to sparkle with fun and mischief. Mother and daddy came out to admire him.

"Do you know," said mother, "he reminds me of Uncle Dick."

"Why, he does!" exclaimed Patsy. "Only he's white, instead of black!"

"Uncle Dick always is smiling like that, you know," said Mike.

"Poor old fellow, I'm afraid he isn't smiling much today," said daddy. "I saw him yesterday, as I passed, out gathering up dead limbs for stove wood."

"We get lots of fun out of snow," said Patsy thoughtfully, "but they don't. It's as hard on them as it is on the birds. And I fed the birds. Mother, let's fix a basket of food for them."

"All right, we will," said mother. "There's plenty of fresh baked bread and sausage and the new sorghum, and of course the potatoes are plentiful."

"You might hitch Big Boy to the spring wagon and take them some wood as you go," said daddy.

"Oh, let's!" said Patsy. "We can pretend we're the Good Samaritan, Mike!"

They drove up the steep hill, past the cedar thicket, past the water mill, past the big pond and came at last to the little battered cabin where the old darkies lived. Aunt Jenny opened the door. And when she saw the children and Big Boy and the wood and the big basket of food she said: "Now de Lord bless my chillun! Dey love dey snow and dey ice, but dey don' never fergit de folks as is too ole to enjoy hit lak dey do!"—Christian Observer.

A CHILD LED THE WAY

Many a child after he has been saved, will say: "How can I help people to get saved? I am too little or too young." Read the following extract from an Army publication:

"At one of our corps, in one of the European countries, it had for a long time been very hard to get souls saved. The officers and soldiers prayed earnestly for a revival in the place. One day they held a senior meeting at an outpost and a few children were also present. It had been a good meeting, but it seemed as if no one would come out for salvation. Suddenly a little girl stood up from her seat and went forward to the penitent-form, crying: 'Please pray for me, I am such a big sinner.'

"The little soul was really in agony over her sin, and wept as if her heart would break. A solemn, mighty spirit took hold of the little congregation, as they beheld this little child in deep concern about her soul. What the Captain's address, the soldiers' testimonies, songs and prayer could not do, the little child's cry for mercy did. The ice melted, chains were broken, heart-doors opened and soon twenty penitents knelt at the Saviour's feet, among them the little girl's grown-up brother. A revival broke out both among juniors and seniors, and great and blessed work was done for God."—Selected.

THE ALTERNATIVE IMPOSSIBLE

If Christ did not actually rise this belief was a delusion. And it is the most astounding delusion that ever darkened the erring mind of man. For not only did it enable its early votaries to set at naught hardship and peril and death, but in all succeeding ages it has held captive many of the most intelligent and cultured men, and now for many centuries nearly all of the best men. Unquestionably it occupies a position without parallel among the delusions of mankind.

That delusion has saved the world. For, had not the early preachers of the Gospel been deluded about the historic fact of the resurrection of Christ they would never have preached, there would have been no Christian churches and no Christianity, the one influence which has saved the world from ruin would not have existed, and the world would have perished.

If this be so, we owe to delusion and error a debt greater than we can conceive.—By Dr. Edgar Beet, of England.

Address matter for immediate publication in this department to Miss Mary C. McCulloch, 1705 Asheboro Street, Greensboro, N. C.

TO AUXILIARIES OF THE N. C. BRANCH OF THE W. H. M. S.

Dear Auxiliary Presidents:

Students are making their applications at High Point College for the 1927-28 term. So far I have promised a loan of $100.00 to one applicant who cannot attend college without aid, and would like to be able to take care of others as fast as they apply to me for help from the W. H. M. S. Scholarship Loan Fund. As you know we made loans to seven students.

So far as I know no money has been received by the State Treasurer for this fund since Branch meeting, and only one student has been able to repay a loan of $100.00 since Branch meeting. We had $500 pledged for this fund when college opened last fall and we hope to be able to help as many students for the coming year as we did last.

Please present this matter to your auxiliaries and let me know as soon as possible what I may "count on you" for, in the way of Scholarship Loan Funds.

Yours sincerely,
MRS. R. M. ANDREW,
Secretary Scholarship Loan Fund.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

The Executive Committees of Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies will meet on Wednesday, July 6, at Mrs. Bates' cottage at Weaverville, N. C.

Mrs. Bates is anxious to have a large crowd, and Mr. Casto wishes to have the people visit Bethel Home and this meeting will give our ladies an opportunity to enjoy the privilege. The Weaverville people are going to join with Mrs. Bates in entertaining the party.

This is an important meeting as reports from both board meetings will be given and plans for the year's work will be made.

Both morning and afternoon of Wednesday will be given to the committees' meetings, and any who wish to do so may return home Thursday, but some plans have been made for any who can stay through Thursday to spend the time profitably.

There will probably be cars going from High Point and Greensboro that could accommodate a few passengers, but the train leaves Greensboro at 12:55 and arrives at Asheville at 8:20; and bus connections are good to Weaverville.

Please let Mrs. Bates know whether you are coming, and also notify Mrs. W. C. Hammer, of Asheboro.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE ITEMS

New Books Received

Recently we have received gifts of books from Mrs. C. A. Cecil, Rev. N. G. Bethea, and some one presented quite a number of religious books which belonged to Rev. J. W. Heath, for the college library. The last were left here without my knowledge and I am sorry we do not know who sent them in. We are very grateful to these donors for the books and will greatly appreciate the gift of any good book that you may have read and cease to have use for in your home.

Registrations

Registration for the fall semester is going merrily on. In fact, we have registered more students to date than we had up to the first of August last year. As it now appears our dormitories will be full.

A Comparison of Costs

Recently I had a financial statement from one of our state colleges which gives a total cost per student for instruction as being $293.00 for the year and for administration $59.00 per student, making a total of $352.00 per student. When it is considered that the tuition is only $100.00 it is easily to be seen that a college like this one cannot operate without a large endowment fund or an equal fund provided by the state, which in the latter case it was. Now this amount does not include the money put into new buildings or into new equipment—simply what it costs to pay the instructors and the officers of the college.

It might be interesting to observe that last year High Point College spent $159.00 per student for instruction and $24.00 per student for administration, making a total of $183.00 per student for the year. We received from each student the tuition of $100.00, so you can see it is necessary for High Point College to have an endowment fund or a fund that takes care of this deficit in operating expenses. The showing, however, when compared with the above college, is not so bad.

Some News of the Faculty

Miss Young, Miss Williams and Miss Idol will spend part of their summer vacation at Columbia University. Miss Idol and Miss Williams are expecting to get their Master's Degree this summer. Prof. Hinshaw, the new head of the department of Education at High Point College, is one of the teachers at the N. C. C. W. Summer School this summer; having recently come from Columbia University where he did a year of graduate work. Prof. Lindley is spending his summer at home, being the acting pastor at the First M. P. Church, High Point. Profs. Hardy, McCanless, Smith, Kennett are spending their vacation at home. Prof. Mourane is doing graduate work at the University of N. C. and Prof. Allred is teaching in the High Point High School summer school. Miss McIntire is studying with the Crosby Adams at Montreat, and Prof. Yarborough is doing graduate work at the University of South Carolina. Mrs. Whitaker is with her daughter, Mrs. White, of Greensboro.

Summer Conference

We are beginning to think of the summer conference which is to meet here July 18th. Preparations for the coming of our Young People are now being made and we shall be greatly disappointed if we do not have a capacity registration. And since both pastors and young people will be here at the same time, it ought to be a most enjoyable occasion and we trust will be most successful.

R. M. ANDREWS, President.

REV. D. A. BRASWELL IMPROVING

This writer stopped in Charlotte last Saturday en route to Shelby and spent a short while with Rev. D. A. Braswell at the Charlotte Sanitorium. He is in room 322 and had been there 23 days. He was subjected to three operations about six days after entering the institution. The operations were of a very serious nature and Brother Braswell attributed his survival of the surgeon's knife to the power of God. He seems to be improving slowly and talked amid tears. He has given up his pastoral duties for awhile, and the church is endeavoring to get another minister to serve them during their pastor's afflictions. Brother Braswell was to get out of the bed Saturday and rest in a chair for the first time since the operations.

For more than a week following the operations no visitors were allowed to see Brother Braswell owing to the seriousness of his case. Now he is able to receive visitors and will be glad to see any of our pastors and others. He needs the prayers, the encouragement and the help of our church people. Any financial help will be greatly appreciated by Brother Braswell, who has given his entire life to the work of the ministry in the Methodist Protestant Church. His hospital expenses are very great and must be met promptly. Those who wish to send him letters or checks may address him thus: Room 322, Charlotte Sanitorium, Charlotte, N. C. All pastors and others who are near enough and those who chance to pass through Charlotte, call at the Sanitorium and see Brother Braswell. The Sanitorium is in the third block from the center of town on North Church street.

He will be in the Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma summer conferences and will then go to Cooper, Texas, to conduct an evangelistic meeting of two or three weeks' duration. This is to be a union meeting of several denominations, including our own.

REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN FOR YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE

The line advances from 186 to 431, almost a third of the way. Can't we make it go over the half-way mark by next week? COME ON, AGENTS!

There are only four more publications of the Herald before the Young People's Conference convenes. We need two hundred and fifty new registrations for each of these issues to reach the goal. We must not stop until we have reach the fifteen hundred mark. Let us hope there will not be a church or an agent left off the list when the final report is made.

Albemarle heads the list this time. It will be recalled that for a couple years, if I am not mistaken, she has won in the campaign. FINE WORK, RUTH GREEN, but let me say Albemarle will not win with sixty-nine this year. You had better move up a peg next week.

Burlington appears this week with forty-nine and says that this is just a starter. Charlotte and Asheboro, with thirty-two and twenty-eight respectively, are likewise in the new list. The agents of these two churches are not slow when they get started. Joe Ross and Miss Nellie Dellinger are on their toes, we will hear more from them later.

Though now holding second place West End, Greensboro, is not snowed under. Gladys Routh usually closes her letter with: 'more to follow," or some such expression. West End will not be far from the top when the campaign closes. Indeed she might be at the top.

The campaign is just getting started. Thirty-nine churches have responded thus far. We are expecting many times that many before the campaign closes. Let's get in the race early folks; it's a lot more fun.

REGISTRATION AGENTS, please designate in your reports which names are children and which adults; also which are the Sunday school superintendents. Let me have the registrations as soon as you secure them, so that we can keep the list growing. Don't wait until you get everybody in the church, send them each week. Thank youu.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Pilot Church.—Brother Hunter did not come to preach for us last Sunday afternoon, it being home coming day at Mt. Zion. We are having right much sickness in our community and quite a lot of whooping cough. Since our last report my dear mother (Mrs. J. F. Whitaker) has been called away. She had been in failing health for a long time, but all that physicians could do for her could not stay the hand of death and on the morning of June 6th she passed away. No tongue can tell what she suffered during her sickness, but she never murmured or worried about her condition. She often remarked that "her sickness was not worrying her one bit," and we haven't a shadow of a doubt but that she is at rest. Mama was always very quiet, never had much to say about anything but her appearance when one of her children would enter her room just made us feel the love we knew she had for us. It is awfully lonely without her and especially for her companion. But we have that sweet assurance that she is not suffering now. She was laid to rest Tuesday, June 7th, beside her youngest child (Mrs. Ray Chandler), who died little more than a year ago.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

MRS. P. L. ASHBURN, Reporter.

Siler City.—The following is a list of those registering for the Summer Conference:

Mr. Orn Picket, Mr. J. E. Fox, Miss Minda Ball, Miss Clatie Andrew, Miss Sallie Smith, Mr. O. E. Stone, Mrs. O. E. Stone, Mrs. L. L. Woody, Mr. L. L. Wrenn, Miss Minnie Cooper, Mr. Marvin Phillips, Mr. Clarance Brady, Miss Pearlie Moore.

Yours truly,

MISS LEBUS STONE.

MISS PEARLIE MOORE.

Palestine, Flat Rock Circuit.—Our work is moving on very well.

Our pastor preached a good and impressive sermon third Sunday that every one enjoyed.

Sunday school going on. Attendance good. Children are very busy learning their pieces for the circuit rally, first Sunday at Gideon's Grove church.

Our church has been dressed up with a new coat of paint since my last report. And Uncle John Landreth has bought a bell and it's at the church to be put up. This will be a memorial to Uncle John, long after he has crossed over.

Mrs. Betty Tucker continues about the same.

Mrs. Haily Ann Tucker and Aunt Betty Sharron are both able to be up and about. They are two of our oldest women members.

Our revival meeting will begin third Sunday in July. Help has not been announced yet.

Rockingham.—Our Sunday school is yet on the increase. We have new members almost every Sunday. We have had some absences for the past few Sundays due to measles. We hope this epidemic will soon be over and we can have our usual amount again.

The prayer meetings are just fine. The village prayer meeting is of as much interest as the mid-week prayer meeting at the church.

Our revival meeting opened Sunday morning, June 19, at eleven o'clock. We expected Rev. C. E. Philips to be with us in the morning service Sunday morning, but for some reason he did not get here; so our pastor, Rev. J. H. Trollinger, opened the meeting himself. Mr. Trollinger delivered a most inspiring and touching sermon at that time. Rev. C. E. Philips was with us that night and the meeting was really started and with great interest. The church was very well filled Sunday morning and Sunday night. The people round about this place particularly like Rev. Mr. Philips and I dare say, they have a right to, as in my estimation there has not been a man here that could head him in preaching the word of God. We have only had three services. We have had six young people to step out and take their stand for God. We hope to make this the best meeting we have ever had. This meeting will run two weks or until the first Sunday in July. We ask the prayers of the Christian people to be with us during this meeting. Pray that we may have a great revival indeed and that many souls may be saved for God.

(Miss) BIRDIE CONNELL, Reporter.

Randleman Charge.—At Mt. Lebanon some weeks ago we held revival services with Rev. R. S. Troxler as help. Brother Troxler was at his best, rendering most excellent service. Visible results were not up to our expectations, but lasting results of a revival are not always seen. Much real good was accomplished.

On last Saturday the body of Mrs. Sarah Hicks, 61, was laid to rest in the cemetery at Level Cross. Mrs. Hicks joined Level Cross church in 1925, coming from Browers on Richland charge. She was a good woman and filled a large place in the hearts of her children and many others who knew her.

On the 16th day of June the body of Miss Sarah Elmore was laid to rest in Mt. Lebanon cemetery. Miss Elmore was about 80 years old. She had been a member of Mt. Lebanon for many years. She was a good woman loved by all.

Superintendent Allman and Mrs. Allman and eighteen children from the Home were at New Salem yesterday. The children gave an excellent program. It was fine. We are proud of the children. We congratulate Dr. and Mrs. Allman. They are doing an excellent work. The children gave a program at Mt. Lebanon at 6 o'clock. The offering at both places was good.

Yesterday was home coming day at New Salem as well as the Children's Home day. The program was featured by short talks, and by special singing. One dozen young men from White Oak gave a number of vocal selections.

Our special meeting at Worthville will begin July the sixth 8 p.m. Rev. T. E. Pierce will be the helper. Join us in praying for a real revival.

W. H. NEESE.

Spencer.—The 12th of May Rev. D. R. Williams of Graham came and preached for us at the school auditorium. We were glad to have Brother Williams preach for us, and extend a welcome invitation to come again. Spencer railroaders are still talking about his good sermon.

Our revival meeting closed Friday evening. Rev. Edw. Suits came on Monday and did the preaching. We never heard the Gospel preached in a plainer way, was real Gospel preaching and inspiring. The attendance increased at the services, not only our people but the other churches in Spencer came. More good was done then we can now estimate. We feel indebted to Brother Suits for his faithful work. He came to us all a stranger but all learned to love him for his good sermons. Mrs. R. L. Small joined the church and others will soon. Quarterly conference Wednesday reported our church lot paid, and piano paid. But we only had a few days out of debt till we received Street Improvement Assessment due. So we did not have time to rejoice long till we were in debt again. Delegate to annual conference, J. W. Redding; alternate, S. C. Brown. If we could only have a building on our lot of our own we would grow much faster. We are handicapped for room in our Sunday school. Rev. T. Glen Madison, our pastor, is working among us and his sermons are always good and he is encouraging our young people to work. We appreciate our pastor.

MRS. A. L. MOORE.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.—While reports have not been going in very often from our church, it is no indication that our activities have ceased.

Our Sunday school has been having the largest attendance the whole year, that we have had in several years. At the last meeting of our Ladies' Aid we turned over to our treasurer, $81.00, this having been made during the last month. Our W. F. M. S. is still supporting a Bible worker in India. Our pastor has filled all his appointments except those called in for revival at an other church. When I say he filled them I mean he filled them well, by giving us good sermons. Yesterday we were very glad to receive into our church membership Lucy Nunnery. We feel she will mean much to the work of the Kingdom. The Daily Vacation Bible school is now in progress. So far the attendance is somewhere in 70. We are hoping this training may mean much to the lives of the young people in our community. It seems to be so hard to reach people after they grow up, that perhaps they can be trained while young to live the only worthwhile life.

It was certainly a treat to us all to have Rev. J. D. Williams among us and to listen to the wonderful sermons he gave us. I see through our church paper there are some wonderful treats in store for all who attend the young people's conference, among them to attend class under Dr. Fleagle. To my mind this is a wonderful privilege. I wish I could be there. We are glad the editor's vacations don't come very often, for we miss the Herald so much if a week passes and it fails to come.

MAMIE JOHNSTON, Reporter.

Burlington.—A splendid spirit was in all of the services at the First M. P. Church yesterday. The day began with a large and enthusiastic Sunday school. In attendance, the Baraca class scored highest, with 100 present. Other classes made a good showing also. The total attendance for the day was 352. This is 21 in advance of the corresponding Sunday one year ago. The morning worship followed, with a large and interested congregation. Soul-saving, through organized and continuous evangelism, was the key-note in the morning message. We are thoroughly convinced that the church needs a quickened consciousness that her very soul and life is in the spirit of evangelism. It is our further opinion that more thought and concert of action should be given to this phase of the church. But we can't take time nor space to discuss it here. At this service 100 Centenary Hymnals were provided for the church by individual donations.

The day closed with a full and inspiring musical program at 8 o'clock. The Mebane choir of the M. P. church, with Mr. T. O. Peneder as leader, in exchange with the choir of this church, was present, and contributed much to the service, both by special numbers and in congregational selections. The orchestra of our church, and a chorus of nearly one hundred of our young people, assisted in the music. We are very grateful to the Mebane choir, to the orchestra and friends who assisted them, and to the large group of young people who made possible this program. May all who assisted be blessed by the giver of every good, and rewarded by Him for this service in His name. The large number of visitors in the service was highly gratifying. The church was full to capacity, and from beginning to end there was not a dull moment in the program. It is our hope to provide such programs frequently during the summer months.

One new member was received at the morning esrvice, Mrs. W. T. Way. She comes to us from the Glen Raven church, and is gladly welcomed by our congregation. On next Sunday Commander Jaynes, of the local salvation army post, will speak at the eleven o'clock hour. There will be no service at night, owing to the absence of the pastor.

Our committee on registrations for the Young People's Convention is busy, and when the count is all in, we hope to have a creditable tally. S. W. TAYLOR.

Darlington, S. C.—I saw in the Herald that there was to be a Children's Day at Pine Bluff. I being fond of children and also claiming relation with the pastor, Brother Hulin, decided I would go. So on Saturday I took two of my little song birds as I call them and away we went. It being but about one hundred and twenty miles we reached the home of Pastor Hulin some while before night and there we spent as usual one of the most happy nights of our lives with him and wife and little grand-daughter. He was pastor of our church on the Why Not Circuit for years; he and family are very near my heart. We talked over the happy times we had passed and the sad times and the hard places we had come through and nothing but the hand of God could have brought us through victorious, and we both are numbered with the happiest men in the world. As he talks of the people of Pine Bluff and other places where he preaches he says he is so proud of them and I am sure they are of him. We reached the church early Sunday morning, not expecting to see any one I knew but many of my old friends were there, and this was the most unusual affair I have ever attended in all my life. I never in all my life saw any finer bunch of children. A splendid program well rendered, a fine bunch of young men and girls in the choir, splendid music and songs, the most interested fathers and mothers and the teachers cannot be spoken too highly of. And here they had a fine dinner on the table; as far as we could see everybody ate until filled and carried lots back home. But during all of this good time I never saw the effect of a drop of the stuff I hate so bad—liquor, nor did I smell a drop and no one acted the hog over the table as so often done. In fact there was not an ugly thing done.

I think all the readers will agree with me this was a real happy time. The program ending about three in the evening we set out for Darlington. The voices of the sweet children helped me over the one hundred and twenty miles drive and I found myself home before sun down and telling wife what a good time I had. It made my babies laugh too. May the Lord smile on Pine Bluff and all the other churches of that charge and the editor and all its readers, is my prayer.

Yours in the name of Jesus,

W. D. MOORE.

New Hope, Why Not Circuit.—Our pastor preached an excellent sermon last Sunday afternoon. He hasn't a regular appointment for the fourth Sunday afternoon, so he gives an extra service in turn to the various churches. We appreciate this of Brother Garner. It seems that he is willing to devote every bit of time possible in the service of the Master.

After preaching the members voted on the delegate to our annual conference.

Then our newly organized Ladies' Aid Society held a short meeting, enrolled two new members, and voted to raise funds to paint our church inside. And appointed a committee to begin collecting immediately.

We are having a splendid Sunday school with increasing attendance. We have prayer meeting every Saturday night.

Recitations have been given out for the circuit rally which will be held at Flag Spring the first Saturday in August.

We believe this will be a red letter day for Why Not Circuit.

Quarterly meeting will be held at Flag Spring on Saturday before the third Sunday in July.

On the third Sunday in June we held our Children's Day. The children rendered their program exceedingly well. The collection was very good. Our special meeting will begin the third Sunday in July.

Pray that we may have a great out-pouring of the Spirit at that time. REPORTER.

Fountain Place.—We missed the Herald last week, and are looking forward to this week's issue. We hope that you had an enjoyable vacation.

Our meeting closed last night after running about ten days. We feel that much good was accomplished. We had a number of conversions, and twelve joined the church at the close of last night's service, with several more to follow. Some of these were received by letter, and we are expecting some more to follow. Dr. C. H. Compher of Winston-Salem did the preaching—and fine it was. Every sermon was enjoyed by those present, and each one was filled with the Gospel. We were sorry that the meeting could not go on longer, but Dr. Compher felt it was necessary for him to return to Winston Salem last night. We hope that he will come to us again.

Brother Loy has now gotten into the parsonage, and we are all happy to have him and his family in our midst. This fact was evidenced a few nights after he moved, when about forty of our membership swamped down on an unsuspecting preacher, not for supper, but to leave the dining room table piled with the necessities of life. They did not get mad, but took it good naturedly.

Our Sunday school is growing, as well as our church. We hope that the growth will keep up, and that this may be the best year we have ever had in our church.

Since our last report, several of our young people have taken unto themselves life companions. Miss Pink Massey and Mr. Lindley Gibbs, brother of Rev. F. L. Gibbs, were quietly married a short time ago. Both are members of our church, and are very active in the work. It is very gratifying to see them continue in the work. Last week, Mr. A. V. Amick, one of our splendid young men, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Amick, and Miss Pomona Johnson, the attractive daughter of Rev. T. M. Johnson, pastor of Gibsonville church, were united in marriage by Rev. W. M. Loy, pastor of the groom, at the M. P. church, Gibsonville. The church was very beautifully decorated and the ceremony very impressively spoken before a large number of friends. After a brief wedding trip to the western part of the state, the young couple will make their home in Burlington. Mrs. Amick has already joined our church, and we feel sure that she will mean much to the life of the young people in the church. We wish for both these young couples many long years of happiness, and service for the Kingdom.

Now that our meeting is over, let's not stop, but press forward, and strive to do better work during the remaining months of this year, and go to Conference with our Best. Our services are as follows: Sunday school 9:30, preaching 11:00 and 8:00 p.m. every Sunday. Prayer meeting 8:00 p.m. Wednesday. A cordial welcome is extended to all who will worship with us.

Yours in the work.

H. W. WADE.

Asheboro.—Last week I said we were in the very beginning of our Daily Vacation Bible School. Now I can say that the first week far surpassed our expectations, both in numbers present and in work accomplished. The attendance for the five days last week was 112, 130, 134, 127 and 139. The attendance today, the beginning of the second week was 128. The school has been a great inspiration, not only to the children but also to the teachers and even the church members. At 11:30 each day the entire school is brought together for a closing period and this closing period has simply charmed our visitors.

While we have been in the midst of work in school, yet we have been called upon to pay our respects to the dead and sympathize with the living. On Monday night, June 20, Mrs. Annie Plummer Vuncannon, widow of the late Peter Vuncannon, died in High Point and was brought to the home of her daughter, Mrs. R. L. Davis, here. The funeral was conducted by the writer at Charlotte M. P.

Church on Wednesday morning, June 22, at eleven o'clock. Rev. Fred Love assisted in the service. More extended notice will appear later.

Then on June 22 the writer conducted the funeral of Lois Marie Luck, the two and a half years old child of Mr. and Mrs. Clarance Luck. This child was the great, great grandchild of Mrs. Peter Vuncannon, death having claimed two of the five generations in just a few hours.

Then yesterday at noon the funeral of Mrs. Anthony Hohn who died near Sophia, N. C., was held in our church by the writer, assisted by Rev. C. L. Gregory of the Friends Church.

Our people are still showing the preacher's family great consideration. Just about the time of the beginning of our meeting a truck from the grocery store drove up loaded with good things for the pantry. Then the Daily Vacation Bible School or rather the Junior Department of it showered the preacher and his wife with a fine collection of fruits. All these things are appreciated very much. In fact it helps considerably in two repects. First, it helps the pocket book to have these things given and in the second placce it makes the preacher feel that he is appreciated and this is an important item. Then last but not least a few days ago the women of the church sent up a new New Perfection, four burner oil cook stove. Since the stove came the preacher has hardly had to cut a stick of stove wood. This is still greater when we remember that it came at a time the temperature was inclined to soar and to make splitting stove wood a little more unendurable. J. E. PRITCHARD.

High Point.—The Mission Study Class held a very pleasant meeting on Monday afternoon with Mrs. E. L. Ballard at the parsonage. Mrs. A. G. Dixon came over from Greensboro, and gave a very splendid and concise summary of the Home Missionary Study Book, "Our Templed Hills." This book deals with the problems of the rural church of today, and Mrs. Dixon brought out the main points of the six chapters in a very entertaining manner. Many thanks are due Mrs. Dixon from the entire society for this delightful presentation. Dr. Dixon accompanied his wife to High Point, and we are always more than pleased to greet our former pastor again. We were also most fortunate in having Mrs. W. C. Hammer of Asheboro, President N. C. Branch, present on this occasion, and she and Mrs. Dixon gave us a most interesting account of the Executive Board meeting at Pine Ridge, Ky., last May. They also attended the commencement exercises of Alvan Drew School when eight boys and girls were graduated from the High School.

The Ladies' Aid Society will serve supper on next Monday evening, July 4th, to the members of the Demolay Convention, which will convene in High Point for the third annual meeting July 4-5. Approximately 250 delegates are expected. The Society is getting up a unique plan to raise money for its Treasurer. One thousand paper napkins containing advertisements of leading stores and business firms of the city will be printed, these to be used at all church suppers and other functions.

Children's Day was observed last Sunday morning by the Sunday school, and a splendid program was presented under the direction of Mr. Lester Teague, to whom the thanks of the entire school are due for his painstaking care and interest.

The Vacation Church School, which has proved to be a great success, will close tomorrow (Wednesday) evening with appropriate exercises after being open two and a half weeks. More than one hundred children have been enrolled and the attendance has been remarkably good.

The C. E. Society has been divided into two factions, the Reds and the Blues, under the leadership of Misses Mary Shephard and Mary Koonce. A contest is being carried on to reclaim old members, obtain new ones, and points are also given for attendance at the regular meetings each Monday evening and for Sunday evening church attendance. Much interest is being shown in this contest. Miss Alice Koonce was the leader for Monday evening's meeting, and the topic was discussed, "Which Needs Missions More, India or Africa?"

On last Sunday morning Rev. P. E. Lindley delivered a beautiful message on "Heaven-sent Souls." An unusually beautiful duet, "Be Glad, O Ye Righteous," was sung by Messrs. Clarence Schultheiss and Dan W. Smith. The choir rendered a beautiful Anthem, "O Saviour, Precious Saviour." At the evening service the message was brought by the associate pastor, Rev. E. Lester Ballard, on 'The Reality of the Religion of Jesus Christ."

Miss Brevard of New York City, who has been the guest of Mrs. R. M. Andrews, has returned home.

Many friends here extend sympathy to Mrs. George R. Brown, of Reidsville, wife of our former pastor, in the loss by death of her mother, Mrs. Adamson of Bremen, Ga. She had been ill and in declining health for many months, so the end was not unexpected. Dr. and Mrs. Brown went to Bremen to attend the last rites.

Next Thursday, June 30, Miss Vera Idol of the English Department of High Point College, will leave for New York, where she will take Summer School work in Columbia University. She will be accompanied by Mrs. Vernon W. Idol, and little Misses Mary Reid Idol and Julia Elizabeth Coe, who will spend a week in sight-seeing in the metropolis.

Browers Chapel, Richland Circuit.—The work of the church and Sunday school has been moving along as usual since our last report. Our Sunday school attendance has been increasing some.

A large crowd attended the Children's Day service last Sunday. The children did well. After the children had given their program our pastor, Rev. Fred Love, entertained the children for a short while by telling them a beautiful Bible story. The Charlotte quartet was with us and sang several beautiful selections. Offering, $8.28.

Miss Lillie Brown and Mr. Raleigh Stoltz were united in marriage on June 9th. Mrs. Stoltz is the youngest daughter of Mrs. Mary Brown of Asheboro, Star Route. Mr. Stoltz is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Stoltz of Asheboro, Star Route.

They are promising young people, and their many friends wish them much happiness through life. MRS. M. C. HENLEY.

Rockingham.—We had a fine Sunday school on June 26. It is still increasing in number and the interest seems to be good.

Our revival is now in progress. We have a fine time in the work. We have had a good number to step out and claim Christ as their personal Saviour. Yesterday, June 26, was a good day for us; we had two sermons. The night subject was "The Second Coming of Christ;" this sermon carried much inspiration. The meeting will run till the first Sunday in July and probably longer. Rev. C. E. Phillips is with us and will continue to be throughout the meeting. There were eleven new members to unite with our church on Sunday, June 26.

On Saturday night, June 25, we gave our pastor, Rev. J. H. Trollinger, a pounding. It was a very nice one indeed; the pastor expressed his many thanks for it.

We ask the prayers of the Christian people to be with us during the future part of our meeting that much may yet be done for the glory of God.

(Miss) BIRDIE CONNELL, Reporter.

Hollister, Halifax Charge.—Our work is progressing nicely. Our Suunday school is increasing in attendance and interest. We noticed several visitors in our Sunday school yesterday; we welcome them and hope they will continue to come. We are making preparations for our Children's Day program which we are planning to give the fourth Sunday morning in July.

Our pastor, Rev. C. L. Spencer, filled his appointment yesterday with a splendid sermon on the Saving Power of Our Lord Jesus Christ. We were glad to see so many present for the morning service.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies met with Mrs. W. E. Knight on Tuesday, June 14. The president, Mrs. C. L. Spencer, presided. We had a splendid meeting. We decided to organize a mission band for the children with Mrs. W. E. Knight as president. We also elected an agent to solicit subscriptions to the Record. Kathleen Shearin was elected agent. After the business meeting and program we were dismissed by sentence prayers, after which the hostess served delicious refreshments.

Our traveling basket is meaning a whole lot to our society. It is a good way to make money. I advise other societies to try it. Our missionary society is planning to give a play on Friday night, July 8.

REPORTER.

Rehoboth Church, Granville Circuit.—The first Sunday in June was Children's Day at Rehoboth. The program was voted one of the best we have ever had. Mrs. Jim Floyd, Mrs. Helen Bobbitt and Mrs. Tom Chandler trained the children and to them is given the credit. On Sunday night of that day a pageant was given by the young ladies which was presented in a pleasing manner. The offering on both occasions was very gratifying.

The May Missionary meeting was held with Mrs. Carey Cheatham, one of our new members. The June meeting was held with Mrs. Richard Harris. The children have been organized into a Mission Band and a meeting for them was held at the same time.

The revival services will begin the first Sunday in July with the Rev. Mr. Compher of Winston-Salem as helper for our pastor, Mr. Fogleman. We are looking forward to this meeting. Our services will be in the afternoon and at night.

Our community has been grieved and shocked at the sudden death of our friend and neighbor, Mrs. J. W. Rogers. Mrs. Rogers was called home on Sunday, June 18th, while at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Hunt. She had been to see a sick neighbor and on her return had stopped at the Hunt home. Mrs. Rogers before marriage was Miss Lizzie Davis, daughter of Mr. Jim Davis. She leaves to mourn her—a family of six children, a husband, Mr. J. W. Rogers, a father, two brothers, and five sisters. Since her youth she has been a faithful Christian and for a number of years a member of Rehoboth church, having moved her membership there from Bethel the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She was intensely interested in the Woman's Missionary Societies having been at one time, president. The funeral services were conducted at Rehoboth church by Mr. Fogleman, pastor. The earthly remains were laid to rest in the nearby cemetery, beneath a mound of flowers, brought by loving friends who are left to mourn.

We loved her for what she was, a true, open-hearted Christian mother and wife. We mourn, but not without hope, for we believe she has entered into joys, prepared for those who love his appearing.

REPORTER.

Dulin's, Mocksville Charge.—Our Sunday school is still moving along; the attendance seems just about the same as it was last year. Our revival meeting began the third Sunday in June and continued till Thursday night; it had to close on account of rainy weather. I think there will be another held sometime soon. Our pastor, Rev. J. T. Sisk, preached two splendid sermons Sunday morning and Sunday night. He had secured Brother Austin as pulpit help, but he was not able to be with us. He was fortunately able to get Preacher Short from Concord. Those who heard Brother Short seemed to like him. Our pastor has given each of his churches a free singing school for which we wish to thank him very much and we feel sure they have all appreciated it. His kindness will never be forgotten.

Best wishes to Herald and its readers.

REPORTER.

Union Grove.—Last Sunday was a good day for the Union Grove church. There was an increase in both the Sunday school and church attendance. Pastor Glenn Madison delivered a helpful sermon.

In the afternoon the Sunday schools of Union Grove township met here for the purpose of organizing a Sunday school association.

An interesting program was rendered. The devotional exercise was conducted by Brother Madison. Short talks were made by the superintendent of each school represented. Special features of the program were the inspiring lectures delivered by Mr. W. C. Wooten, president of the Iredell County Sunday School Association, and Mr. Cloyd C. Fox, secretary of the County Association.

The following officers were elected: Mr F. E. Cass, president; Mr. Albert Cooper, vice-president; and Mr. Millard Knight, secretary. It seems that this association is putting new life in the Sunday schools throughout the county.

Our Sunday school will observe Children's Day at an early date. We will also give a short program at the Sunday school convention, which will be held at Mt. Vernon Baptist church the third Sunday in July.

The third quarterly conference was recently held. Some details of a proposition were announced, to build Sunday school rooms to the church. This matter will be considered again later and definite decision will be made at that time whether the building will be done or not.

Our Christian Endeavor Society is doing fine work, under the instructions of Brother James York, president. We are raising money for the purpose of wiring the church, which we hope to have done before the beginning of our revival meeting which will be the second Sunday in August instead of the fourth Sunday in September, as it has been here-to-fore. We are earnestly praying that we will have a real revival, and that many souls may be brought into the Kingdom.

Our next regular preaching servicce will be held the second Sunday in July at eleven o'clock.

ZELDA JURNEY.

Fountain Place.—Our revival meeting which was in progress for ten days came to a close last Wednesday night. We had about twelve conversions and reclamations, with fourteen additions to the church. This makes a total of twenty-seven new members received this year. Rev. C. M. Compher of the First M. P. church of Winston-Salem did the preaching. His preaching was interesting, constructive, and convincing. Almost every unsaved person who attended the services was saved. Our attendance was good but our great problem was to get the unsaved to come to the services.

Since our last report the pastor and family have moved into the parsonage. This was followed by a very severe pounding on the evening of June 9. The many articles given and the givers are too numerous to mention. Both the gifts and the givers are appreciated very much. We could hardly do without either. This is the second pounding we have received this year from these people.

The Daily Vacation Bible School is scheduled to begin on Tuesday, July 5, and continue for ten days or two weeks. It was planned to begin earlier but because of the revival meeting it was impossible. We are planning to use the Standard Vacation Bible Course. This will be the second school of this nature put on here.

It can safely be said that the work here is progressing nicely. While we are doing nothing astonishing, yet, all forces are pulling together and are encouraged and optismistic. However, we need your prayers. Our burden is great.

W. M. LOY, Pastor.

Midway, Haw River Circuit.—We were so glad to have our pastor, Brother Reed, with us last Sunday, after his being absent for two months; his health is very much improved and we hope he will continue to gain strength and will soon be able to be with us at all the appointments, for we have missed him during his absence, though we appreciate Brothers Kennett and McCulloch filling some of his appointments. We enjoyed their visit and the messages they brought; we are also glad to know that Mrs. Reed is recovering from her operation, and are looking forward to the time when she can be with us again.

Our Sunday school is getting back to normal again since measles is about over with. Christian Endeavor Society is also holding good.

Our special meeting begins the fourth Sunday in this month. We are hoping for a great revival, and that many souls wil ble brought into the Kingdom of the Lord. Pray for us.

MRS. G. W. APPLE, Reporter.

Winston-Salem.—We held our Children's Day service on the second Sunday of this month, using the program of our own Board of Foreign Missions. The entier service of the morning was given over to the program which was well rendered and delighted a large audience. The offering amounted to fifty-eight dollars.

The exterior of the church building has been painted, the bricks penciled white and the woodwork all white, adding greatly to the attractiveness of the structure, all of which has been paid for. Congregations are keeping up well for the summer months and all departments of the church working nicely.

Received three persons into full membership last evening and there were two converts both of whom will unite with the church. A great many strangers are attending the evening services and I am giving the invitation each time I preach for any who will to give their hearts to the Lord Jesus. It is bringing forth good fruit. Pray for us, that the work entrusted to our care may prosper and the church be strengthened.

C. MORGAN COMPHER.

Mt. Pleasant, North Davidson.—The monthly meeting of the W. F. M. S. held June 5th with 20 members present. We also received one new member for which we are thankful.

The meeting was opened by all singing "I Love to Tell the Story." Our president, Mrs. Welborn, had charge of the devotionals and read the "Stewardship of Life." Scripture verses were recited by several members of the society. A song by the primary class of our Sunday school, "Jesus Loves Me." Prayer by W. D. Payne. Stewardship disrussion by Mrs. C. F. Green. A clear explanation of tithing read by Mrs. W. D. Payne. Recitation, "All Things Beautiful," by Ruth Shoaf. "Caravans to Mecca" read by Ruth Payne.

The secretary called the roll and read the minutes of the last meeting. Received the dues amounting to $3.55.

The meeting closed by all singing, "I'm Pressing on the Upward Way," and a word of prayer by J. R. Stone.

After the meeting dinner was served and a social hour enjoyed by all present.

RUTH PAYNE, Cor. Sec'y.

First Church, Albemarle.—Our work is running a long very well. Our greatest trouble is in getting regular attendance. We have just closed a contest in our Sunday school which I think was of some benefit. We divided our school into the red and blue sides and the side that gained the most points would be entertained by the other. The red side won by 84 points, so we are planning for our ice cream Friday night. Our beloved pastor, Brother Anderson, is preaching some of the best sermons that I ever listened to; I thank God for men like Brother Anderson who is not afraid to preach the old-time religion. If we only had more such preachers to stand behind the sacred desk and tell folks what God Almighty wants them to do, we would see more of our churches prospering. We are very sorry to lose Brother Carl Moton and his good faithful wife; they were two of our faithful Sunday school teachers; they have moved to Kannapolis but we trust they will come back soon and be with us. Mrs. Moton was leader of our Junior Christian Endeavor and she has done so much to train our little folks. We don't see how we can get a long without her. We are planning for our Children's Day exercise some time in July. Watch Albemarle for registrations for young people's conference. We have the banner for past two years and if you don't watch us we will have it again. Pray for us in our work that we might go forward.

Yours in His name,
R. L. LEONARD, Reporter.

Moriah Church.—We have Sunday school every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock and preaching at 11.

The Sunday school is increasing and we hope it will continue to do so. We had an attendance of 109 for Sunday school and good attendance for church service. Our pastor delivered a wonderful sermon which was greatly enjoyed.

We were glad to welcome six new members into our church on June 12. They were Rev. H. G. Carmichael and wife, Mr. and Mrs. McLean, and Mr. and Mrs. John Woods.

The weekly visit of the Herald was missed June 16, and we are hoping the Editor had a pleasant trip.

Mrs. A. L. Curtis who underwent an operation at the Clinic Hospital recently is improving nicely. We hope for her a speedy recovery.

Our meeting is to begin the fourth Sunday in August. We are looking forward for a successful meeting.

We organized a Junior, Intermediate and Senior Christian Endeavor Society recently, which is to meet every Sunday evening at seven o'clock at the church. We extend a hearty welcome to everyone.

Our pastor, Rev. Mr. Carmichael, is going to Charlotte to attend a Bible meeting the latter part of this week.

Mr. J. C. Coe and Mr. Lineberry were appointed nominees to the annual conference.

Our Children's Day service was held Sunday night, June 19, at 8 o'clock. The church was well filled and the exercise was carried out nicely.

Sunday will be promotion day for us. The Banner will also be awarded to the class having the best attendancee during the past quarter.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

SALEM METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH

SOME REMINSCENCES OF SALEM METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, SAXAPAHAW CIRCUIT

(Compiled and read, in part, at the Centennial exercises held May 6-8, 1927. By J. Newlin Thompson.)

In order to get a correct view of Salem Methodist Protestant church, we must go back to the early or middle of the 18th century perhaps during the period 1725 to 1750.

It has been said, that two Thompson boys, (no a kin) of Scotch-Irish parentage, heard of the liberty and freedom to be had in America; ran away from their homes in Northern Ireland; got on an American bound vessel and hid in barrels till the ship sailed from their native land.

Thus, we have "Mutual Rights" in the bud.

These boys stopped in the Pennsylvania colony. Just how long they remained there, we have not been told. Perhaps they married while in Pennsylvania. We have not the names of their wives.

Later, date unknown, they came to North Carolina, and settled in what is now known as Salem Community.

One, Thomas, I think his name was, settled on Haw River not far from the present site of Salem Charge. James settled on Haw Creek, about one half mile west from Phillip's Chapel M. E. church.

These men reared large families of boys and girls. Soon the community was dominated by the Thompson name.

This scribe has the honor of being a descendent of both these pioneer Thompsons. James the 1st of Haw Creek, was my great-grand-father. Mary Thompson, daughter of James T. of the Haw River tribe, was my grand-mother on my maternal side.

Some of these early settlers in community, besides those afore named, were Bradshaw, Crawford, McDaniel, O'Daniel, Morrow, Paris, Ray, Steele, Stewart, and Turrentine.

These early settlers built a house of worship on or near the present site of M. P. church, and named it Salem—"Peace." This was a Union church. Free to all denominations.

Those old founders were a God-loving, a God-serving, and a peaceful people. They believed the Bible to be the Word of God, from Genesis to Revelation. They also believed in one another. They made the Bible and the church first in their lives. Everybody went to church, except providentially kept away. They held the old time class meetings, and often got on the "Mountain top," and had glorious revivals.

Salem is said to be the second church organized in what is now Alamance county. Haw Fields, Presbyterian, being the first, 1765.

The Presbyterians were first to organize a class at Salem, just when, we have no record. Perhaps about 1780 to 1790. Joseph Thompson, son of James the 1st, was an Elder in the Presbyterian church. More than one hundred of his descendants of the fourth, fifth, and sixth generations are members of the different churches of this and surrounding counties of North Carolina.

After the Presbyterians came the Baptists. Date not known, nor how long they held a class here.

The Methodist Episcopals came next. They held a class here until 1887, when Salem was dropped from their plan of oppointments. Rev. L. L. Johnson being pastor.

In 1826 under the name of "The United Society of Methodists," the Methodist Protestant church was organized here, and has lived these one hundred years. Thus making Salem one of the oldest, if not the oldest Methodist Protestant church in our denomination.

During the period 1824 to 1828 when "The Mutual Rights of Laymen," was being read and discussed some animosity existed in this section, as well as in many other parts of our country.

Many were expelled from the mother church for no other cause than the reading of "The Mutual Rights." During the period referred to Rev. James Christie, a "Protestant," as these Mutual Righters were derisively called, had a regular appointment here. Rev. Mr. Haynes of M. E. church decided to begin a camp meeting on day of Christie's appointment.

The time came. Rev. Haynes had his camp in order. Christie came.. Haynes goes to Christie and says to him, "The Holy Ghost told me to order you off these grounds."

Rev. Christie stated that all who wished to hear him to come to the spring, nearby. It is said that most of those present heard Christie. Result: no revival at that camp meeting.

We are glad to say that after a few years this indignant mother and her rebellious daughter became mutual friends and worshipped in the same old church here for more than fifty years.

Lettie Thompson Crawford, (my aunt) and Rachel Thompson Morrow are said to be the first members to join Salem Methodist Protestant church. Aunt, her husband, and others of this section moved to what is now South west Orange county, and "Old Flint Hill" M. P. church was organized. Later this class was moved to the present site—Orange Chapel. Salem claims this church to be her first-born daughter.

"Easy" Joe Thompson and his wife Sally Paris, William A. Thompson and his wife Susan Fur, and Margaret Paris Jones settled in the now Hebron section. These families associated by that hero of the Cross, John Nicholson, brought about Hebron M. P. church, a second daughter for Salem. The Mebane M. P. church is a daughter of Hebron. Thus Salem must be grand mother. R. N. Thompson, "Uncle Bob," his wife and Berry M. Cates moved their membership from Salem and became leaders and charter members in First M. P. church, Burlington, N. C., a third fine daughter.

First church, Burlington, I think is the mother of Fountain Place. Making Salem twice a grand mother.

God grant that this little centenary mother, with her daughters and grand-daughters, may ever continue to labor in the Master's vineyard and accomplish great and lasting good in His name.

Preachers of Salem:

Rev. Joe Thompson, M. E. church, moved to Texas.

Rev. W. H. Thompson, M. E. church, brother of Joe, was one of the big preachers of his day.

Rev. L. E. Thompson, M. E. church, son of W. H. Thompson, is a preacher of note.

H. D. Thompson, second son of W. H. Thompson, is a local preacher.

Rev. J. Ed Thompson, Western North Carolina Conference, M. E. church, is one of the big preachers of his confeernce. He first joined M. P. church here, but transferred to the M. E.'s.

Rev. John Paris, our native son and first M. P. preacher.

Rev. Daniel Thompson, local preacher.

Rev. J. A. W. Thompson, teacher and local preacher.

Rev. H. S. B. Thompson, M. P. we claim as a grand son preacher of Salem.

We claim at least a half interest in Rev. George W. Holmes. His mother was a Thompson and lived on a nearby farm. George W. Holmes comes of preaching stock and holds up the banner well.

Rev. S. H. Thompson was a Missionary Baptist, preacher of note. Rev. Lacy Thompson, M. E., is in training.

Twelve preachers have gone out from Salem and nearby vicinity, to preach the everlasting Gospel of our Lord and Saviour.

What shall the harvest be?

Salem has furnished wives to two of our ex-pastors, viz Rev. W. M. Pike and Rev. W. F. Kennett.

Roll of honored dead pastors of Salem:

Revs. Jas. Christie, Alexander Albright, Alson Gray, James Deans, C. F. Harris, Geo. E. Hunt, G. A. T. Whitaker, R. R. Micheaux, J. C. Dean, J. R. Ball, C. A. Pickens, C. A. Cecil, W. C. Kennett, W. W. Amick, and J. H. Bowman.

Living ex-pastors:

Revs. D. A. Highfill, T. F. McCulloch, W. F. Kennett, J. D. Williams, G. H. Austin, W. M. Pike, George W. Holmes, H. S. B. Thompson, J. Clyde Auman, T. A. Williams, J. M. Ridenhour, D. M. Loy.

The present much loved young pastor, H. L. Isley.

History tells us that Jerusalem has been destroyed and rebuilt seventeen times. Just how many times this historic church has been rebuilt, we have not the recorded facts. This is the third frame building that has stood on this plot. It is reasonable that one or more log houses were built prior to the erection of the first framed house.

The first framed house was 36 x 40 feet. Closed in but not ceiled. Between 1855 and 1860 an addition of 12 feet was added to the South end of the first building. Making the house 36 x 52 feet. This house was ceiled and had very comfortable seats. The house was never painted.

Since 1887 Salem has been M. P. property. We have a deed to the plant, containing about four acres.

In 1892 Rev. W. F. Kennett was pastor. The high boxed in pulpit was in vogue. Pastor Kennett not being over tall, had to almost "tip-toe" to see his hearers. Brother Kennett didn't like this pulpit. So he went to work for a change. Brother George Stafford took down the old box, lowered the platform, then fastened the book board to a wooden screw, so the preacher might lower or raise the board to suit his height.

The present structure was begun under the pastorate of Rev. W. W. Amick 1901. The class voted to build a new house. Some lumber was put on the ground. In 1902 the building committee failed to agree on plan. Two men, not members of any church, Jas. T. Bradshaw and W. G. Crawford, were added to that committee. This committee carried the work to a finish. It is needless to say that Brothers Bradshaw and Crawford soon became loyal members of Salem M. P. church. This house contains timbers that were in first and second churches. Thus we have three in one.

This church was dedicated first Sunday in October, 1903, by Dr. J. F. McCulloch, Editor of M. P. Herald, Greensboro, N. C.

Three sessions of the Methodist Protestant N. C. Annual Conference, viz 1839, 1867, and 1871, were held at this church.

Mrs. Margaret E. Thompson stands alone as the senior member of Salem M. P. church.

Sketch of the class which joined this church in 1877.

Rev. J. B. Ball, pastor. This class had eleven members. All descendants of our pioneer, James Thompson 1st, save one.

Five have answered the last roll call: viz: Alice Russel Jones, Cicero Harris Thompson, William Henry Paris, Robert Neese Crutchfield, and James Buchanon Crutchfield.

The six remaining members are rounding up their half a century. Viz: John Sidney

OUR BEST RALLY DAY SERVICE

There will be the usual music, recitations, pantomimes, drills, dialogues, etc., etc., an abundance of material from which to select a varied and interesting programme.

A standard feature of the Rally Day services has been an original play, setting forth in dramatic form some special Christian truth. Last year we tried to depict the influences leading to surrender for full-time service for Christ. This year it is a call to parents to dedicate and surrender their children to the service of God.

DOROTHY ELDERDICE

The talented daughter of Rev. H. L. Elderdice, D. D., president of Westminster Theological Seminary, is the author of the play. It is the story of Abraham's offering of Isaac and is entitled, "Jehovah-Jireh." It is a unique production, deeply stirring and appealing.

Give us your order for as many of these programmes as you need.

Help us to make Rally Day, 1927, the greatest yet.

Start the work of the church for the fall and winter by a great inspirational Rally Day service.

Summer Conferences in Progress

On Tuesday the editor looked in on the Pastors' Summer Conference and the Young People's Conference at High Point College and found both going well. They had solved a problem hitherto thought not susceptible of solution—that of two bodies occupying the same space at the same time. Both were occupying the buildings of High Point College. And there was no difficulty in deciding which was which though ministers and young people were thoroughly intermingled. We found both in the chapel in a devotional service led by Dr. Myers of Thomasville Community Church. That ended, the large group separated into smaller groups in different lecture rooms of the college. We followed the group that heard Rev. E. D. Stone of Baltimore speak on the work of the ministry. He stressed the supreme importance of introducing men to Jesus Christ. A ministry that does not accomplish that is a failure. A man may be a walking encyclopedia, but if he does not lead men to Christ he walks in vain. There must be in the minister's soul a deep passion for the salvation of others in order to make it possible to lead others to Christ. Brother Stone draws upon his rich experience in the ministry for material to illustrate and enforce his points, and is a very soul-stirring preacher. He concluded his address with a most touching story from his experience in dealing with the unsaved. He brought tears to many eyes.

We then heard Dr. A. G. Dixon speak on "The Country Church and Conference Relations." He took issue on some points with "Countryman" as he expressed himself in last week's HERALD. From his knowledge of the field in our Conference District he is convinced that in a few instances consolidation of churches would greatly promote the work. He spoke also of the need of church extension work in the cities to conserve the young people who are moving from the country to the cities and towns. The town churches we have were built for this purpose and they have justified and more than justified all they cost. They are the most liberal contributors today to the fund for church extension, missions, etc.

At dinner time all gathered in the spacious dining room for a substantial dinner. All seemed to enjoy the occasion. As with the "poor relations" Washington Irving tells about, our spirits rose as we ate, and before the meal was ended some of us were singing merry songs made up for the occasion.

Bros. Little and Gibbs, in charge of recreation, made some announcements, including this, that we all were to regard ourselves as American Indians, choosing our own tribal names, and meet at 3 o'clock for a great pow-wow, we suppose. (We did not wait to see what it was, but slipped into our car and departed for safer ground.)

We regretted our inability to hear other addresses which we know must have been very interesting, but we hope to return and hear more later in the week.

Young people there impressed us as being there for earnest work, and no one must get the impression that these are mere play-days. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy and Julia a dull girl."

Tuesday afternoon 105 young people had arrived. Most of the ministers of our Conference seemed to be present, though we missed a few of the older brethren. Rev. T. M. Johnson was absent because of illness, but it was reported that he is gaining and hopes soon to be back at work.

Rev. D. A. Highfill has been a regular attendant at the Ministers' Summer Conference and is missed this year.

The Women Must Decide

The question of the relation of the women and the men in the work of foreign missions is one of the live questions in our church today and possibly in some other churches. Shall women have separate missionary organizations? They do have at present, and this is taken as evidence that they ought to have. Others say that these women's societies came in because of conditions that formerly existed and do not exist now. This raises the question as to whether there is need today of separate organizations for the women.

Both parties to the controversy declare themselves favorable to the plan that will best promote the cause of missions. Both have the motive of love to the heathen. The difference comes at the point of deciding how best to help the heathen.

We think it indisputable that women have a genius for saving and collecting money for missions that men do not have. For years the women have been saving and giving for missions far ahead of the men, ability considered. Women have proved their worth to missions. How much of their success has been dependent on the fact that they controlled the expenditure of the fund they collected is a question. But the presumption is that this fact has had a large influence. To assume that the women would still go on saving and collecting for missions if the expenditure were taken out of their hands is risky.

The question is one for the women to decide. The General Conference cannot decide it independently of the choice of the women. Can the General Conference vote that no woman in the Methodist Protestant Church shall belong to a woman's foreign missionary society? Surely not. What sort of a spirit would that indicate? It would be like the action of the M. E. Church a hundred years ago in forbidding its members to belong to "Union societies." It would be like the action of those small religious bodies who exclude from their membership all who belong to the Masons or other fraternal orders.

The church should have its missionary board and appeal to all its members to supprot the work, but if some of the women think that they should supplement what the church board does by additional work in foreign lands, what man is there who would say them nay? No, the question is one for the women themselves. If they decide to contribute their all to the one church board and be fairly represented on that board, it would seem a very happy arrangement; but if after considering the question fully women feel called upon to go to greater lengths and maintain their separate missionary work, surely they will be entitled to full respect and a god-speed from every Christian.

DIVISION OR UNION

Why I voted for the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration in Pittston, Pennsylvania in 1924 and why I am now in favor of a similar organization, having an equal representation of men and women.

I am in favor of the Union Board because I believe in unity of spirit and progress. There has never been a more splendid organization of any kind than the Women's Foreign Missionary Society. It grew out of necessity. When the Methodist Protestant Church was organized the women, as in all other denominations, were ignored and left off all the Boards. Women, in fact, were left out of everything in those days, business, politics, the professions and ecclesiastical organizations. Because of a natural interest in missionary work, a few women developed a new and separate organization, The Women's Foreign Missionary Society. Its growth has been phenomenal and educationally and financially much has been accomplished for missions. It is a cherished institution and I appreciate why many of our faithful workers cling to it so tenaciously. But times have changed. Today women are welcome into every department of life. The Women's Foreign Missionary Society and similar organiations have proved their worth over and over again. All broadminded men are willing to acknowledge the efficiency of our methods. In the proposed arrangement I feel sure we have nothing to lose but much to gain. Even should we forfeit our present charter we can secure a new one. That, in fact, is a small matter, if in the process the foreign missionary work of our beloved church is advanced. Even though we should turn over our property to the Union Board, we are still joint owners of it and, in addition, of the property now belonging to the Church Board of Foreign Missions. We shall be richer than we are now. We shall undoubtedly continue to carry on by the same Board-Branch-Auxiliary method because this plan has proved its usefulness and it is too valuable to be discarded. As I see it the only change which actually takes place is that we shall then be back of the whole missionary program of the denomination instead of just our part of it, and we shall have a larger privilege and responsibility in disbursing all the missionary funds.

While Mr. Stephenson was in the active pastorate we did our very best to keep the entire missionary program of our denomination before the churches we served. I made missionary charts and explained them to the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor, but we were constantly hampered by the fact that there were two mission boards with separate and often conflicting forces and programs. There was confusion in the minds of our people all the time and we were unable to make a real united and comprehensive missionary appeal.

It was then that I made up my mind that we needed a Union Board of Foreign Missions. It seems to me it would be unfortunate to go back to the old way of doing things. It would be little short of a calamity to have our one missionary magazine contain news and present the work of only a part of our missionary enterprise. I am quite sure it will lessen the value for many of us of our missionary prayer calendar if we can have on it only the names of our women missionaries.

In my humble judgment one of the needs of the Methodist Protestant Church is a greater unity of spirit. I have always regretted the misunderstanding and contention between the so-called "Women's Board" and "Men's Board." I know some who have lost interest in the Missionary work of our church because of it. If we are to enjoy that oneness of spirit which Christ taught we must rise far above these things. When I cast my vote for the Union Board in Pittston in 1924 I hoped that the first step was being taken for greater unity, co-operation and brotherly love among the missionary leaders of our denomination.

The main reason for voting as I did at Pittston is because I believed it would be helpful for the work in the foreign fields. The object of all our work at the home base is to get the most possible accomplished over there. In the annual report of the Union Board at the back of the July Missionary Record Dr. Rosenberger quotes the resolution passed by the last session of the Japan mission Conference in which it is made very clear that in Japan at least the union effort is a success. Shall we then allow divisive factors among our workers here hinder the greater success of the work there?

These are some of the reasons why my vote was cast for the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration. Believing therefore, that in cooperation and union there is greater strength and efficiency, that in spite of handicaps the end desired has been largely achieved, I wish to cast my ballot for the continuance of the Union Board.

MRS. J. MABEL STEPHENSON.

Bellevue, Pa.

Dr. Roberta Fleagle

This valued missionary spoke in Greensboro on Sunday and Monday last and is this week to speak at the Young People's Conference at High Point. Seven years ago she was in Greensboro and was called upon for a speech. She modestly excused herself, saying that she was no speech-maker. Her seven years' experience in China have made a speech-maker of her. She tells a very interesting story. And those who hear feel that she is telling the plain unvarnished truth. She inspires confidence. This has given her access to the hearts of the Chinese and made her acceptable as a physician to them.

In one of her Greensboro speeches she referred to the fact that it was with some misgivings that she gave up her practice gained by fifteen years of experience and turned her face toward China. But now she is assured that she was following the voice of God.

She tells of the strange customs of the Chinese, such as foot-binding; she tells of the work in our mission schools and mission stations in China; she tells of the troubles brought on by the wars of recent years. Kalgan, the seat of our mission in China, has been occupied by different armies. At one time the bandits were in control of the situation. Then the missionaries could not sleep for three nights in succession, fearing that the mission would be looted. It was visited by the bandits and searched, but as no weapons of war were found, nothing was taken.

Miss Fleagle has been supported in China by Grace Church, Greensboro, and has been the representative of the North Carolina Branch. We feel fortunate in having so capable a missionary to represent North Carolina Methodist Protestants. Ought we not to have more representatives in the foreign field? The case of Dr. Fleagle encourages us to send more.

The preacher needs push—get up and go. When a man is paid two or three thousand dollars a year he should be worthy of it. He needs to employ his time in his specific field of labor, planning his work from week to week and day to day, careful of his leadership, busy in his study, directing his forces, visiting the poor, sick and needy, getting a line on his territory, making himself felt in turning people toward God and the Church. If the charge does not prosper he should seek to find out the cause of his failures—seek the wisdom of God and therein find the way to success.—Methodist Advocate.

HASTEN HIS COMING

That Jesus is coming again is an event as certain as any event can be forecasted. The Scriptures abound with prophecies of His coming. He Himself repeatedly said that He is coming again. He is coming again to take to Himself His holy bride, to judge the quick and the dead, to complete the program of redemption, to wage a winning war against the powers of darkness and grace this planet with the triumph of Armageddon, and to reign a thousand years.

This world is getting ripe for His coming. The signs of His early appearance are in evidence everywhere. There is much yet to be done before He comes. The church, His prospective bride, has a great task to complete before He comes. Let us finish this task with all possible speed and thereby hasten His coming.

The completion of the missionary program will hasten His coming. He said, and is still saying, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Every creature of accountable age must have heard the gospel's joyful sound when He comes. Again Jesus said, "And this gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14. Let us give more largely, let us go more numerously; and let us toil more diligently, for the enlightenment of the nations; and thereby hasten His coming.

The inauguration of a world-wide revival will hasten His coming. No doubt our Bridegroom has in mind a certain number of believers that are necessary to compose His bride. And that number has not yet been reached. He can't come and won't come until that goal has been attained. Herein is laid down Christ's imperative challenge to His church. Will the church take up this challenge with renewed vigor and consecration? Will she begin another wrestling with the Father of mercies for another pentecostal outpouring? Will she be willing to pay the price of unity and supplication for another large ingathering of souls? Will she harmonize her differences, unite her forces, and expand her God-given energies for the glory of her Lord, and thereby hasten His coming?

There is no doubt as much demand for more Christianity as there is for more Christians. The bride of Jesus must be a holy bride, without spot or wrinkle. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord in peace, triumph, and glory. No one will be permitted to partake of the marriage supper of the Lamb without the wedding garment of complete righteousness in Christ Jesus. And Jesus is now saying to His prospective bride: "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city; for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean." "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of God cometh."

And earnest, importunate, unceasing prayer will hasten His coming. Jesus came the first time in answer to prayer. The wise men prayed till the star appeared and led them to the infant King at Bethlehem. Simeon prayed till it was revealed to him that he should not see death until he had seen the Lord Christ.

Let every lover of the Lord pray more earnestly for His early return. Let second coming prayer meetings be organized all over Christendom. Let every messenger of the Cross lead his congregation in impassioned supplication for His coming. And from every closet let unceasing petitions go up till the summons comes to meet the Lord in the air. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. 22:20.—The Word of Life.

That the father has the absolute right to choose what schools his children shall attend and what religion they shall adopt, is the decree handed down recently by a magistrate in London.

PERILOUS TIMES

To deny that we are in perilous times is self-stultification. The man who tints his sky with rosy colors may have a good motive, a desire not to give away to despair, which is commendable in many respects, but we gain nothing by shutting our eyes to the facts. There are many, who through fear of being considered pessimists, have been unwilling to acknowledge the situation. They are like consumptives whose flattering disease has deceived them, telling them that they will be better tomorrow.

Before we shut our eyes to the situation and refuse to consider it lest we be called "pessimistic," it is well to look the facts squarely in the face, for there are certain facts that can not be gainsaid.

The first fact we desire to mention is, the stability and prosperity of America is the result of the principles brought to this country by the Puritans. It can be proved that our national prosperity came from the reverence paid to the Word of God, the sacred observance of the Sabbath, family religion and respect for law and order. No honest, intelligent man will dispute this. We submit that it is impossible to substitute other foundations without imperiling the nation. Will any one dispute that?

This leads us to another fact—these fundamental principles are being discarded nearly everywhere. Can any one deny this, who is intelligent and honest? We can not. What has become of the holy Sabbath? Satan holds high carnival on this day. We are a nation of Sabbath-breakers. The family altar has almost disappeared. Children receive scarcely any religious instruction in the home. Parental authority has largely given way until insubordination has infected the nation, and the masses have lost respect for law. The authority of the Bible has been challenged and weakened by the pulpit itself, so that many know not where to look for authority either in religion or morals. The doctrine fundamental to entrance into the kingdom of God is no longer preached by the average pulpit. We refer to repentance.

This is the seeding and like results must follow. When the nations of the world are convulsed as never before; when there is scarcely a stable government in the Eastern part of the other continent; when Atheism is organized as never before, and clamors to throw off all restraints of religions and morals have pervaded this nation, what have we to face it with? Have we got a Christianity that can go into the slums as early Methodism did and pray down convictions on the Bolshevism abroad and that is now in America, and save the nation? To say we have, would convict us of trifling. It seems to us that if we are able to conduct great campaigns to raise great sums of money for the heathen world, our ecclesiastical leaders ought to be as able to start a great onward movement to pray for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit in this great crisis of the world. That they do not do this is to us one of the most serious signs of these perilous times. Will spiritual religion perish off the earth has become a most serious question. Whenever the daily papers acknowledge the seriousness of the situation and declare their only hope is in the guiding hand of God, is it not time that our spiritual leaders were awake? —The Christian Witness.

—There is no unimportant member in the church. There is no one whom the church does not need. The smallest service is worth while. We may be able only to open the doors; but that is necessary, too. We may be able only to smile and shake hands with strangers. That is a divine service also. There is room in the church for all sorts of gifts, all sorts of talents, all sorts of service. Our duty is to find what we can do, and do it with joy.—C. E. World.

The WORK and the WORKERS

Last Thursday evening, upon special invitation we drove to Kannapolis for a supper with the people of our new church there, together with a goodly number of the members of the Brotherhood from our Concord church.

It was a delightful occasion, and no one can imagine just how much we were surprised at and delighted with the progress that has already been made there. A tent meeting was held with Rev. G. H. Hendry doing the preaching, and with his workers from Concord backing him. There were a goodly number of conversions, and a Methodist Protestant church was organized with over twenty members, and others are yet to join.

Since then they have purchased a lot 100 by 150 feet with a house on it which will make a fairly good parsonage, and have built a tabernacle 24 by 32 feet and have seated it and equipped it for church and Sunday school work. They are planning for and hoping that the conference will help them to plan for an all-time pastor next year. Brother Henry with the help of Brother D. A. McLauren and others from Concord will keep the work there in hand until conference.

Moriah

When called to go to Kannapolis, I had already promised to be present at and preside over the third quarterly conference at Shady Grove on Moriah charge. That I might be released for the Kannapolis trip, Rev. J. D. Williams, D. D., agreed to go and preside at the Moriah quarterly conference, and he reports a good conference which was well attended. Dr. Williams has our sincere thanks for this service.

First Church, High Point

In the absence of Rev. P. E. Lindley, the pastor in High Point, who is taking a summer course at Columbia University, I taught the Baraca class, and then preached at the eleven o'clock hour. We had a good time together at both these services.

This is a great church. In 1895 Rev. W. R. Lowdermilk, then a student at Oak Ridge, organized this church with 13 members. I noted two of the charter members in the congregation yesterday. And now they have 624 members with one of the best working church plants in the country. Yesterday, while I preached to a splendid summer time congregation in the main auditorium, Rev. E. L. Ballard was going ahead with his junior congregation in the Sunday school auditorium. Our people here have a great opportunity. May God direct them in the coming year.

IS THE CHURCH GAINING?

Is the professing church of Christ improving on the standards, and the zeal, and the evangelizing activities of the church of nineteen hundred years ago? There are certain passages in Acts that accurately describe the early church. They offer a startling contrast with the facts of today. For example, Dr. Palmquist, Executive Secretary of the Philadelphia Federation of Churches, who has been making a study of the progress of Protestantism in that city from 1915 to 1925, said frankly at a recent meeting that the results of the survey were "discouraging." This was his summary: "An average annual increase of only seven members a congregation was made during the last decade by the twelve leading Protestant denominations of Philadelphia." That is, all the churches of the twelve leading Protestant denominations of this great city succeeded in adding to their membership only seven members each per year in ten years; the total evangelistic result of each church's testimony and activity was considerably less than one soul a month. On the day of Pentecost, from Peter's sermon, "the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." As the new church went on in its testimony, "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." A little later, "believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and of women." "And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." So "the number of the disciples was multiplied," and "the churches.. walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied." Such expressions as these would hardly have been used if an entire congregation of believers were succeeding in rescuing only seven souls in a year. Surely these sad facts are a call to every true Christian to confess before God the sins of the whole church, and one's individual share in this sin and failure, and to plead with God for that revival of the church, the body of Christ, which shall give true witness instead of false witness to his name.—Selected.

HOW TO KILL PREACHERS

If you want to kill off the best preacher that ever lived, try some of the things listed below:

Don't attend prayer meeting.
Don't attend the Sunday evening service.
Only hear him preach when convenient.
Habitually come into church late.
Stay away on the slightest pretext.
Rush out as soon as the service ends.
Act cold, to show your dignity.
Never call at the parsonage.
Never thank the parson for his services.
Never appreciate his efforts.
Don't offer to help.
Tell him what great sermons you hear elsewhere.
Tell him repeatedly of your fine former pastor.
Criticize him to strangers and outsiders.
Criticize him and his sermons before your child.
Don't make him welcome when he calls.
Criticize him for not calling.
Find fault with the way he and his family dress.
Criticize his wife for not mixing in everything.
Tell folks his wife is trying to run everything.
Don't take your Sunday company to church.
Don't let him know you are sick.—Exchange.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

Children's Day Offerings

By the time this article appears most, if not all of the Sunday schools and churches, that have so planned, will have held the Children's Day services. The number of orders received has been very gratifying. Now your Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration is anxiously and hopefully awaiting the financial returns with the hope that they may be adequate to meet our expectations. We are also hoping that they will be sent, first, to your Conference Treasurer and then to the General Conference Treasurer with the least possible delay.

May I lay upon your hearts that these funds are needed? NEEDED NOW! We had an obligation for the new Klein-Coulborn Memorial Church at Nagoya, Japan, that had to be met upon its completion. This Church was completed about a month or six weeks ago, according to expectations. Consequently, a loan of about $9,000 had to be negotiated because of the Board's lack of funds. An urgent appeal has gone forth to our American constituency for increased Children's Day offerings both to meet our obligations for this Church in full and to give expression, in this tangible way, to our high appreciation of the valuable services of these two noble and self-sacrificing men of God.

Now to make adequate response to this urgent appeal it was imperative for you to order the programs, hold the service, and to take the offering. But that we may meet the obligation, with the minimum of expense, it is just as imperative for you to send in the offering received at once.

The returns have begun to come in but, certainly, not as rapidly as they might. According to the General Conference Treasurer's report for receipts to July 1 the total amount received was $1854.37. There is such a temptation to retain the offerings until conference session and then turn them in. But what is the Board to do for funds in the meantime? It is the hope of the Union Board that when we meet in Westminster, Maryland, July 28 and 29, the returns from the Children's Day offerings shall be sufficient to permit us to forward to Japan the full amount necessary to cancel the loan on the Memorial Church. Won't you please come to our aid and send in your offerings at once and thereby make this possible for us?

Let us not forget that this is not merely the interest and the work of the Union Board. It is your interest and your work as well. It is OURS together. The work and workers over there are a very real part of our great denominational family and its holdings. They cannot suffer and we not suffer with them. They cannot be weak and wanting and we strong and without want. We can only be as strong and as healthy as the very weakest and most decrepit link in our family chain. The more we strengthen every part of our work the stronger we grow as a whole. United effort and loyal support guarantee growth and strength.

So we are counting on every one of the Sunday schools and churches that have co-operated in ordering the programs, holding the services and taking the offerings to continue this splendid co-operation until every penny of the Children's Day offerings are in the hands of our General Conference Treasurer so that the Union Board may have immediate use of the funds and thus save interest on the loan that had to be made. Will you not help your Board thus to economize? We know you will.

In a very short time the Annual Report of the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration will be ready for distribution. One of the gratifying items of this report is that under the head of obligations. The report shows that the obligations of the Foreign Board has been reduced from $19,800.00 to $14,000.00. Let none of us be content until this obligation is entirely met. United effort and loyal support will accomplish this.

S. W. Rosenberger, Executive Secretary.

THE HOME GUARD

Every mother and every father in Fitzwilliam seemed to feel it would be wrong to spend any money on Fourth of July celebrations. Every mother and father seemed to feel the day should be passed very peacefully, very quietly, very thankfully.

Every boy and girl in Fitzwilliam felt dreadfully disappointed—not that they wanted to waste money while so many people needed food and clothes, but they longed to celebrate the Fourth of July.

I said every girl and boy in Fitzwilliam felt disappointed. Well, that is perfectly true, all except for one boy whose name was Stuart Saltonstall; he was not disappointed. But then Stuart Saltonstall never was disappointed; he really didn't know the meaning of the word. When things happened which would discourage any other boy, Stuart walked quietly to his room, closed the door and thought—not of the thing which had happened, not of the disappointment; dear me, no, for that would be wasting time according to his ideas; instead he would think very hard of something nice to do next, something so nice it would make him forget the other thing.

On the third of July, 1919, when all the other boys and girls of Fitzwilliam were feeling especially gloomy, Stuart, within his room, was thinking—thinking—thinking. He had closed his door as the village clock struck two. At the first stroke of four, he opened it and walked from the house. The boys and girls of Fitzwilliam watched Stuart as he left his yard. His head was held high, his shoulders were thrown back, and a certain curious light in his eyes made them follow him. No one spoke. Before long, they found themselves in the backyard of a deserted farmhouse. Stuart threw himself full length on the soft green grass and began pulling at the tender blades; one by one he nibbled at the sweet yellow ends, chewing them slowly. One by one, the girls and the boys followed his example.

"I've got an idea!" announced Stuart.

Everyone stopped chewing, everyone held their breath. Eyes which were troubled began to sparkle, tongues which were silent began to fly, thick and fast. But Stuart had an answer waiting for every question.

"And now you see for yourselves we haven't any time to waste. There is plenty of work for us to do. We've each got our part; no matter if it seems kind of small, no matter if we'd rather do some one else's. We've just got to do our parts or—the whole thing will be—a failure—a complete failure!" Stuart looked from face to face. He saw enough fire in each pair of excited eyes to make him sure of tomorrow's success.

Fathers were too busy reading their evening papers; mothers too occupied planning the morrow's fresh salmon and first garden peas to notice the closed doors; the opening and shutting of closets; the creaking of unused bureau drawers, the whispering and the tiptoeing of usually noisy feet.

Quietly the children of Fitzwilliam worked on and on. Quietly every plan developed just as their leader had said it must.

When Stuart's mother blew out the sitting room lamp, she said softly to father, "Well, this isn't much like the old Fourth's of July you and I remember! I do think the children have been mighty good about not teasing for firecrackers and pistols and things. I wonder if we'd have done the same if war had done its cruel work when we were children? I wonder?"

Father didn't answer, he was thinking of Joe Mitchell's boy—Joe, who never would come home. He was thinking how any glad Fourth of July noise would hurt in such homes. He had no words of praise for the girls and boys of Fitzwilliam because, well because he was thinking of other girls and boys.

Some one rang the church bells on the morning of July the Fourth, but it was after the sun was up, it was after everyone had eaten their breakfast, and it was after the houses were in order for the day that the bell rang, sedately slow, just as it rang on every Sunday morning throughout the year.

Every one in Fitzwilliam ate their fresh salmon, every one ate their green peas and every one ate their cherry pie. After that everyone came out to sit on their piazzas dressed in their Sunday best. Every one felt something should happen! Everyone felt anything would be better than this absolute quiet, yet no one quite liked to say so.

Mrs. Mitchell's chair was close to her husband, gently she laid her hand on his, whispering, "If, if—he—were here, he'd do something just a little something to show how thankful we all ought to be that war is over—no—no matter what its cost. He'd—"

But suddenly Mrs. Mitchell sat straight. What was this sound? What was this sound? What was that cloud of dust? Down the village street marched the girls and boys of Fitzwilliam, each carrying a flag, each dressed in as much red, white and blue as the old bureaus and closets could provide. At the head marched Stuart beating the somewhat dusty drum he'd found in his attic; after him, single file, marched his friends. As they came to Joe Mitchell's house, Stuart shouted, "Halt!" Every head uncovered. Clear, childish voices, some slightly out of tune, sang "Onward, Christian Soldiers, Marching as to War." Quickly Joe Mitchell and his wife rose to their feet, they stood very straight, almost like soldiers, their lips trembled with a new pride, and with a new-found joy. As the song ended, Elizabeth Ann, the littlest girl in Fitzwilliam, walked to Joe's mother saying, "We—we hope we didn't make too much noise, but you see we had to do something on this day! Here are flowers! Here's a flag!"

The flag was a tiny silk one. The flowers were red and white geraniums with blue bachelor buttons clustered close about them.

Mrs. Mitchell reached down for her gifts saying, "When you are through parading, Elizabeth Ann, you all come straight back here to our house because I feel just exactly the same way as you all do. I've just got to do something on the Fourth of July. I always have, and I guess I always will."

Down the street they marched, those boys and girls of Fitzwilliam, keeping time to the drum and halting at each gate to sing, "My Country, Tis of Thee," "The Star-Spangled Banner," or some other song known to every girl and to every boy.

It was such a big thought, that thought of Stuart Saltonstall, yet when all the girls and boys of Fitzwilliam sat around Joe Mitchell's front piazza and drank ice-cold lemonade and munched fresh sugar cookies, they decided there had never been a nicer Fourth of July, even if it was different.

Joe Mitchell's father shook hands good-bye with each girl and boy. He thanked them for coming and he handed to each a book, a boy's work, with words written on the front page. For while Joe's mother had made lemonade and cookies for the hot, foot-sore, limping, little patriots, Joe's father had gone to Joe's bookcase, had taken down piles of books and within every book had written:

"From Corporal Mitchell to the Home Guard."—Ethel P White, in Congregationalist.

COWARD OR HERO?

Well! That sure is some joke. Fancy old Gould giving that Courage verse to 'Sissy Jim' to recite next Friday: 'I want to be like Washington, dare all, and bravely fight'—''

The speaker broke off with a scornful laugh, ''Pah! It just makes me sick.''

''What are you holding forth about, Bob Barry,'' said a youth of about eighteen, as he pushed his way through the crowd of knickerbockered boys, just released from the classrooms of the Bridgeton Primary School.

A chorus of voices answered him.

''Here! Here! One at a time. I can't understand if you all shout at once. You tell me Jim Craig. What is it all about?''

A delicate looking, curly headed boy, with very flushed cheeks, stepped forward.

''Mr. Gould has given me the courage verse to recite on Friday, when General Flushing is to visit the school.''

''Yes,'' broke in the mocking voice again, ''James Collins Craig has been selected, if you please. 'Sissy Jim,' who everyone knows is the greatest coward out, who fainted like a girl, when he was vaccinated—''

''And is afraid of thunderstorms, and—and—everything—,'' chimed in a freckle-faced, red-headed lad.

''A fine monument of Courage he is. A mean shame, that's what I call it,'' added Bob.

''That's enough,'' said the new-comer. ''Now, boys, Mr. Gould does not need you to tell him what to do, and as for you, Bob Barry, you are only mad that you were not chosen. Had the subject been Cheek—you would have had a jolly good chance. Now scatter—all of you, and don't let me hear any more of this.''

Obediently the crowd dispersed and the youth laid a hand on Jim's shoulder.

''Make good, Jim,'' he said kindly. ''Show them all that Mr. Gould chose wisely.''

Jim looked in his face gratefully. ''I am trying all I know how,'' he said sadly. ''I think Mr. Gould knows it, and that is why he chose me.''

With a nod his companion walked away, and Jim started for home, thinking over the events of the day. This constitutional nervousness was his ''rock ahead.'' The doctors said it was largely due to a severe shock. When he was but four years old, an ignorant nurse had locked him up in a dark closet for some small fault. The result was a sharp attack of brain fever, that left his nervous system in a shattered condition. His great desire was to overcome this weakness, and to accomplish this, frequently subjected himself to tests and ordeals designed to strengthen his powers of endurance.

Arriving home, he immediately sought his older brother George, always his aid and confident, and told him the whole story.

''Old Gould is a brick,'' he said, ''and so was Jack Marsden to back you up. Don't you care. You are going on in great shape, and you'll win out yet. I'm going to try out my new fishing rod at the creek. Want to come along?''

Off they started down the long country road, busily talking as they went.

''What a crowd there seems to be at the station,'' remarked Jim, as it came in sight.

''Yes,'' answered George, ''There is an excursion for the Girls' Primary to Bailey's Beach today, and there comes the train.''

The sound of the puffing engine echoed around them, as they joined the crowd at the station, and Jim saw many of his schoolmates there, among them Bob Barry.

All necks were craned watching for the coming of the train. As it swept towards them, a small girl in a pink sunbonnet stumbled and with a piercing shriek fell to the track, right in the pathway of the swiftly approaching engine.

A shout of horror went up, and all seemed as if paralyzed.

Jim was a little ahead of George and immediately saw there was no time to be lost. Rushing to the edge of the platform, he leaped down, and catching the child in his arms, gave a quick jump to the other track, closing his eyes, as he felt the rush of the train as it passed, and stopped at the station.

Eager and willing hands lifted Jim and the rescued child to the platform, the child unharmed, but Jim with a sharp pain shooting through his ankle, for as he landed on the other track, after the jump, his foot had turned under him.

''Three cheers for the little hero?'' cried someone, and a mighty chorus responded.

''Do they mean me?'' asked Jim as he leaned against George's shoulder.

''They sure do,'' answered George, ''And I'm right proud of you.''

They placed him carefully in an automobile, drove him swiftly home, and telephoned to the doctor.

''Just a sprain,'' he said cheerfully, ''You'll be racing around again in a few days, rescuing more young ladies from the iron horse.''

''My brave boy, you might have been killed,'' murmured his mother, as she clasped him in her arms. ''I am proud of my son.''

''I was dreadfully frightened,'' he said, ''but I did it all the same.''

''That is true courage, Jim my boy,'' said his father. ''To be brave in spite of fear.''

''I can say that verse now without Bob laughing at me,'' he said to George.

''You sure can,'' said George, heartily. The laugh is on Bob now. Why didn't he jump. He was there, and it was his sister.''

But Bob came around presently, repentant and grateful, anxious and willing to swear eternal friendship with the hero of the hour.

''It is a great pleasure,'' said General Flushing, on the great and eventful day, ''to meet this young hero, who carries out in his every-day life, the great ideals he has just spoken of. It is my privilege to present to him this medal only bestowed on the most admirable deeds of courage. You are indeed to be congratulated in numbering among your classmates such a member as James Collins Craig. Three cheers for him.

And no one in that great chorus cheered more heartily than Bob Barry. —Selected.

MY RESOLVE

To live as gently as I can;
To be, no matter where, a man,
To take what comes of good or ill
And cling to faith and honor still;
To do my best and let that stand,
The record of my brain and hand.
And then, should failure come to me,
Still work and hope for victory.

To have no secret place wherein
I stoop unseen to shame and sin;
To be the same when I'm alone,
As when my every deed is known;
To live undaunted, unafraid
Of any step that I have made;
To be without pretense or sham
Exactly what men think I am.

FEAR OF SNAKES NOT INBORN

The fear of snakes is not inborn in human beings, as many people suppose, according to Mrs. G. O. Wiley, of the Minnesota Academy of Sciences. Kindergarten children, says Mrs. Wiley, show no shrinking from snakes until their elders teach them to be afraid. "Unfortunately the snake was chosen as the symbol for evil and consequently we shudder at it and it seems repulsive to us," the scientist asserts. Many of the best friends farmers have are killed every year because the average person is ignorant of snakes and their habits. They are really the allies of the farmer. One snake will eat 150 field mice in a single season.

Researches made by Mrs. Wiley, who is in charge of the reptile division of the museum, show that a snake will shed its fangs as often as every 20 days. The fangs are used in killing prey and nature has made provision to keep the fangs very sharp. The skin is shed from time to time, depending upon the physical condition of the individual snake and the species. Contrary to the popular notion, the tongue of a snake is perfectly harmless. Mrs. Wiley says that of the 1800 or so species of snakes there are only four poisonous kinds that we need be afraid of. They are the rattlesnakes, the copperheads, the water-moccasins and the coral snakes. The venom of a snake is provided primarily for killing prey, not for defense, according to Mrs. Wiley. —Current Events.

REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN FOR YOUNG PEOPLES' CONFERENCE

It seems to be impossible to close my books in the registration campaign. Every mail brings new lists. Several of the agents, in their last communication, said "I will see you at High Point and give you some more names." For this reason, and further, because a list sent from the Asheville church to the wrong address has not yet been received. I will not make my final report until next week. As in my last report, because of the lack of time, I will omit the names of those who registered and give only the standing of the churches. These names will be in final report on the campaign.

The total of 1172 registrations averages nearly fourteen registrations for each church which entered the campaign. Registrations were sent in from eighty-five churches. There were a hundred and thirty-nine agents appointed. Fifty-seven pastors responded to my request in appointing agents. Fifty-seven pastors registered. Since I did not know the names of the Sunday school superintendents, and the agents but seldom designated them in sending in their reports, if I would give the number which I have it would not be correct.

We are now off for the Conference, here is hoping we will see you there. Remember to pray for us all during the conference session, and even after it closes that the impressions made upon the hearts of our young people may remain with them.

Fraternally yours,

N. M. HARRISON, JR.,

Registration Campaign Director.

GRACE CHURCH PEOPLE HEAR DR. FLEAGLE

For seven years the members of Grace church, Greensboro, N. C., have had the high privilege of being represented in the foreign field by Dr. Roberta Fleagle, Kalgan, China. No work that the church has undertaken has brought more inspiration or been of greater interest.

Dr. Fleagle is now at home on furlough, and spent last Sunday and Monday in Greensboro. Sunday morning she spoke at the eleven o'clock service, telling in a most interesting way of her work in China. As a physician many doors were open to her which would have been closed to other workers, and as she ministered to their bodies she had opportunity to tell them of the Great Physician who could heal their souls.

Kalgan, the gateway between Mongolia and China, was in a state of siege for four months prior to Dr. Fleagle's departure, and during this time the missionary compound was filled with refugees, who were cared for by Dr. Fleagle and her co-workers. Since she left the schools have been closed and the other missionaries have gone to Tientsin.

On Monday afternoon the Woman's Foreign Missionary society of Grace church invited the women of all the Methodist Protestant churches in Greensboro to meet with them, and hear Dr. Fleagle. In spite of a downpour of rain just at the hour of meeting, about fifty women were present, and heard her most eagerly as she told more of her work.

Dr. Fleagle is thoroughly in love with her work, and no one can listen as she tells of her experiences without feeling a deep sympathy for the Chinese, and realizing that it was a wonderful friend they found in her.

At the close of the meeting everybody had an opportunity to meet Dr. Fleagle while the ladies of Grace church served tea and sandwiches.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

THE POSTAL CARD, W. F. KENNETT, EDITOR

"A Stormy Day"

Dear Doctor McCulloch:

You have been so very good in proof reading The Postal Card, that it pains the Editor to have to call attention to an error; but in the last Postal Card we are made to say "After this stormy day" when we meant to say "after this strenous day."

There was nothing stormy about the day; but it was a full day and we enjoyed it and we believe the people and the pastor enjoyed it. We are not blaming anybody; but we must disclaim there being anything stormy or unpleasant about the day—on the contrary it was an "ideal June day," so let it go down in history that way.

(The Herald editor was caught napping this time and begs pardon.)

FROM REV. D. A. BRASWELL

I am back at home. I am not well but I can sit up a part of the time. My expense was very great at the hospital. It cost me $10.50 per day. I can be treated at home for much less. But what ever the cost has been is the price of my life. I would have died in a few hours if I could not have found relief. I want my friends to continue to pray for me and write at 83 Anne St., Concord, N. C. My son came up from Rockingham and brought us home to Concord. I had been gone 40 days. While I was so sick I could hardly raise my head, yet when they said, "We are at your home in Concord," I raised my head and said, Thank God, I am under the shade of the maple trees in my own yard once more. The tears of joy mingled with sorrow just would flow. It was about bed time and we drove up and took our seat on the porch. The first man to make his way to our porch was a dear old preacher on two shining crutches to extend us his sympathy. After spending a short time in social conversation, my son and his wife left for Rockingham.

God bless all those that have helped us in any way. Pray for us.

Yours in His name,

D. A. BRASWELL.

Graham Church.—Our Children's Day program was given Sunday evening, July 10, and it was one of the most interesting programs we have ever had. The children's part of the program was directed by Mesdames A. P. Williams, J. H. McPherson, and Norman Sykes, and the pageant rendered by the young people was under the direction of Misses Blanche Fuller and Clara Hughes. Everyone enjoyed the program very much and the offering amounted to $21.

The Young Ladies' Sunday school class had an ice-cream supper on the church lawn Saturday evening, July 9. Due to the inclement weather, the attendance was small, but it was very successful from a financial standpoint.

Our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor societies are doing very good work although the attendance has dropped off some during the summer. However, when summer vacations are over we expect to have our usual number again.

Brother Williams has been bringing to us some very interesting and inspiring sermons and we feel greatly benefited by them.

Misses Adele Cheek and Larona Black are attending the Young People's Summer Conference at High Point as representatives from our church. M. T. H., Reporter.

Chestnut Ridge, Orange Circuit.—We feel that we are receiving many blessings. The work of the church and Sunday school has been moving along nicely.

Children's Day service was observed last Sunday morning and a splendid program was given; the children did their part well.

In the afternoon our pastor, Mr. B. M. Williams, filled the pulpit and delivered a splendid sermon. At the close of the service the Lord's Supper was observed; quite a large number of the congregation joined in a delightful communion. Our next preaching service will be held the fifth Sunday in July at 3 o'clock.

Best wishes to the Herald and its many readers. ANNIE SQUIRES, Reporter.

Moriah Church.—Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. We had an attendance of 108 Sunday and one year ago there were only 55. We are always glad to have visitors with us. A good crowd attended the church service Sunday at 11 o'clock.

By the carelessnes of the reporter wo missed having anything in the Herald last week.

The Auxiliary of Calvary church and also of ours met together at the home of Mrs. Frank Coble on July 7, and held an interesting meeting.

We are glad to hear that Mrs. A. T. Curtis who has been ill at the Clinic Hospital has returned to her home.

Mr. Ed Kirkman was received into our church Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service. He was formerly a member of Tabernacle.

A quarterly conference will be held at Shady Grove on Thursday night, July 14.

Mrs. Leroy Parker of Charlotte, spent a few days this past week with her mother, Mrs. A. T. Curtis.

A lawn party will be given at the church Saturday night, July 16. The beginners which are to be known as the banner class for the coming quarter will be "set up" by the class that lost the banner the past quarter which was the men's class. The public is cordially invited. It is being given for the benefit of the new parsonage.

Our Christian Endeavor Societies are doing fine work. We had a good attendance Sunday night in all three societies. The pastor made an interesting talk in the Senior Society.

Remember our meeting is to begin the fourth Sunday in August.

MARY MOSER, Reporter.

Rehoboth Church, Granville Circuit.—The Rehoboth revival meeting began the first Sunday in July and closed the following Thursday night. The Rev. Mr. Compher of Winston-Salem assisted our pastor in this meeting. We indeed feel that Mr. Compher was directed to us with a special message. He preached to us Jesus and him crucified. The Gospel truths old, yet ever new fell on our ears with an awakening newness; which put a revival into many of our hearts and brought us into a closer fellowship with the Divine Master. We thank Mr. Compher that he so ably discharged the Master's business. As a result of our meeting ten children were baptised and received into the fellowship of the church on the third Sunday morning at the regular preaching service by the pastor, Mr. Fogleman. We wish to thank Mr. Polk Garrett of Mt. Carmel, who so ably assisted us with the music at the evening services during the meeting.

The men with the aid of the women have pledged money enough to have the church re-painted. Since the good work has begun we may find other means of beautifying our place of worship.

The Woman's Missionary auxiliaries will meet with Miss Crystal Bobbitt Wednesday afternoon.

We are planning to make a special effort toward our budget during the next quarter.

Little Janice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carey Cheatham, is very sick at this time. We hope for her an early recovery.

Mr. S. R. Harris of Henderson, worshipped with us today. We are always glad to have Mr. Harris.

Miss Delphie Harris leaves this week for High Point College where she will attend the Young People's Conference. We truly hope that more of our young people will be able to attend the conference in 1928.

REPORTER.

Democrat Circuit.—The first Sunday in July our revival meeting started. Rev. J. D. Cranford, from Weaverville, came to do the preaching. The attendance was good and Mr. Cranford preached good sermons. His last sermon was on "The Second Coming of Christ."

Although we didn't have the success we had hoped for we feel that we have been helped. Our mid-week prayer meeting will still continue.

Our pastor, Rev. Mr. Bell, will fill his appointment on the second Sunday as usual.

We want to thank the people of the other churches for their help during the meeting. We will gladly help them at any time they need us.

May God's work go on and have more workers than before.

Best wishes to the Herald.

JESSIE WILLIAMS, Reporter.

Concord.—Since the last report we have been having some very interesting services. On the last Sunday in June the District Rally was held in our church at the eleven o'clock service. Dr. R. M. Andrews, president of High Point College, delivered a very helpful and inspiring address on "The Church—The Greatest Asset to a Community." In his address the speaker made very plain why the church is the greatest asset to a community and what a community owes to the church. Rev. H. F. Surratt, president of this district and pastor of First church, Charlotte, read for the scripture lesson Romans 12. At the three o'clock service several interesting talks were made. At this service everyone enjoyed the visiting quartette immediately. Many visitors from Charlotte, Burlington, and other places were present. We are always glad to welcome visitors to worship with us.

We held the first Daily Vacation Bible School in our church this year with an amazing success. About one hundred and fifty enrolled for the school with over a hundred certificates awarded. The graduation services was held July 3. The children rendered a very interesting program. The kindergarten department, with an enrollment of over fifty, entertained the audience with a number of little songs and a dramatization of the Story of Baby Moses. Then the Primary and Junior Departments had charge of the remaining part of the program. They gave several numbers, including a pageant. We hope to be able to hold a Bible School, every summer now, because we enjoyed the first one so much.

We always look forward with eagerness every year to the coming of the children from our Children's Home to render a program. We were delighted to have them with us last Saturday a week to give their program. The program was just fine, everyone enjoyed hearing the boys and girls to the greatest extent. We were glad to have them spend the night in the different homes here.

The pastor preached a very helpful sermon at the morning service Sunday. Everyone enjoyed it very much. At the evening service another fine sermon was heard. Mr. Hendry used as his theme, "Building for Eternity." We were delighted to have with us in this service Rev. Mr. Cowen, and his daughter, Mis Irene, also, Miss Allgood and her sister, from the Georgia conference. They were enroute to the Summer Conference in High Point.

We are to have four representatives at the Young People's Summer Conference this year. They are: Miss Maggie Mann, from the Senior Christian Endeavor Society, Misses Dessie Lea Little and Grace Mae Beaver, from the Sunday school and Miss Nina Little who won a free trip for registering one hundred people. BERNICE NASH, Reporter.

Fairview and Glen Raven Charge.—Our special meeting will convene at Fairview the second Sunday in August, Rev. Joel B. Trogdon as pulpit help. Also home coming day. All that ever worshipped there, laymen or preachers, are invited to be with us on that day. Some will be written to, but this is an invitation to all. There will be preaching at 11 a.m. and 8 p.m., and talks by many in the afternoon. Brother Trogdon will be with us on Sunday. T. A. WILLIAMS.

Orange Charge.—Children's Day services have been held at each church. The exercises were good at each place. Much thanks is due those who prepared the programs and those who trained the children. The offerings were the best during the history of this charge. Union Grove led by raising their full amount for Foreign Missions at this service. The other churches did not come up to this standard.

The revival meeting began at Efland church Sunday night, July 10th, and closed last night, July 17th. Rev. R. A. Hunter did all the preaching except two sermons by the pastor. Brother Hunter's work was greatly appreciated by both pastor and people. His plain, practical gospel messages made a profound impression upon the congregation.

Ten decisions were made for Christ. Two new members were received. Others to join later. Offering for Brother Hunter, $40.00.

The third suarterly conference will meet with the Efland church Saturday before fifth Sunday in July, 2:00 p.m. Please be on hand promptly.

Revival services to begin at Union Grove first Sunday in August. Rev. C. E. Ridge to lead singing. Pastor to preach. At Hebron second Sunday in August, Rev. H. F. Surratt to do the preaching. Pageant at Union Grove fifth Sunday, 8:00 p.m.

B. M. WILLIAMS.

Shiloh, Randolph Circuit.—Under the pastorship of Rev. A. O. Lindley our church work is progressing rapidly. For some time the attendance has not been what it should be but much good is being accomplished in efforts to enlarge the attendance and before long we hope to have the whole community standing for the church and Christ. We need some thing to make the people less unconcerned about an A grade Christian community.

The annual Children's Day exercise was held July 10 at eleven o'clock. The children did well in rendering their parts, regardless of the lack of practice. The measles epidemic and the thunder showers hindered practices.

Rev. Pike filled the pastor's place at this service.

The following program was given:

Scripture Reading—Superintendent J. S. Pickett.

Much credit is due Miss Pauline Whitaker, Mrs. A. L. Kime, and Mrs. Clyde Jones for the training of the children. F. R. Garrett arranged the music. The offering amounted to $23.60.

Our church and Sunday school seems to be strengthened greatly by the Christian Endeavor society. All of the present young church workers have been or are now Christian Endeavorers. One present Christian Endeavor member has had working experience at East Carolina Teacher's Training College, and three endeavors experience at High Point College.

Miss Ila Burrow, the newly elected president, is doing fine work with Christian Endeavor organization. Miss Burrow is a capable leader and we hope her efforts will be carried to the front by the enthusiastic following her as their captain.

The society will hold its next monthly business meeting and social at the home of the president Friday evening from eight to ten o'clock.

Our church is in great need for two Sunday school rooms. No action has yet been taken towards their erection, but there has been much discussion. We hope to be able to build them in the near future.

The annual meeting will begin the second Sunday in August.

Randleman Charge.—Our revival at Worthville closed last Saturday night. There were six professions, and four united with the church. Brother Pierce preached and toiled hard throughout the meeting. Everybody was pleased with, and helped by, his labors among us.

At our recent third quarterly conference Brother W. A. Wood of New Salem, was declared delegate elect to the ensuing annual conference.

Superintendent Allman, Mrs. Allman and children from Our Home, presented a fine program Sunday night at Worthville. The church was well filled and all seemed to enjoy the exercises. W. H. NEESE.

Dulin's, Mocksville Charge.—We were indeed glad to have with us Sunday our pastor's father, Rev. J. B. Sisk, from Caroleen. He filled his son's regular appointment here with a splendid gospel sermon. Our pastor, Rev. J. T. Sisk, was conducting a revival meeting at Union Chapel. The congregation was smaller than usual. I suppose it was on account of a revival meeting at the Baptist church near here. The Sunday schools is planning to have their Children's Day service. Our people would like to have Brother Sisk's father to worship with us as often as he can. REPORTER.

Bethel, Flat Rock.—On the third Sunday in June we had all-day children's services. There is much praise due Mrs. Trogdon, Miss Inez Trogdon, and Mrs. A. A. Jones and several others for the splendid program rendered by the children. Also we are always glad to have Mr. Webster Pope and sister, Miss Vassie, sing for us. We had several of our one-time members present and we were very glad to have them. It seems like old times to have Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Pegram of Winston-Salem worship with us, he having one time been our superintendent of the Sunday school, and Mrs. Pegram one of the teachers. We were also glad to have Mrs. C. W. Vance and children of High Point with us. Our Sunday school is doing nicely and Mr. Trogdon has been preaching us some unusually strong sermons, so plain and true.

Measles and whooping-cough have been keeping some of our children away from church, but we hope they can soon come back. Our special meeting begins the first Sunday in August as usual. Pray for us that there may be many souls saved.

Prayer meetings are still going on and we trust that many are being drawn closer to the church and its cause through them and the inspiring messages brought us by our pastor.

Best wishes to all. REPORTER.

Mt. Zion, Pinnacle Charge.—On the evening of the fourth Sunday in June we held our children's day exercise; it proved quite successful followed with a right liberal offering.

On Monday following, Brother Hunter started revival at Mt. Zion, he failed to get any help, however, he preached strong sermons each night and morning to and including Friday night. While there wasn't as much interest as we have seen at Mt. Zion in previous meetings we feel sure that we have had in our hearts a true revival and truly expect much good to come from the meeting.

On last Saturday our Township Sunday School Convention was held with Pinnacle M. P. church. Every Sunday school in the township, (seven in all), was represented with prepared programs rendered same in such a way that we know Sunday school work is on the increase all about us.

Next third Sunday Brother Hunter will fill his regular appointment and also hold election for delegates to annual conference.

Reunions seem to be in order just now. The fourth Sunday in June was a great day for the Stones of our church.

At the old Squire Stone home place now owned by his youngest son, E. S. Stone, over two hundred Stones gathered with several friends and Pastor Hunter and wife and had one of those old time out door spreads—something to eat on the ground. This was indeed an enjoyable occasion.

On the fourth day of July over under those mammoth oak trees at the Dr. Wolff place on Grassy Creek the Wolffs and their kin and a goodly number of friends held a reunion, this too was very much enjoyed by all present.

On the fourth Sunday in July the Browns will hold a reunion at the Logan Brown home place—home of O. F. Brown.

The weather has got warm enough that farm crops are growing fine in this section at present.

Best regards from Mt. Zion to the Methodist Protestant world.

C. W. ALLEN, Reporter.

Mt. Carmel, South Lexington Charge.—Our Christian Endeavor met July 7th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Haywood with Miss Zula Swicegood as leader. The topic was, Christ's Teachings That Are Too Seldom Practised. And met July 14th at the home of Mr. J. T. Helmitler with Miss Bessie Lambeth as leader. The topic was, Applying Christian Standards in Amusements. A large crowd was present at both meetings and a good program was rendered at both homes.

Brother Ridge filled his appointment July 17th at 3:00 p.m. His sermon was enjoyed by all. We were glad to have Rev. and Mrs. C. B. Way to worship with us in Sunday school and preaching service Sunday. We were glad also to have Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Hedrick of South Lexington with us also.

We are planning to hold our Children's Day August 7th at 11 o'clock which is time set for the beginning of our revival meeting. There will be all day service and lunch on the ground. Come and enjoy the day and the revival with us. Brethren, pray for us that there may be great and good work done for our blessed Lord and Master during our revival. H. V. SWICEGOOD, Reporter.

Kernersville Charge, Sandy Ridge Church.—We just closed our special meeting. Mr. Lowdermilk did the preaching and we thought we had never heard any that was better. We didn't have the results that we hoped to have had but we feel that much good was done that we perhaps can never know until we reach the better world. The meeting closed on last Sunday morning. Mr. Lowdermilk preached to the children and gave an invitation. Eleven of our children and young boys and girls were saved and seven members were received into the church. We hated for the meeting to close. It seemed that we were just getting started.

I haven't got to attend Sunday school very much lately but think we are having a right good Sunday school.

There is some sickness in our community. Mrs. A. H. Shields doesn't seem to improve much.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Clark buried twin babies recently. One dying at a few days old and the other about two weeks. May the Lord bless and comfort the parents. We know it was hard to part with them and especially so as there are no other children in the home, but the Lord knows best and he doeth all things well.

Mr. Bud Idol started to Winston to see his son who was in the hospital at that place suffering from bruises which he received in a car wreck, and some one ran into his car breaking his nose and bruising his body some, but we are glad to know he is improving.

Our next quarterly meeting will be held at Ai church Saturday, July 23. We want a large representation from our church present.

With best wishes to the Herald and all of its readers. (Mrs.) ANDERSON.

Charlotte Church, Richland Circuit.—A large congregation enjoyed the Children's Day program, Sunday, July 17. It was good from the beginning to the end. The children showed much interest and were very faithful to practice. Mr. and Mrs. Love and Mrs. Walker trained the children.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. There were 72 present last Sunday.

Much interest has been shown in our weekly Bible class, which our pastor, Rev. Fred Love, is conducting. We are studying the Book of Romans.

We are all looking forward to our revival meeting. It begins the first Sunday in September. Rev. B. H. Vestal of Winston-Salem will assist in the services.

Cid, Denton Charge.—Our special meeting began on the 10th and closed on the 16th night. A large congregation was present, a bountiful dinner was spread on the table for all. Rev. C. O. Leonard preached a soul-stirring sermon to begin with; then he assisted Brother Henderson. Some powerful gospel was heard from time to time. And Prof. Rudd Newsom acted as organist and did some fine singing. The Billy Sunday Evangelistic band from Winston came down Wednesday night and gave us some excellent talks and singing and did much good, I believe. We had a real good meeting. We had four converts, two reclaimed, and two joined the church and more may join later. The church was revived, but the cottage prayer meetings sure kept the ball rolling fine. The latter will be at Mrs. Sarah Hughes next Saturday night, then at Mr. Webb Kepley. We had real large attendance all the time. The people showed great interest all the time, even in the day time. There was a lot of people came to hear Brother Henderson for the first time, and their presence was repeated. We had the pleasure of having Brother Love from Richland circuit one night. We were sorry that Mrs. M. C. Henderson could not come to enjoy the meeting owing to sickness in the home.

The special meeting begins at Fairview next Sunday.

The third quarterly conference will be at Cid at 2:30 on Saturday before the first Sunday in August.

We were glad to have our friends from Piney Grove and Canaan to worship with us. Space will not allow the number of names, but God knows the faithful one. He looketh not on the outside, but the heart is his will delight. Brother C. B. Way was with us and gave us a splendid talk.

Stallings, Mecklenburg Charge.—The Children's Day exercise was given on the night of July 3. The program was well carried out considering the amount of training the little ones had received. For various good reasons a large number of them were for the most part unable to attend the rehearsals; making it difficult to accomplish all that was desired. However, the children are to be congratulated on the results. We had a large crowd and we hope that the seed scattered by these little ones will continue to grow and do a good part toward carrying out God's plan for his kingdom.

We were more than delighted to have our former pastor, Rev. Robert Short, (now of Roberta) and his family with us at this exercise. He gave an interesting talk on Foreign Missions. We hope they will come again soon.

The regular monthly business meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was held on Thursday, July 7, at the home of the writer who was more than delighted to have them. The meeting for the past month was held with Mrs. P. D. Drye. Two new members were added and interesting topics discussed. Afterward delicious refreshments were served.

On Sunday, July 10, the Aid Society held its regular devotional meeting in connection with the Christian Endeavor program. We enjoy worshipping with these young people, and we pray God's blessings upon them.

Our pastor, Rev. W. T. Totten, is still a faithful shepherd, ever watching over his flock and striving to lead them to the best of his God-given ability. May God bless him in his efforts.

We are certainly glad that Mrs. Totten, who has been indisposed for the past two weeks, is very much improved. She was able to be out Sunday and worship with us in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. She is a great help to both.

MRS. P. L. GARMON, Reporter.

Efland, Orange Charge.—Sunday night, the 17th, brought to a close our revival meeting. Rev. R. A. Hunter who was our pulpit help brought to us splendid sermons. His last sermon was taken from John 3:16, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." This was indeed a touching message. He labored faithfully with us through the week. We appreciated this very much and welcome Brother Hunter back to Efland anytime he has a chance to come. There were eight conversions and two additions to the church. The church was greatly revived and much good accomplished.

We had 90 at Sunday school Sunday. This is a very good attendance for our church. Everyone seems to be taking greater interest.

Pray for us that we may push forward in all our church work.

MRS. E. S. TAYLOR, Reporter.

Chestnut Ridge, Orange Charge.—Children's Day was observed here Sunday morning, July 10. A splendid program was given to a large audience. Each child rendered his part well, and much credit is due the program committee. Our offering was $30.

After dinner, our pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, delivered a very helpful and interesting sermon, which was enjoyed by all. After which the Lord's Supper was observed. A good number partook.

We are glad to say that our Sunday school attendance is very good, but could be lots better if every member would try hard to make it so.

We ask the prayers of all Christian people, that we may do a greater work for our Master in the future than we have in the past.

Best wishes to the Herald and its many readers. J. T. HOBBS, Superintendent.

Harris Chapel, Vance Circuit.—Just a few words to the Herald, although I am not the reporter. But hope you will allow me to say a few words. Our revival meeting came to a close Friday night, July 15th. We had a real good revival. Rev. R. S. Troxler was our pulpit help, he sure gave us some fine sermons. I think they were enjoyed by all. We had twenty-one additions to the church, all uniting with this church I think. We all missed Brother Troxler as he left us, but we pray that he can be with us again in the near future. I feel that much good was accomplished through his services. Our Sunday school is very good but we are looking forward to a better one since all have been touched more deeply with the Holy Spirit. We also have prayer services every Sunday night at 8 o'clock, with different ones leading. We are glad for each one to take part in these services to help carry on the work. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. M. V. N.

Love Joy, Why Not Circuit.—Last Sunday, July 17, was a good day for the people of our church, it being the time appointed for our Children's Day service. The entire morning service was given over to the children which rendered their program well to a large audience. After the program dinner was served on the ground and a social hour enjoyed by all present. The afternoon service was in charge of The patriotic order, sons of America who made short speeches and talks to suit the occasion, also some fine music which was enjoyed by everyone present. It really seemed more like a revival meeting than a children's day service. The Lord poured out his Spirit so that one good lady just shouted His praises all over the campus. As we stated in our last report about our church being burned and destroyed we decided to take an offering for the Foreign Mission work and also for the rebuilding of our church. The total amount in money paid in and pledges in both collections was about one thousand dollars.

Mr. Frank Hulin has been appointed Secretary of the building committee and if anyone reads this that would like to help us in rebuilding our church we assure you it would be gladly received. Mr. Hulin's address is Martin's Mill, N. C.

Best wishes. HOBART REYNOLDS.

Mill Grove.—We are getting along fairly well now. We are having some very forceful sermons from Brother Hulin. It seems that everyone loves our pastor. He is not only a preacher but a pastor, also a good advising friend to all. His counsel is always of the very best. Our church has been doing fairly well this year. There are always those in the church who do not see anything to do and consequently never do anything. If it was not for the faithful few the church would not do much. Brother Hulin had an idea that a revival meeting would do good here. And he went to talking it and his friends and the good people went to work and set a time and all the preachers met and they had a good meeting; there was some good preaching done. The Baptist, Presbyterians, and Methodist all worked together, each one their time to preach. We are looking forward to our annual meetings.

We are delighted to know that Brother Dixon is to help at Love's Grove this year in the protracted meeting. We are expecting to have a good meeting.

CHAS. W. MEISHEIMER, Reporter.

Asheville.—Our work in these parts was greatly blessed by the presence of the Women's Missionary Executives in their annual meeting at Bethel Home two weeks ago. The visitors from down the state were Mrs. W. C. Hammer, Mrs. George R. Brown, Mrs. S. W. Taylor, Mrs. H. A. Garrett, Mrs. H. C. Nilholson, Misses Velna and Mary McCulloch, Mrs. D. S. Coultrane, Mrs. T. L. Speas, Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, Dr. J. F. McCulloch, and Miss Fawcett of Ohio.

The Asheville society, Mrs. C. C. McNeil president, served luncheon at Bethel Home Wednesday. The committee in charge of the luncheon were Mrs. L. M. Joyner, Mrs. C. W. Bates and Mrs. J. S. Williams. These were aided by Mrs. Ed Winslow and Mrs. Ralph Beacham. Miss Eula Taylor kindly helped with her car. Pastor Bates also aided with his car. Other Asheville people present were Mrs. Nell Ward, Mrs. E. C. Fawcett. The meeting was indeed a mountain top affair. It was good to have the meeting. Pastor and Mrs. Bates entertained the visitors in their hospitable hut in Weaverville. Our Brotherhood was blessed by a fine address by Herbert Casky of China. President and Mrs. E. C. Fawcett were our gracious host and hostess.

Dr. T. C. Amick is teaching in the Asheville Summer school.

Our Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society will meet with Mrs. E. C. Fawcet on Rosewood avenue on this Thursday afternoon, July 21st, at 2:30. The second chapter in our study book will be discussed. There will also be a special study of Japan. Mrs. E. Winslow is acting Chairman of the program committee in the absence of Mrs. Bates. REPORTER.

Harmony, Yarborough Chapel Charge.—The work here is doing nicely especially in the attendance of the young people, both in the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor Society, and great numbers of them always stay for the church service. This is very gratifying to the pastor, for it is seldom that we see so many young people in the church service. These fine young people are to be commended for their good work; may God bless them is my prayer. Indeed, folks, I doubt very much if the attendance of young people at this church can be beat in any of the rural churches anywhere.

Brother Green Taylor is confined to his home, has been sick for about seven years, and his condition is not so favorable just at the present time. Brother James A. Hughes has been unwell for some time but is able to be out again, and to take his accustomed place as the superintendent of the Sunday school here.

Oh! How we miss Grandmother Medlock in our visits to Harmony now. Brethren, 'tis indeed sad to see these older ones go, we miss them so much, but the glorious thought is that they are better off, and we know that they are at rest, and that they are waiting for us over there.

On next Sunday, fourth Sunday, we have a union or all day service for both churches, with dinner on the ground, and we hope to get all of our folks from both churches together at this time, and derive a special blessing from the Christian fellowship of this meeting.

Children's day service has not been held here yet, but will be held possibly next Sunday night, (fourth Sunday night) and we are expecting a splendid service, and a large crowd, for we always have both at Harmony.

The roads are very good indeed in spite of the wet weather of the past week; we have had some very hard rains for the past few weeks, and such severe wind, and electrical storms. The ground has been and is now so very wet, but we are so glad to see it, it is so much better than at this time last year when it was so dry.

Brethren, pray for us here in our meeting, at both of the churches which are to be held very shortly, for there is much to be done, and the time is short. Brother W. F. Ashburn of Greensboro, will help me in both of our meetings, Yarborough Chapel first, then coming right on here to Harmony, pray for us that we may have a genuine revival.

With best wishes to the Herald and all of its readers, and to all of the pastors and young people who may be in the summer conference this week, I remain,

Faithfully yours in His dear name,

E. G. COWAN, Pastor.

High Point.—We were delighted to hear Dr. A. G. Dixon on Sunday morning. He was pastor of this church for nine years, and is a great favorite with our congregation. He accomplished a great work while here, and will always share in the credit for whatever success the First church may attain. On Sunday morning he brought a splendid message on The Great Question and The Great Answer, "Whom say ye that I the son of man, am?" At the evening service the pulpit was occupied by Rev. Tom A. Sykes, pastor Central Friends church, who exchanged pulpits with Rev. E. Lester Ballard according to the plan for Sunday evening services during July. There was a good congregation to greet the visiting minister.

We are pained to announce the death of Mr. Alphonso L. Ellison in High Point Hospital on Sunday morning at 6 o'clock after an illness of several weeks. A few weeks ago he underwent a very serious operation, from which he rallied, grew better, and was taken to his home on Thurston street. His condition became grave again; and he returned to the Hospital for treatment. His death was caused by uraemic poison. Mr. Ellison was a native of Randolph county, but his parents, Albert H. and Mary H. Ellison, brought him when a small boy to High Point to live, so he was a citizen of this city practically all his life. He was almost 72 years of age, having been born August 20, 1855. He was one of the pioneer manufacturers of High Point having been associated with his uncle, Joseph Ellison, as early as 1870 in the manufacture of furniture and coffins, the factory having been located on Washington street where now stands the Wilson Motor Co. He was instrumental in organizing a number of industries including the Ellison Furniture Co., now known as the Premier. At one time he operated a furniture factory in Toccoa, Ga. In 1882 he was happily married to Miss Octavia Horney of this county, who survives him with the following five children: Messrs. Chas. Edwin, Carl, and Oscar, and Misses Myrtle and Moselle, all of this city. There are also a brother, Julius F. Ellison of this city, and a twin sister, Mrs. J. W. Davis of Danville, Va., besides eight grandchildren. Funeral rites will be conducted from the residence on Thurston street Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, being conducted by Rev. Geo. R. Brown, of Reidsville, Rev. J. M. Hilliard, and Rev. E. Lester Ballard of this city. Mrs. Ellison and the two daughters are members of First church, and the sympathy of the entire congregation is extended to them in this great bereavement. Mr. Ellison was an upright and honorable citizen, having a large number of friends who esteemed him highly and grieve to hear of his passing.

Messrs. C. L. and J. A. Gray and their families and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Spencer went to Fairfield, their old home church, last Sunday to attend Memorial and Home-coming service.

Misses Lucille Pickens and Blanche York left Saturday evening for a vacation trip to New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and Atlantic City, and they expect to be away for ten days.

Dr. and Mrs. Geo. R. Brown of Reidsville are attending Summer Conference and their hosts of friends in the city are pleased to see them again.

Rev. Paul S. Kennett has gone to New York to take special work at Columbia University Summer School.

Dr. L. B. Smith, who is most pleasantly remembered here, having conducted a series of meetings in the old church a few years ago, is a guest of his friend, Rev. E. Lester Ballard at the parsonage.

Miss Lillian McCormick of Balto., was a guest over Sunday of Rev. and Mrs. E. L. Ballard.

All the members of the two Missionary Societies are invited to the home of Mrs. R. M. Andrews on Thursday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock to hear and to meet Dr. Roberta Fleagle, returned missionary to Kalgan, China.

Mrs. W. C. Petty and two sons of Charlotte, and Mrs. Gertrude Britt Onstrott of Nashville, Tenn., spent Tuesday as guest of their cousin, Mrs. R. T. Pickens.

Clifton L. Whitaker of Gastonia spent Sunday with his mother, Mrs. C. L. Whitaker.

Yarborough.—There has been much sickness and sorrow in our midst for a while. Notices of our loss of three members will appear. How it grieves us to part with those, so long faithful to the cause.

At Yarborough Chapel the work is going along as usual, despite the extreme heat and frequent electrical storms. The five acres of cotton (God's acres) are doing very fine indeed and we hope to bring in much for the Master.

Our children's day service held last Sunday evening, was very good, the young people did splendidly. (We had to give up the pageant on account of so much sickness in the community). The offering being something over six dollars; the congregation was a large one.

Our faithful Sunday school superintendent, Brother E. M. Hipp, is back with us again after an absence of a few weeks ministering to a mother, who was ill, and who was called home recently. Brother Hipp was faithful to his trust, and tenderly we buried her two weeks ago. Our hearts go out to him, and may God bless and comfort him in his bereavement. We welcome him back to his accustomed place, in our midst.

Brother John T. Watson, (father of Mrs. Ophelia Bobo, the delegate to annual conference last fall) is confined to his home at present in a very bad condition. Let us pray for him and the loved ones who minister to him.

Brother L. B. Gosset has been suffering for some time with a broken rib or two, but is improving we are glad to note.

We were indeed glad to have had Brother M. Ivey Crutchfield visit us some time ago, and were very sorry that more could not have heard him the night he brought us the message.

I am quite sure that the people were glad to meet and welcome into our midst for a few days the oldest son of our beloved pastor, Robert Franklin Cowan of Greensboro, N. C., who was here for a few days with his parents, wish that he could stay longer.

Mrs. Cowan and son Ernest G., Jr., have both been confined to bed for several days from the effects of Typhoid Inoculation; both are better now and are out again.

Our pastor, Brother Cowan, is out again after nursing a very badly sprained ankle, caused by being tripped and falling, by the faithful collie dog, Bimbo, of the parsonage.

From the looks of the ground around the parsonage some one will soon be enjoying, roasting ears, sweet potatoes, and peanuts; the irish potato crop at the parsonage, I understand, is fine, we really believe our pastor is a farmer as well as a preacher.

Plans are on foot for a Sunday school picnic to be held in the near future, and the young people, (and old ones too) are looking forward with great pleasure to this picnic; we hereby invite the editor of the Herald to come with us on this occasion, and enjoy a good dip in Enoree river, and then some good eats on the bank later on in the afternoon.

Best wishes to the Herald and all its readers. Pray for us in our meeting, which begins the 17th of August with Brother Ashburn as pulpit help for Brother Cowan.

NO-TOBACCO LEAGUE

The No-Tobacco League of America will hold its twelfth annual convention at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 15 and 16. It is a nationally incorporated institution devoted to a thorough study of the tobacco problem with the purpose of finding a sane, practical solution of it.

Any one interested in this question is invited to attend the convention and freely participate in its deliberations. Churches, Sunday schools, Young People's Religious Societies, Parent-Teacher Associations, W. C. T. U.'s and all organizations standing for human welfare are asked to appoint representatives.

The work of the No-Tobacco League is not primarily one of reformation nor of legislation, but of education. Its motto is: "Let us keep the young folks clean from the blight of nicotine; let us teach the youth the truth about tobacco."

The League is building up a great nation-wide organization with subsidiary organizations in every state. States form county organizations to carry the program of education into every school district.

The League prints and distributes hundreds of thousand of pages of literature dealing with the various phases of the tobacco problem.

The League would like to enroll in its membership all those who have a conviction that the tobacco habit is a bad one—particularly for young folks. It is especially anxious to find men and women who are proficient and efficient to take charge of organizational and educational work in various states.

Any one who is interested and desires further information can obtain it by writing Charles M. Fillmore, General Secretary, The No-Tobacco League of America, 821 Occidental Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Hubert Gray Guthrie

Hubert Gray Guthrie, the nine months old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Guthrie, died May 5 and was buried at Concord church the following day, the writer conducting the funeral service. This little son was loved so much in the home by his parents and brothers and sisters, but God makes no mistakes. Heaven will seem nearer to Brother and Sister Guthrie since the passing of this little son. The Lord bind up their broken hearts.

Wilson

June 25th, 1927, Mr. R. D. Wilson of Weavers Chapel church passed away, at the age of about 64 years. He had been sick for more than a year. He was one of Weaver Chapel's most substantial members. He joined the church there in the early days of that church. We heard him say that he hauled the first log to the saw mill for the building of the church that stands there now.

Funeral services were held in shade of the trees at old family burying ground near his home, and his body laid to rest. The crowd of people that attended the funeral is evidence of the high esteem in which Brother Wilson was held.

He leaves behind three brothers, three sisters, his wife and four girls, and 20 grandchildren. These have the sympathy of all the church and community.

Mrs Martha Medlock

On Thursday evening, June 2, 1927, at 11:20 o'clock the sweet spirit of our dear friend, Mre. Martha Medlock, was called fom its earthly abode to dwell in that beautiful home which had been prepared for it. Although Mrs. Medlock had been in declining health for two ro three years and although she had been privilged to live on this earth to the ripe age of almost ninety years her death came as a ery sad shock to her relatives and host of friends.

"Grandmother Medlock," as she was best known by those who knew her, was a great treasure to her community as well as to her church because her daily life was an example worthy to be followed by all who were younger than she. Her sweet Christian life and cheerful disposition made many friends for her and all enjoyed very much calling to see her and carrying her some little token, if nothing more than a flower, because she showd such a deep appreciation of both the giver and the token also. She loved flowers very much and during her declining years her room was filled with them to cheer her. It seemed that the pot plants in her home bloomed especially for her pleasure as they bloomed continuously in season and out of season. She often remarked that the flowers bloomed because she loved them so dearly.

In the passing of "Grandmother Medlock" Harmony Methodist Protestant church of which she was a faithful member will feel a keen loss. As long as her physical strength permitted she attended every service of her church and enjoyed each one so much. She always had a pleasant word for each person present even to the youngest.

Even though her pew has been vacant for three years we know that her heart and prayers were with us each Sunday as we met for Sunday school.

As Grandmother Medlock's physical strength waned her spiritual strength greatly increased as was shown by her gentleness and patience during her illness. She eagerly watched each step taken by those who so tenderly cared for her and begged that they go to less trouble for her. She always expressed her appreciation for each deed done for her and was especially appreciative of all that her faithful physician, Dr. Joseph B. Workman, did for her.

Her body is resting in the Harmony church cemetery and beautiful flowers are blooming over her. On the Resurrection morn she will be caught up to meet with those whom she loved for a great reunion where separation will be no more.

"Grandmother" leaves five daughters, three sons, two step-daughters and a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, also a host of relatives and friends to mourn her loss.

The little poem expresses her life beautifully:

We are but small in this great world,
An atom in His sight,
And yet He loves, He keeps, He saves,
E'en us from endless night.

In me the life of God is felt;
It makes my soul rejoice,
To know that He, the great "I am,"
Has called me by His voice.

He is my God; I am His child,
And I His name shall bear,
And when I see Him on His throne
My soul shall know no fear.

While winter is upon my head,
And life is near its end,
Eternal spring is in my heart,
For God is still my friend.

May God's richest blessings abide with each member of the bereaved family to sustain, comfort, and keep each one close to Him.

A SINCERE FRIEND.

ORIGIN OF SOAP

It is believed that soap was originally made by the Phoenicians from whom the art was learned by the Gauls. Pliny thought soap was a Gallic invention, although he preferred the soap made by the Germans. There is reason for believing that the Romans learned of the use of soap from the Germans rather than the Gauls. The original method of soap making was very crude. Tallow was treated with wood ashes, goat's fat and the ashes of beech trees being preferred. The method was improved somewhat by the Romans. A complete soap factory was found among the ruins of Pompeii Although soap is mentioned in the Old Testament, it is believed that the word translated as "soap" refers simply to the ashes of plants and other similar simple purifying agents. Before the invention of soap the inhabitants of Europe used the common plant known as soapwort to wash with. The Romans used fuller's earth.

A HELPFUL SUGGESTION

William Shaw

We are constantly reminded by those who are in a position to know that the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church lack adequate training in the meaning and value of the communion service.

I suspect that many pastors use the regular prayer-meeting preceding the day for the celebration of Holy Communion as a preparatory service. In connection with that meeting I have found the responsive service which follows not only helpful but valuable. I arranged it for the preparatory service, but find it also helpful during the administration of the Lord's Supper. It may be that the suggestion, if not the responsive service itself will be useful to those pastors who are seeking ways to deepen and enrich the lives of those committed to their care. The responsive reading follows:

When was the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion instituted?

On Thursday night of Passion Week—the night before the crucifixion of Jesus.

Where was it instituted and what were the circumstances?

It was instituted by Jesus Christ in the Upper Room at the close of the Passover meal.

What were the words of institution?

He brake the bread and said: This is my body which is broken for you. Likewise He took the cup and said: This is my blood of the New Covenant which is shed for you. Do this in remembrance of me.

What then does this "Holy Communion" commemorate?

The sacrificial death of Jesus.

Are the elements—bread and wine—changed into the actual body and blood of Jesus?

No, the bread and wine remain unchanged.

In what way then do we partake of Christ?

By faith, obedience, and love, we partake of the spirit, purpose, and power of Jesus.

When do we partake of this "Holy Communion" unworthily?

When we receive the bread and wine, but reject the spirit, purpose, and power of the Christ they represent.

What then does this "Holy Communion" mean to us?

It is a memorial of His death.

It is a confession of our faith in Him.

It is a pledge of our fidelity to Him.

It is a declaration of our unity in Him.

It is an acknowledgement of His Saviourhood.

This Holy Communion then is a sacrament, who should partake of it?

All who receive Jesus Christ as Saviour and acknowledge Him as Lord.

In what attitude of heart and mind should we come to this Holy Communion?

An attitude of penitence, reverence, and expectant faith that finds expression in prayer for divine grace.

Let us all repeat the Apostle's Creed.—Zion's Herald.

INVITATION

A cordial invitation is extended to all who are sincerely interested in the solution of the tobacco problem to attend the Annual Convention of The No-Tobacco League, participate in its public discussions of the various phases of the question and help determine the wisest courses to pursue.

The No-Tobacco League recognizes the fact that there are many institutions that are vitally interested in the solution of the tobacco problem. Tobacco has a sinister influence upon the work of the church, the public school, the home, business and social relationships, and in fact, all aspects of life.

For this reason we have consistently sought the sympathetic and active co-operation of the W. C. T. U., Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Parent-Teacher Associations, Women's Clubs and all societies interested in human welfare. Churches and religious organizations should especially give consideration to this question. Representatives of all such organizations will be cordially welcome to participate in our convention.

—Virgil Guire, for the last five years mayor of Lenoir, has resigned his office in the interest of his health.

—The World League Against Alcoholism will hold a congress at Winona Lake, Ind., August 17 to 23. Many delegates will be in attendance from foreign countries.

—Mrs. R. G. Vaughn of Greensboro died suddenly on Tuesday afternoon of heart failure. She was a daughter of Dr. J. Henry Smith, long pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Greensboro.

Wholesale Slander of Youth

The public has been distressed and alarmed by the serious charges that have been brought against the young people of our day. Some have accepted these charges at face value, and have wondered why the new generation should be worse than any generation gone before. The charges would have been less disturbing if people had paused to ask, Are they true? We believe these charges to be slanderous. They are made with an evil purpose.

There is the slander of the bootleggers, asserting that young people are drinking more than ever before. They must know that it is a lie, but they are interested in having people believe it true. And it is easy to see what their motive is. They wish to discredit the prohibitory law against strong drink in the eyes of the American people, hoping to secure its repeal. Of course there are some drinking young people, unfortunately for them; but to assert that drinking is common among young Americans is a base slander.

Then there is the slander of the atheists. They are trying to make the impression that atheism has a hold on the youth of the day far beyond the reality. Probably no generation of young people in the history of the world has had a more intelligent and well-grounded faith in God than the present generation. An ignoramus might easily be an atheist, but it is very difficult for a person that has received the revelations of modern science to resist the conclusion that God is. There may be a few atheists among the youth of the day, but they are wilfully so and are so exceptional as not to be considered in any generalization.

Then there is the slander that the youth of the day are more given to sins against chastity than any preceding generation. This is perhaps the basest slander of the three. In the nature of the case the slander is difficult to disprove. The burden of proof is upon those who make the charge, and they have never produced the convincing evidence. Individual offences occur, and these are multiplied in imagination and the impression is made that such offenses are common.

The world is not as bad as these revilers of youth would have us believe. The millennium has not come yet, but it is coming. The Gospel of Christ has not lost its power. Men have not ceased to appreciate the difference between virtue and vice. The judgment throne set at the end of days is still before us in all its momentous reality, and the young people of our day are thinking about the serious meaning of life. Only a small number have lost their reason in the mad revelry of the riotous livers.

Let Us Have Peace

Prophets of evil are predicting war, the worst war that ever was. This is the way to bring about war, the worst that ever was. The bringing on of war is more a matter of psychology than of economics. The spirit of war must be aroused before there can be any war. It is with nations as with individual men. In some individuals the fighting spirit may be aroused and when that has been done it does not require much more to bring on the battle. With other men it is very difficult to arouse the fighting spirit; they are by choice men of peace, they do not propose to fight or to be led into a fight. This talk about war is calculated to arouse the inflammable nations and precipitate war.

It is not necessary to have another war. Let us not think war up, but think it down. Let those interested in war and in bringing on war shout themselves hoarse. Let us hope for peace and cultivate the spirit of peace. Let us strive to live peaceably with all men and all nations. Let us talk peace.

"It Is a Grand Life"

These were the last audible words of Dr. Roger Ogburn after he received his mortal injury. He was lying on his bed in the hospital with anxious attendants gathered about him. His consciousness seemed to be returning and they heard him say these words. They hoped for further words, but those were the last. What did he mean?

We take it that these words came out of his sub-consciousness rather than his consciousness and that he was uttering what was in his mind near the surface before he received his injury. As he rode along in the ambulance thinking of the service he was rendering to men knocked out by disease and injury, he felt in his soul that the life of the true physician is a grand life.

Another supposition is possible but perhaps less probable. He had his eyes open to the realities that succeed this life, and in view of the splendid vision of the future to which this life rightly lived is the gateway, he exclaimed, "It is a grand life."

Whatever was his precise meaning, it is a splendid dying testimony. It seems to come from a soul that has high appreciation of God's good world.

"The Land and the Book"

Years ago a Bible scholar named Thompson traveled in Palestine and then wrote a book called "The Land and the Book," showing the correspondence between the features of Palestine and Bible references to it. He thus overturned the theory that the Bible is a book of European origin. It must have been written by men in the country it so accurately describes. The hypothesis that the book is a cunningly devised fable is not tenable. A fiction could not have been so true to fact. Nobody could have guessed so well. There could be no doubt that the men who wrote the Bible knew Palestine.

Recently Dr. W. T. Ellis, a prominent American newspaper correspondent, has traveled in Bible lands far more than Mr. Thompson did, and he confirms and corroborates the conclusions of Thompson. He says that new discoveries in these Bible lands frequently lend confirmation to Bible narratives. Instead of discrediting the Bible, they establish the truth of the Bible in its references to places.

Not only do Bible lands match the Bible accounts, but additional confirmation of the Bible story is found in the peoples of Bible lands. The Jews and the Arabs of today bear testimony to the correctness of Bible history. The man who tries to set the Bible aside as an untrustworthy witness has a very difficult task on his hand. The Book will not down. Its message is too valuable.

EACH YEAR ADDED SHOULD BRING BETTER PHILOSOPHY OF LIFE

Some Birthday Reflections

By LUTHER K. LONG

The anniversary of my birth has just recently come and gone. The repeated recurrence of this anniversary tends to make me thoughtful. Why should one live, how are the adversities and the successes of life to be met, what enjoyments are to be sought, what is the probable outcome of it all? These are some questions that force themselves on our minds.

A Pair of Cat-Birds

I am greatly interested in the house-hold affairs of a pair of cat birds. Early in the spring they came from their winter sojourn further south. In due time they decided to make a home in the lilac bush east of our house, at which we were very well pleased. They built a nest, four eggs were deposited, and they brought up a family—the whole performance being enlivened with almost constant singing.

With this first family out of the way these industrious songsters began another nest on a much lower limb of the same bush. I suggested to them that they were taking unnecessarily hazardous risks—for, while we do not keep a cat, the neighbor's felines are often seen prowling about—but the birds went on with their plans regardless. Four eggs were deposited, and Mrs. C. B. was brooding. One morning I noticed the nest was over-turned, the eggs were broken, but the absence of loose feathers indicated that the bird had escaped. After a day or two of quiet the pair began singing again and were soon at work on another nest in the lilac bush north of the house. This was on a higher limb, but I wished they had gone still further up. Only two eggs had been laid when a similar catastrophe over-took this nest and its contents.

I was quite sure these birds would now go to a grown-up fence-row, a few rods away, in which were some tall young locusts. They liked to be near human friends, however, and it was only a few days when they were singing as merrily as ever and building another nest, this time returning to the lilac east of the house. They went almost to the top of the bush. Four eggs are now in the nest, Mrs. C. B. is brooding again, and it looks as though their longing for another family will soon be gratified, and they will be happy feeding their young and teaching them something of the ways of life in this world of food, and fear, and song.

Living by Instinct

Some people take life very much as do these cat birds. They are guided and goverened almost entirely by native instincts and impulses. They do not use their heads very much. They mate, they build their homes, live more or less comfortably, bring up their families, teach their children what little they know concerning the good old ways of life, and expect them to repeat in large measure the experiences of their parents.

This would not be so bad were it not that something has happened to mankind that has not happened to the birds, at least not to any great extent. Men have developed a different sort of head-piece. Their reason, and judgment, and conscience are now supposed to control and to determine their conduct, thus superseding or even eradicating their instincts and impulses. There are advantages in leading the happy-go-lucky life—without responsibility and without guilt—but humans have passed that stage never to see it again in this world. They are condemned or commended according as they do ill or well.

Better to Die Than to Live?

Jonah announced that in forty days Nineveh would be overthrown, but the city still stood and the discredited prophet was in a pet. The gracious shade of the gourd no longer tempered the heat of the sun, for a worm had smitten the root of the rapidly growing plant, and he wished that he might die, saying, "It is better for me to die than to live." Jonah used his head here, but he used it to such poor purpose that the outcome in his time of trouble was not so good as following instinct in the case of the cat birds. They surmounted discouragement and adversity, he succumbed to it.

Certain boys and girls of high school age have decided that life is not worth living, and have cut short their careers. A noticeable number of college young people have found life so hard and unsatisfactory, or have thought their cup of happiness so thoroughly drained, and have applied their intelligence and conscience to the problems of living to such poor purpose that they have found themselves driven to the necessity of cutting the knot as the easiest way of untying it. A man with a wife and two or three children becomes infatuated with another man's wife or with a young girl. The heads of such people have been so poorly used that in many cases poisons and pistols have been called in to end trouble by ending life, doing away with future birth-days. One is led to question whether the restraints of instinct might even now be of more services to a considerable proportion of people than their inadequately developed and applied intelligence and moral sense. I have seen no indications that the cat birds ever contemplated committing suicide, and surely they have had trouble enough for a single season. But they have always come up singing and gone on with vigor.

Days Few and Evil?

One's attitude toward the passing days and years counts for much in estimating one's valuation of life. When Joseph brought his aged father into the presence of Pharaoh, that monarch, politely and properly enough in accordance with oriental usage, asked, "How old art thou?" Jacob's answer was significant: "The days of the years of my pilgrimage are a hundred and thirty years: few and evil have been the days of the years of my life." Making all due allowance for the oriental custom of speaking deprecatingly of any thing connected with one's self, we still have in this a very bad way of looking at life and one's recurring birth-days.

"What's the use of being a farmer? The weather is against you all the time—too hot or too cold, too wet or too dry, insects and diseases are after you and your crops constantly, and if you do succeed in raising more than you must consume for yourself there is no market for it. Why should I bring up children, they will never show any profit or gratitude? Why should I do anything for the community, no one cares to do anything for me?"

A person with such a slant on life would hardly expect to be congratulated on his birth-day, and you would not look to him for congratulations and wishes for many happy returns of the anniversary of your own birth.

Be Merry, Tomorrow We May Die?

Any creature that fails to find pleasure in eating and drinking and in reproducing its kind will soon become extinct. It was not by accident but by necessity that pleasure in these things was carried over into the lives of humans. In a state of nature instincts and impulses so controlled the lower animals that they did not as a rule so indulge themselves as to bring on the sufferings due to excess, and their appetites and passions were not stimulated for commercial purposes. Men, using their limited powers of observation and reflection on certain facts of life, have many times failed rightly to proportion the elements concerned in making a worth-while life. So they have exhorted each other: "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die." Eating, drinking, and the indulgence of passion have been so commercialized and stimulated that there is need for the best use possible of one's head piece—good sense and conscience—in order not to descend in these matters at least as low as the level of our savage ancestors. Not a good life, but a swift and sensuous life is what many people are after today—and that sort of program fails to give satisfaction.

Character, Service, Hope

When a friend reaches another anniversary of his birth what should we have in mind as we congratulate him? I think it should be something like this: May your character become more truly Christian, may your service in behalf of men become finer and more effective, and may your hope for the life to come grow clearer and stronger. Character, service, hope. I think that is about what Paul had in mind when he said: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Paul wanted to live the character of Christ and to serve in the spirit of Christ; and he believed that to die in that state of mind, and in that relation to Christ, would assure him the best things possible in Christ for the life beyond.

The person who lives in this spirit and looks forward with this hope is able to stand the hardships and misfortunes of life with steadiness and courage. I would not minify the difficulties that may come with age and infirmities, with failing strength and diminishing resources; but I do desire to greatly, though not unreasonably, magnify the good things to be had now and always by the person whose trust is in Christ. He enjoys his family and friends, he delights in the fellowship of the church and the community, he finds pleasure in children and flowers and birds—all nature speaks to him of the heavenly Father and his loving care. He endeavors to live here the best life possible for him, and dies in the hope of a richer experience of continued life beyond.

ANTI-NOISE CRUSADE

Dear Sir,

A letter I sent to Editors and Mayors of large cities, suggesting an Anti-Noise Week, has already produced good results.

Will you earnestly consider this matter.
Noise is a nerve destroyer.
Noise lessens efficiency.
Noise is the greatest menace of our times.
Noise is akin to vulgarity.
Noise can and should be largely eliminated.
Begin today. Stop needless noise in your office and home.
Discourage loud talking and the slamming of doors.
Suppress superfluous noise at every opportunity.
Advocate and promote an Anti-Noise Week in your City.
Offer a prize for an Anti-Noise poster and suggestions.
Help to arouse public opinion about this vital subject.

Think out other ways in which noise can be suppressed and put them into daily practice.

Yours sincerely,
GRENVILLE KLEISER.

YET THERE IS ROOM

Day is declining, and the sun is low;
The shadows lengthen, light makes haste to go.
The bridal hall is filling for the feast;
Pass in, pass in! and be the Bridegroom's guest.

It fills, it fills, that hall of jubilee;
Make haste, make haste; 'tis not too full for thee.
Pass in, pass in! the banquet is for thee;
That cup of everlasting love is free.

All heaven is there, all joy! Go in, go in;
The angels beckon thee the prize to win.
Louder and sweeter sounds the loving call:
Come, lingerer, come; enter this festal hall.

—Horatius Bonar.

CHILDREN'S SAYINGS

A small boy answered the door bell and met a lady at the door. "I see you have rooms to rent," said the lady. "Have you any rats and mice?" "No," said the boy, "but I think I could get you some."

A grocer put a new boy to work and gave him some instructions. Among other things he said, "Now if any one comes in and asks for something and we happen to be out of that particular article just think of something nearly like it and ask if that will do. Very soon a lady came in and asked: "Have you any fresh green stuff today?" "No," said the boy, "but we have some nice blueing."

A sign read "Boy wanted." A boy came along and took down the sign and handed it to the proprietor. "What did you bring that in here for?" said the man in astonishment. "You won't need it out there any more," replied the boy, "I am here to take the job." He got the job.

"Say, do you love sister Emma?" said a small boy to his sister's sweetheart. "Why do you ask that question?" said the young man, blushing. "She said the other day she would give five dollars to know. You tell me and I will get the five dollars and divide with you."

"Johnny," said the teacher. "Why are you sitting on that boy?" "He pasted me in the eye," said Johnny, in anger. "But didn't I tell you to count a hundred before you let your angry passions rise?" "Yes'm and I am doing it, but I am sitting on him so he will be here when I am done counting."

James called for some canary seed. "Is it for your mother?" asked the clerk. "No, of course not, it is for the bird."

"What are you crying that way for?" said a kind lady to a small girl who was crying. "Because it is the only way I can cry."

On a father's return in the evening the little four-year-old said, "There was a man here to see you today." "Did he have a bill?" "No, nothing but a nose just like you."

"Don't bring your dog in the house. It is full of fleas," said the lady to a boy at the door. "If that's the case of course I will not bring the dear thing in; I had no idea you kept your house in that fix."

The teacher said to the class, "Now name something of importance that did not exist a hundred years ago." Little Katie stood up and said, "Me."

"Why, Jackie, open the door and let sister in. Don't you see it is raining?" "Can't do it, mama; I'm Noah and Sallie is the sinner and she must stay out in the wet, don't you see?"

A little girl at school gave the following definition of a frog. "A frog is a great big green bug with its mouth always open, and it is always standing up in front and sitting down behind."

Will and Ned agreed to play being animals. Will said, "I'll be a pig and wallow in the mud and grunt." Ned said, "I'll be a calf and walk around on all fours and beller." Will found a pond of water nearby and got down in it and rolled and grunted until his clothes were in an awful plight and mud. Finally his part got tiresome, and he said to Ned, "I don't want to be a pig any longer, I want to be a calf and beller." Ned said, "It will be your time to beller when your mother sees your clothes.—Texas Advocate.

—Few things help more than hospitality in maintaining a successful church. Hospitable homes bring church members into contact with one another and with those that are not members of the church. Hospitality is one of the finest possible evidences of our Christianity. "I was a stranger," said Christ, "and ye took me in."—C. E. World.

The WORK and the WORKERS

We are just back from the Summer Conferences which were held in the High Point College. And many said to me, "It is the best conference I ever attended." It is indeed a good conference from beginning to end. I am supposing that some one else will make full report of both conferences to the Herald, so I will only say here—There were 72 of our ministers and preachers present during the conference. Not all of these were there through the conference, but that many were there at some time. Then Dr. T. M. Johnson came up on Monday morning just to look in on us, making the 73rd one who was there. He is very much improved in health, and is looking so much better than when I saw him last. A note from Brother Hulin also states that he is better. Then the president of the Young People's Summer Conference reported that 108 registered for the course, and of that number 102 received certificates for work completed. This was indeed a splendid showing.

The Rural Church

The pastor's conference was largely devoted to a study of the rural church, and the discussions, we believe, were helpful. It is the purpose of Rev. C. W. Bates, to ask Dr. McCulloch to give us a rural church number of the Herald soon, and in that number publish the papers presented during the Summer Conference, so I will not anticipate these papers by reporting here what was said.

Evangelism

Evangelism is the key-note of all church work, and this note was certainly sounded loudly and splendidly in our Pastors' Summer Conference. Our souls were strangely stirred as we listened to these thrilling messages on evangelism. Just now many of our rural churches, especially, are in the midst of their revival services, and from now until the middle of October many more meetings will be held.

Once more let me suggest that all praying people, who read these notes, join very earnestly in prayer that God's richest blessings may be upon these meetings, and that there may be a splendid ingathering in all our churches. We believe it is not too great to expect of the Lord that He will give us a ten per cent increase in membership this year provided we will trust, and pray, and work properly. This is the chief end of all our work as church people, to win the unsaved and lead them into the fold.

Almost every day we read of tragic deaths brought about by automobile accidents.

As we write these notes our hearts are grieved and saddened at the tragic death of Dr. Roger Ogburn, a young man of only 27 years, and a son of Rev. and Mrs. T. J. Ogburn. He was a bright, interesting and promising young physician. He had just completed his medical course at Cornell University, and was an interne at Bellevue hospital in New York when he was assigned to ambulance duty. It was while answering an emergency call to attend a gased soldier of the recent war that the fatal crash came between the ambulance and a taxi that snuffed out the life of this noble young man, and thus he died in service, a direct result of that all too cruel war.

He is survived by his mother; two brothers, Mr. Thomas Ogburn of Richmond, Va., and Dr. H. H. Ogburn of Greensboro; and four sisters, Mrs. W. C. Jones of High Point, Mrs. L. L. Gaskill of New Mexico, Mrs. Bascomb Whitaker of Oak Ridge, and Miss Hilda Ogburn of Columbia University. These, together with many relatives and friends, are grief stricken of this sudden and tragic going away of their loved one. We deeply, prayerfully and tearfully sympathize with them. May God bless and keep.

CHRIST A POWER IN MODERN BUSINESS

Twenty-five hundred Bibles were given this Christmas by John H. Kirby to the heads of the families of all his employes. Mr. Kirby, president of the Kirby Lumber Company of East Texas, is one of the greatest business men of the country. As an executive of conspicuous practical ability his opinion on the value of the Bible, expressed in a foreword signed by him and placed in every Bible of the 2,500, will carry weight, not only with the men who receive them but with many other business men also. Mr. Kirby's splendid tribute to the vital power of the Bible follows:

"The general diffusion of the Bible is the most effectual way to humanize mankind; to purify and exalt the general system of public morals; to give efficiency to the just precepts of all law; to emphasize the wisdom of prudence, honesty and fortitude, and to improve all the relations of international, social and domestic life.

"To the Bible we are indebted for progress made in true civilization and to its influence we must look for guidance in the future.

"The Bible is the light of understanding; the joy of the heart, the fullness of hope; the clarifier of affections; the consoler of sorrow, the guide of the soul; the lamp of the feet; the light of the pathway; the telescope sent from Heaven to reveal to the eye of man the way of life here and the amazing glories of the hereafter.

"I speak as a man of the world to men of the world when I say the Bible is the Book of books, and needs to be read at all ages and in all conditions of human life.

"I gladly subscribe my sincere faith in and love for the Holy Bible, and would commend it to the earnest perusal and affectionate regard of all my friends. In keeping with the sentiments herein expressed, it affords me great pleasure to present to you this volume of the Holy Scripture, with expressions of my good wishes and enduring love."

It is probably true that ours is a grossly materialistic age; yet so long as such incidents as this can occur—and they do happen on all sides—we are not wholly materialistic. Such an act as this does not represent merely the conviction of a single man. It represents the estimate that a practical leader of men places upon the symbolic power of the Bible in the minds of most men, whether they read it or not—a symbol for the best of such creed as every man, consciously or unconsciously, formulates for himself. Take away the symbol on which that creed is founded, and the very standard of honest living and fair dealing must vanish. Glorify that symbol, as John Kirby has done with all the force of his prestige as a great business leader, and the foundation of decent living is strengthened; the level of morality and of integrity is elevated. The spiritual values of life for all of us are enhanced. It was a splendid thing that John H. Kirby did.—Manufacturers' Record.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

A Fine Vacation Trip

Rev. Paul F. Warner is in America. No, not on a furlough. On a vacation trip. Paul gives the explanation that has made such an exceptional vacation trip for a missionary possible in the following words: "Gifts from friends, and the fact that a single man free (?) of domestic responsibilities can travel quite cheaply, have made this trip possible." Isn't it fine to have thoughtful, kind and generous friends to make such a vacation trip as that possible, to make the term of service in Japan seem just a little shorter to him and to gladden and cheer the hearts of the home folk to have him in the home with them for a few days? Such is the rare privilege of few missionaries. This trip is longer, of course, but he will not be absent from his post of duty any longer than if he would have taken his vacation in Karuizawa, Japan, as he had planned before the opportunity for the trip home came to him. He will be in America from about July 15 to August 8.

Rev. Warner Honored

At the last election of officers of our Japan Mission Rev. Mr. Warner was honored by being elected Chairman of the Mission. Relative to his work he writes, "I have been quite happy in the work here in Japan. God has blessed me with perfect health. I have made many friends among Japanese, some of whom will be life-long friends, I am sure. I have felt quite at home among these people. I have been doing some preaching lately and that has been most rewarding. After all, there is nothing to be compared with the joy of preaching the Gospel. I wish I might have more time for language study and preaching. It seems so much more effective and is far more rewarding than routine school work. Pray for me that God may use me largely as He sees best." Would that we had scores of our fine young men who might have the vision that Paul has, and willing to make the full and complete dedication of their lives as he has made of his!

Klein-Coulbourn Memorial Church Dedicated

In his letter he brings this other encouraging information. "Today"—June 26, 1927—"the new Klein-Coulbourn Memorial Church is being dedicated. What a beautiful building it is! I wish you all might see it. Fuller detail of the building and dedication will be given later. I just want to take this opportunity to mention how proud and happy and grateful we are for this splendid edifice. May God make this church a mighty power in winning many souls for the Kingdom!"

This fuller description of this new Memorial Church and dedication will be given by Rev. Mr. Warner in the near future, and will appear in these columns of our Church papers. We hope, also, to have a picture of the church to appear with these articles so that you can see how beautiful it is.

Have YOU made YOUR investment in this great enterprise yet? I received a nice letter just the other day containing a check for this Memorial Church to be credited to the budget of the Attica (O) Church. This check came from one of the superannuates of the Ohio Conference and his estimable wife, Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Gray. For years Rev. Mr. Gray has been an invalid, unable to preach or to do any physical labor. But his and Mrs. Gray's hearts are in the work and they wanted to make their investment in this new church. Are there not many others that want to make a like investment? Credit to your local church will be gladly given. Some have promised an investment by subscription but have not yet paid the subscription. Why not make this the time when you will make your word good and help to liquidate the debt on this fine church?

Your Executive Secretary knows of one church that has just passed through an extensive and costly building program. At the time of the Children's Day service the General Conference budget was nearly paid, so that an appeal for a large offering to meet the budget in full could not be made. At the request of the pastor this church agreed to give, in its Children's Day offering, one hundred dollars as a special contribution for the Klein-Coulbourn Memorial Church. It made good its agreement. Other churches can make similar contributions if they will. The way is still open for such contributions. Who will be the next?

S. W. Rosenberger, Executive Secretary.

A RUNNING START

That is the object of the Rally Day idea, to enable the church to begin the work of the fall and winter with revived enthusiasm and consecration. By means of a suitable and inspiring program every department of the church is quickened into new life and zeal.

Of the four special days observed in the Methodist Protestant Church, Rally Day has been given to the Board of Education. It is the one opportunity we have of going directly to the churches in behalf of our work. It is very gratifying to know that, judged by the gradual increase in the offerings, the denomination is trying to give the cause of Christian education a chance to breathe and to grow.

Since about two thirds of the income from the General Conference Budget came last year from the Rally Day offerings our friends will realize how much depends upon generous contributions at that time. We are anxious to make the program prepared for Rally Day helpful to the local church. We are equally anxious that they shall appreciate how much our usefulness as a Board depends upon the financial returns from Rally Day.

The Rally Day programs will be ready for distribution early in August. Sample copies will then be sent to every pastor and Sunday school superintendent whose address we have been able to secure. An order card is enclosed which should be filled out immediately so there will be no delay in receiving all the programs that are necessary. No charge is made for these programs. The only condition stipulated is that an earnest effort will be made to secure as large an offering as possible for the Board of Education.

Frank W. Stephenson, Exec. Sec., Board of Education.

MONEY

"Money is not 'filthy lucre' in itself, but only in its use. Let not the preacher say that it is evil, for men will not believe him. Conflagration and flood may carry devastation, yet no man will believe that fire and water are other than human benison. Money is power. If evil men seek after power, by how much more ought righteous men to covet it! It is therefore less than intelligent to cry down the race for riches; and because it is, unintelligent men will not heed the preaching that warns them of their wealth. If a saving gospel shall find the rich men of today, and reach the men who shall be rich tomorrow, it must recognize material values as they actually exist, and then exalt those values into spiritual potency. It must be the preacher and not the promoter who calls men to be rich. The subtle currents that lift and depress value must be recognized as spiritual forces. Money must not be left a sordid thing in the alleys of avarice; it must be enthroned among the spiritual gifts which good men covet."—Harvey Reeves Calkins.

YOUR VIRTUES

Mary was so discouraged; she said to her mother: "Mother, I did try to do right today, but I was ill-natured and I did not feel real happy when with Ada because she was so slow, I had to help you so much this morning when you were ill—and I know you are the very best mother in all this big world!"

Her mother smiled as she replied: "Mary, did you ever go to bed at night when the earth was bare and brown, and then wake up when the sun said 'Good morning,' to you, to find the earth all covered with green, every tree in bud and blossom and leaf, and every flower in bloom? Have you not noticed that the flowers and plants come gradually, one following the other? Little by little they come in the springtime until we exclaim: "How beautiful!"

"Now there is Granny Carpenter, who lives in the little house on the corner. It almost seems as if she had no failings —and yet none of us are perfect—but she has been adding virtues to her life for seventy years. When I said to her: 'Granny, how can you be so good?' she said, 'Don't you remember what Paul said, 'Yet not I but Christ liveth in me?' "

"I have a bit of encouragement for you; let me tell what Granny said about you only yesterday; she said, 'Mrs. Conway, I do so enjoy your Mary; it seems to me the dear girl is growing more helpful and unselfish every day. I am sure that I was a very selfish and thoughtless girl at her age. She will keep right on adding virtues because she loves the Lord Jesus Christ.' "

Surely the grasses and the flowers and the trees never say: "All together, now, and then spring up in a moment. They come one by one. Do your virtues not come that way—and no other way? You do not add them all in a moment.

Why, if your life became absolutely perfect in a moment, your father might say: "Mother, is our Mary ailing; she does not seem like herself of late?" Or again your mother might say: "Father, I think I must feel Mary, when she is sound asleep, to see if she is developing wings."

Do you remember to thank your Master for every victory, for every little added virtue? Alexander is said to have wept because he had no more worlds to conquer, but you will never have any need of following his example. Possibly you kept sweet only today when a chum was mean and provoking. Your lip-guard was on duty, and your tongue was fast-locked when impatient words seemed to say, "Let me out."—Selected.

"WE WALK BY FAITH"

Lost in a London fog—hopelessly lost and bewildered, and clinging to a lamp post, not knowing how to take the next step. He heard a firm step approaching. He said to himself, "That man steps out as if he knew his way," and called out for help. The man who was passing stopped and said, "Are you in trouble? Can I help you?" The man who had lost his way replied, "I cannot see my way and wish to go to Russell Square."

"Very well, take my arm and I will lead you there."

So the two started out in the thick fog and swiftly and surely without so much as a misstep, the leader guided his companion to his home.

"How did you do it?" cried the man who had lost his way; "How could you see your way?"

"I didn't see it," was the answer. "I am blind. I felt my way."

If we as Christians, feel lost in the fog, let us cease trying to see the way and content ourselves with feeling it, step by step, in company with a Guide who knows the way. Let us "feel our way through daily and hourly experiences of His wisdom, His faithfulness, His love. Never through life shall we see a long, straight path. But always, always if we are lost in the fog of doubt, of perplexity, of fear, let us step forth bravely, and feel our way with God."—Selected.

"DELIVER US FROM EVIL"

Our Father which art in heaven . . . "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Deliver us from the almost unbelievable thing of which we are in constant danger, forgetting Thee. Forgetting Thy holiness while we follow some earthly desire. Forgetting Thy omniscence. Thy transcendent wisdom, while we set up our own childish opinions. Forgetting the essence of Thy nature, love, while we trample on and wound others. Oh, deliver us hour by hour, and moment by moment from the supreme folly of forgetting God.

"Deliver us from evil." Deliver us from the presumption of setting up self, even in the very presence of God. From saying by our lives and words, "I know Thou seest and dost claim my love and absolute obedience and loyalty: but I want this and this my way. I see you there, God, but I—" "I know you said, "if any would come after me let him deny himself, and take up His cross daily and follow Me! but I am a very superior and important person very desirous of my own will and way—" Oh, deliver us from setting up self on the throne in our hearts while we nail Thee back on the cross. Deliver us from this supreme presumption of consciously and deliberately setting self above Thee.

"Deliver us from evil." Deliver us from that which Thy Son when He came to earth to reveal the heart of God to His creatures, taught ever by precept and example to the greatest of all sins, unkindness. Oh, deliver us from this evil. Make us to remember that when we cause one to suffer, "even the least of these Thy brethren," that we do this wrong "unto Thee." Deliver us, don't let us do these things, our Father which art in heaven. Thou canst "deliver us," come and deliver us in this our greatest weakness. We beg of Thee, snatch back our hands reached out to wound; halt our feet; frighten us into silence, as we would speak harsh, embittering words. Arouse us as from stupid sleep to say loving, encouraging words to hungry, aching hearts; to cheer on and inspire despondent spirits. Oh, our God, whose love is tenderer than any mother's, come and encamp in hearts that are cold and hard and willing to hurt and make our hearts warm and soft and good and kind. Oh, deliver, deliver from this supreme sin of wounding others. Oh, "deliver us from evil!"—By Brown-Gray.

THE PROMISES OF GOD

The promises of God are to the believer an inexhaustible mine of wealth. Happy is it for him if he knows how to search out their secret veins, and enrich himself with their hid treasures! They are an armory containing all manner of offensive and defensive weapons. Blessed is he who has learned to enter into the sacred arsenal, to put on the breast-plate and the helmet, and to lay his hand to the spear and to the sword! They are a surgery in which the believer will find all kinds of restoratives and blessed elixirs; nor lacks there an ointment for every wound, a cordial for every faintness, a remedy for every disease. Blessed is he who is well skilled in the heavenly pharmacy, and knoweth how to lay hold on the healing promises of God! The promises are to the Christian a storehouse of food. They are the granaries which Joseph built in Egypt, or as the golden pot wherein the manna was preserved. Blessed is he who can take the five barley loaves and fishes of promise, and break them till his five thousand necessities shall be supplied, and he is able to gather up baskets of fragments!—Spurgeon.

GOD'S FAITH IN US

We hear much of trusting God. We are exhorted to "have faith in God," to "trust in the Lord," and these exhortations are enforced by examples of heroes of faith the record of whose lives not only adorn the pages of the Holy Book but all the pages of worth while history. The faith required of us is the basis of all achievement. Without faith God cannot be pleased because nothing will be done; all will be kept "hidden in a napkin;" there will be no preparation for crops, no sofing of seed, no social organization, no industry, no anything. "Have faith in God."

God has faith in us. Of this we hear too little. We need to think much of God's trust in us that we may strive to be worthy. All belongs to God. The world is His with all things therein. We are His. All our latent or developed powers are His. Nothing is or can be held by any man in fee simple.

No sensible man invests his all in an enterprise or places it in the hands of persons without confidence that his investment will be wisely and honestly handled. God, who is infinitely wise, shows His faith in man by entrusting all His "goods" to him. He reserves nothing. With implicit faith He delivers His goods to "each according to his several ability," to one five talents, to another two, to another one, simply saying, "occupy till I come." This transforms a relationship that is essentially that of bond servant into that of steward—one honored with a trust.—Exchange.

THE LAYMAN

Leave it to the ministers, and soon the church will die,
Leave it to the women-folks, the young will pass it by.
For the church is all that lifts us from the coarse and selfish mob,
And the church that is to prosper needs the layman on the job.

Now a layman has his business, and a layman has his joys,
But he also has the training of his little girls and boys;
And I wonder how he'd like it if there were no churches here,
And he had to raise his children in a Godless atmosphere?

It's the church's special function to uphold the finer things,
To teach that way of living from which all that's noble springs;
But the minister can't do it, single-handed and alone,
For the laymen of the country are the church's corner-stone.
When you see a church that's empty, though its doors are opened wide,
It is not the church that's dying; it's the laymen who have died.
For it's not by song or sermon that the church's work is done.
It's the laymen of the country who for God must carry on.

CHINESE SERMON

Bishop Graves writes of a sermon he heard lately from a Chinese priest at St. Paul's, Nanking: Tong preached an admirable sermon to the students this morning on the text, "The Lord is my light, and my salvation, whom then shall I fear?... One thing have I desired of the Lord... that I may dwell in the house of the Lord forever." He calmly and simply faced the fact that there is much in China just now to make Christians fear, but just as calmly and sensibly, yet earnestly, made it clear and strong that we can find our light and our deliverance in God. And he spoke of "dwelling in the house of the Lord," not that David or we would want to live always in some spot behind walls in a temple, but that "the whole universe is the house of the Lord," and those who keep in communion with Him are always dwelling in His house.—Exchange.

CLEANSED

"Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they might have a right to the Tree of Life," has the clear ring of the New Testament music about it, and is in full accord with the whole type of doctrine that runs through this book. If men are clean, it is because they are cleansed. If we are clean, it is because we have been made so. The first beatitude that Jesus Christ spoke from the mountain was, "Blessed are the poor in spirit." The last beatitude that He speaks from heaven is, "Blessed are they that wash their robes." And the act commended in the last is but the outcome of the spirit extolled in the first. For they who are poor in spirit are such as know themselves to be sinful men; and those who know themselves to be sinful men are they who will cleanse their robes in the blood of Jesus Christ.—Alexander Maclaren.

THY WILL BE DONE

I pray not "take my troubles all away;"
It is for strength to bear them that I pray,
And firm belief that all is for my good;
That every trouble must be kindly meant,
Since from the hands of Him it has been sent
Who is my loving Father and my God.

I pray not that my days may smoothly run;
Ah no! I pray, "Thy will alone be done!
Yet give a childlike, trusting heart to me!
Should the earth seek to draw my spirit down,
Oh, let my heart continue still Thine own.
And draw me upward from the earth to Thee."

WHO AM I?

I never was guilty of wrong action. But on my account lives have been lost, trains have been wrecked, ships have gone down at sea, cities have burned, battles have been lost, and governments have failed.

I never struck a blow nor spoke an unkind word, but because of me homes have been broken up, friends have grown cold, the laughter of children has ceased, wives have shed bitter tears, brothers and sisters have forgotten, and fathers and mothers have gone broken-hearted to their graves.

I have intended no evil, but because of me, talent and genius have come to naught, courtesy and kindness have failed, and the promise of success and happiness has yielded sorrow and disaster.

I have no color except black, no sound but just my silence, no cause for my being myself, no progeny exeept grief and disaster.

I am NEGLECT.—Santa Fe Magazine.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO YOU

Not "making a living," but making a life;
What you are, but not what you gain in the strife,
Your life is a book, written red from your veins;
What you are, and not what you say, remains.

What life of the Christ are you writing, my friend?
A Gospel to last till the centuries end?
Your Gospel of Christ is already begun,
Then how shall the rest of the sweet story run?
The saddest of all of His questions will be,
"Does your life show the fact, that you lived it for Me?"

CARROTS AND CHOCOLATE CREAMS

Miss Rose White and her mother had been invited to supper, and Jimmy and Miss Rose sat in the window-seat talking while his mother was busy in the kitchen.

"Aren't you hungry," Jimmy asked, "and don't things smell good?"

Miss Rose laughed. "I am hungry, Jimmy, and things certainly do smell good."

Jimmy sniffed. "That's chicken we smell; chicken and gravy and biscuit," he said.

Miss Rose laughed again. "I suppose you like chicken and gravy and biscuit better than anything else there is to eat," she said.

"Well," answered Jimmy, "I don't know. I like everything pretty well, though of course rice pudding isn't a very good dessert. Yes," he continued after a thoughtful minute, "I like everything but carrots."

"Carrots!" exclaimed Miss Rose, "Why, I don't like them either."

"Oh, laughed Jimmy, "we're alike. And do you like chocolate creams better than anything else? I do."

"Well, said Miss Rose, "chocolate creams are very good."

"I've never had a whole box of them," said Jimmy. "Mother says that little boys don't have whole boxes to themselves."

Just then mother called them in to supper, and for some time Jimmy was too busy to pay much attention to what the rest were saying. It was when he heard his own name that he listened. Miss Rose was saying, "You could give Jimmy his luncheon tomorrow, couldn't you, mother?"

Jimmy looked up from his plate. Mrs. White was deaf, and Miss Rose had to repeat what she had said. "Mrs. Smith feels that she can't go to the city with me tomorrow because Jimmy comes home to his luncheon."

"Why," said Mrs. White, smiling when she understood, "I should like to have Jimmy take luncheon with me tomorrow. I don't know much about little boys, but I'm sure I could give him something to eat."

"Oh," laughed Miss Rose, "Jimmy is easily pleased. He is like me and enjoys eating everything but carrots."

"Carrots, did you say?" asked Mrs. White. "I'll remember that. So you'll come, won't you, Jimmy?"

Jimmy smiled shyly and nodded.

The next morning when Jimmy was ready for school and mother was almost ready for her trip to the city with Miss Rose, Jimmy said, "What shall I do, mother, when I go to Mrs. White's this noon?"

"Why," said mother, pulling on her gloves, "just ring the bell; ring it loud so that Mrs. White will hear, and then answer politely when she speaks to you. Speak loud, for it would be much kinder to make her hear you the first time, but of course you mustn't shout. Then eat your luncheon just as you do at home."

Speak politely and loud, and eat his luncheon. That sounded easy enough, thought Jimmy on his way to school. But at noon when he walked slowly along the village street to Mrs. White's, he wondered just how hard he must press the button to ring the bell very loud.

At last he came to Mrs. White's. There was no need to ring the bell, for she was at the door looking for him.

"Here you are, Jimmy," she said, smiling.

Jimmy took off his cap and said, "Yes, ma'am." It must have been just loud enough, for she said: "How well I hear you! I believe my hearing is improving! Luncheon is ready," she added, and led the way to the dining room. "I have cooked something of which I am very fond, and my daughter said yesterday that you like carrots, too. I never cook them when she is at home, for she doesn't like them, but now we shall have a feast, shan't we?"

Jimmy tried to swallow the lump in his throat. What could he do? Tell her he didn't like them? Why, there wasn't anything on the table except bread and butter and a big dish of carrots!

"I walked out to Mr. Brown's farm for them this morning, so I know that they are fresh and tender," Mrs. White was saying as she helped Jimmy to a big dish of carrots.

Jimmy looked from the carrots to Mrs. White's smiling face. He gave a big sigh. "I shall have to eat them," he said to himself. "I'll just eat them as fast as I can, and then drink my milk to take the taste away.'

So he ate the carrots, fairly gobbled them in fact, and when he had finished took a long drink of milk.

Mrs. White laughed. "You do like them, Jimmy," she said. "I am so glad, and now let me give you some more."

More! Jimmy finished his milk and then said, "Thank you, but I'm not very hungry this noon." That was true; he wasn't hungry any more.

"But there is dessert," said Mrs. White, going to the kitchen.

Jimmy's eyes brightened, and then he had to wink two or three times, for Mrs. White brought rice pudding.

"Just before leaving this morning my daughter said something about carrots and rice pudding," said Mrs. White pleasantly. "I am so glad, for I should never have thought of them."

Jimmy took one spoonful of pudding, and then another and another, until it was all gone. Then he thanked Mrs. White, took his cap, and ran to school.

He was a hungry and quiet little boy at supper, but mother had so many things to tell about her visit to the city that she did not notice it.

After supper Miss Rose came.

"Jimmy Smith," she said, "you are a little brick. My mother enjoyed your visit and wants you to come again. However," she added, "I shall be there too, and I shall do the cooking. She said that she could hear distinctly every word you said, and I'm going to speak so that she can understand what I say, too. And now, Jimmy boy, I've brought something that I hope will even things up."

Jimmy unwrapped the parcel she gave him and found a box of chocolate creams—a whole box, all for him! —Jessie M. Lathrop, in The Youth's Companion.

BETSY'S FLAG DAY

Here is a letter from Peggy," said Betsy, "just got it out of the mail-box. She says tomorrow is Flag Day; I'd forgotten all about it!"

"Why, so 'tis." her Grandmother exclaimed, "We must hunt for the old Flag and hang it out. It hasn't been up for a long time."

"You know, they are going to have exercises at school, tableaux and things, and I was to be Betsy Ross, but now Peggy will have to take my place," Betsy went on.

"That's too bad that you can't be there," said Grandmother, consolingly, "But your good health is more important than tableaux and this good country air is making a new girl of you!"

Betsy sighed. She loved the country and to be with Grandmother on the farm, but she missed her family and the school life.

"Cheer up, now, and we will look for the flag," said Grandmother.

"You must get it into shape for tomorrow. I haven't had it out for years." So up to the attic they went and found the old flag, carefully laid away in an old trunk. As Grandmother had said, it was a wee bit torn about the edges.

"Well, now, Mistress Betsy Ross," Grandmother said, handing it to Betsy, "you can just sit down in the garden and mend that flag, and be a little tableau for me!"

"Oh, yes, so I can," said Betsy, smiling brightly. Taking her sewing things, she went to sit in the sunny garden. The big flag covered her knees and spread about her in the grass. Betsy loved its brave colors and compared them with the gay red and white roses blooming in the flower beds, with the vivid blue larkspur crowding about.

All at once she heard a rustle beside her, and a voice spoke out:

"Hello there, what're you doing with that grand big flag?"

She looked up and saw a sunburned, freckled face peering through the berry bushes that hedged the garden.

"I'm fixing it up for tomorrow," Betsy answered very sedately.

" 'Tain't Fourth of July!" her visitor returned.

"No, it's Flag Day," Betsy said. "Don't you keep Flag Day?"

"No, never heard of it," and her visitor pulled himself through the bushes and stood beside her on the grass.

Betsy knew him now for the son of a poor farmer, who lived away at the other side of Grandmother's wide acres. The boy was older than she, and dressed in faded overalls. His feet were bare and he had a gap in his mouth where two front teeth were missing, but Betsy didn't mind that for her big brother Hal had been the same way last year.

"That sure is a fine flag; wish't we had one," he said. "You making it?"

"Oh, no," said Betsy, "I couldn't make such a big flag! I'm just mending it. You know, tomorrow is the 150th birthday of the American Flag—I just learned that in school," she added shyly, afraid that she was sounding too "teacherish."

"You don't say!" exclaimed the boy. "How come?"

"Well," replied Betsy, "after this country left the British rule, it had to have a flag of its own, so the Congress decided on this kind—thirteen stripes for the original states and white stars for all the states—a new one for all the states—a new one for each new state, on a blue field—I think its the prettiest flag in the world, don't you?"

"Sure is," agreed the boy.

"That was 150 years ago," went on Betsy. "It says in our history that George Washington ordered one to be made by a lady named Betsy Ross, and so she made the first American flag. I was going to be Betsy Ross in our school tableau, because that's my name."

"Well, my name's George," said the boy, "and I reckon I'll have to order one from you!" They both laughed at the idea.

"I'd love to make you one," said Betsy, "but I can't sew very well—only mend a little."

"Tell you what!" cried George suddenly, "I saw an old flag up in our loft one day. Them pesky field mice had got into it and ate holes in it. P'haps you could mend me that and then we'd run in and surprise Dad!"

"Won't your Mother fix it for you?" asked Betsy shyly.

"I haven't any Mother," said George. "Dad and me live alone. We never run up a flag no more, but say, he might like it! Once he was a soldier and fought with them Spaniards."

"Well, you go get it," Betsy decided, "and I'll try to mend it. It's wrong to let our country's flag get spoiled!"

"All right," said the boy, "I'll be back in a jiffy!" and he disappeared through the hedge.

Betsy found she had mended all the little rips in Grandmother's flag, so she gathered it up and carried it indoors. Grandmother was busy at her desk, so Betsy decided to hunt for mending materials herself. "Of course," she thought, "I don't know how big the holes are, but I'll look in the piece-bag for some stuff." She rummaged in Grandmother's bag and chose some red and white and blue scraps that seemed the right color. When she came out into the garden, she saw George running toward her over the pasture, carrying a bundle.

"Whew! she's pretty bad!" he cried, panting, as he came through the hedge, "here, look her over." Betsy and he spread the torn old flag on the grass. Some of the stars were gone and there were holes in the red and white stripes.

"My, my!" said Betsy in dismay, "We'll have to cut out new stars—it's almost like making a new flag!"

"I'll help if I can," George said. So together they set to work and cut some pretty fair stars which Betsy carefully sewed into place.

Grandmother, happening to glance through the door, saw their earnest faces bent over their work.

"Well, this is a really, truly tableau!" she exclaimed, coming down the walk.

"Oh, yes, Grandmother!" Betsy cried. "It's a really, truly flag too. We are mending it so George can hang it out tomorrow!"

"That's very fine and useful," Grandmother praised them, "and I am very proud of your nice little stiches!"

When the mending was done and they laid the flag out on the grass to inspect it proudly, they thought it almost as good as new and Grandmother brought them cookies and lemonade as a treat. They were happy. But the next day when it floated proudly from the pole George set up, in front of his house, they were happier than ever to see the look of pleasure in his father's tired face, as he stood at salute—

"That sure is one grand old flag!" he said.—Selected.

SOMEBODY

Somebody made a monthly pledge,
Testing his purse to utmost edge;
Somebody paid it through the year,
Brightening the world with Christian cheer.
Was that somebody you?

Somebody handed cheerfully in
Money to help God's cause to win;
Somebody kept his promise to pay,
Writing his check on schedule day.
Was that somebody you?

Somebody let the year slip by
Heedless of payments piling high.
Somebody said: "No more delay;
Quickly I'll settle that debt today."
Was that somebody you?

Somebody's pledge was only a scrap,
Paper that had no value mayhap;
Somebody's soul grew shriveled and small;
Failing, he grieved the Lord of all.
Was that somebody you?

Andrew's Beautiful Example

"What did you preach about on Sunday?" was the question asked of a city pastor the other day.

"I preached about Andrew," was the reply, "and, do you know, I found him a most interesting character."

"What was there about him that was remarkable?"

"Well, I do not suppose you would call him a great man, but the significant thing about him was that every time he is mentioned in Scripture he was introducing some one to Jesus."—Westminster Teacher.

1 Per Cent on Budgets For Superannuates

English Street	$ .50

Pastors and Stewards Please Note

The next financial statement in the Herald will be published in the issue of August 18th, if our plans carry. That will be our third quarterly report, and after you read this all pastors and stewards will have two weeks to get the very best possible report in before the standings of charges are published again.

The figures as published next time will show just what each charge has paid on each budget. And if there is a charge that has not paid anything on either one of the budgets that fact will be shown. Surely each charge has raised something on each budget, so be sure to send in what is raised and what may be raised so as to stand as high as possible in the lists.

Send promptly to Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C., and he will report promptly to us, and you will get your proper credit. All together for one steady pull for fine reports in every way to our coming Annual Conference. God bless and direct.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. DIXON.

THAT DANGEROUS UNLOADED GUN

Another name is to be added to the list of the unfortunate victims of the unloaded gun. This time it is Harvey Flint, one of our Sunday school boys. The tragedy occured Sunday night about 8:30 p.m. Harvey was at the home of Arthur Craven, his boy friend, on East Davis street. Other boys were present, and they were staging a robber's "holdup." To make the joke more real the Craven boy got his father's pistol, and after emptying all of the cartridges out, as he thought, he drew the pistol on his friend Flint, and demanded his money, at the same time snapping the pistol. On the fourth click the pistol discharged, and a deadly ball went crashing into the side of young Flint. An hour later he died on the operating table at Rainey Hospital. The tragedy is a shock to the community. Both boys were young, each about the age of fifteen years. Harvey Flint is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Flint. Mrs. Flint is a member of the Burlington church. The boy's dying testimony was that the affair was an accident, and this is no doubt true, though the police are making thorough investigations to see if it could have been otherwise. The mother of young Flint was at our church when the tragedy happened, and we can not but wish that the boys had been there also.

The funeral service will be held this afternoon at three o'clock, at the home of W. O. Roberson, on Ireland street. Mr. Roberson is a half-brother of the deceased. Interment will be in Linwood cemetery at Graham. Our hearts are full of tenderest sympathy for both of these stricken families.

S. W. TAYLOR.

NOTICE

Our third quarterly conference will meet Friday, August 5th, 2:30 p.m. at Vaughn church. Let all official members of Littleton circuit take due notice and govern themselves accordingly. There will be some business of special interest to come before the conference.

TRUTH

The truest and highest expression of truth,
Is not in the words alone spoken,
But truth is life made safe and secure,
By faith in God's love never broken.

Truth is more than a message proclaimed,
It's more than a mere thoughtless word,
It's more than a compliment or a rebuke,
It's faith to be known but unheard.

Truth can be read in lives that have grown,
Stronger in thought, life, and deed,
Truth is expressed by the harvest reaped,
For the harvest reveals the seed.

When a life is false, 'tis easy to see,
The tares most surely will grow.
But if wheat is the yield, we willingly say,
Then wheat is the seed that you sow.

THE GOLDEN RULE

It was once the custom of writers and speakers who believed in the Christian religion to magnify the differences between that and the other faiths of the world. But another method is now often followed, and that is to discover, so far as honest investigation will reveal it, the large body of truth common to the great religions, and preeminently set forth in the teaching of Jesus. It is held that every such discovery strengthens instead of weakens the argument for the Christian faith.

Jesus taught the Golden Rule. His rule was and is the highest and noblest rule of human conduct. Yet it is of great value to discover how many of the world's religions have or had precepts based on the same essential principle.

The most frequently quoted is the "silver rule" of Confucius, "What you would not wish done to yourself, do not unto others." Buddha, also, uttered these wise words: "One should seek for others the happiness one desires for oneself." That is positive, though impersonal.

In the Egyptian liturgy is found the judgment of a man who, after death, was accounting for the deeds of his life, and this is the word concerning him: "He sought for others the good he desired for himself; let him pass on."

Worthy of Aristotle, Plato or Socrates, but anonymous as it comes to us, perhaps because it was already old in the days of these eminent philosophers, is the Grecian admonition: "Do not that to a neighbor which you would take ill from him."

The Hindus had this wise adage: "The true rule of life is to guard and do by the things of others as they do by their own."

All of these sayings are probably older than Christ. Mohammed is more recent, and had knowledge of the Christian faith. Whether he learned it there or from some Arab teacher need not trouble us; but he certainly said: "Let none of you treat his brother in a way in which he himself would dislike to be treated."

What a chorus of faith is here! Faith in the value of one's own personality and conscience as furnishing a rule of conduct toward others!

The teaching of Jesus does not stand alone. It is reinforced in the affirmations of the universal conscience, and it finds support in the utterance of the greatest religious teachers of many lands and of many centuries.—Youth's Companion.

MISSIONS TAUGHT IN THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE

The Why and How of Missions in the Sunday School was the subject taught by Dr. Roberta Fleagle in the Young People's Conference at High Point College. Facts from the text book were used in her daily addresses but these were interspersed with interesting actual experiences of her seven years stay in China.

This study of missions was one of the most interesting of the courses of the entire conference and attracted many people. Dr. Fleagle gave a public address on Saturday evening on her work in China. This was enjoyed by all who heard her. On Sunday morning she spoke to the congregation of the First Church in Burlington, Sunday evening in the Community church in Thomasville and Tuesday evening of this week at Whitakers. Dr. Fleagle will return to North Carolina this fall to attend our Annual Conference and we shall look forward with much pleasure to hearing her again.

IF WE BELIEVED IN GOD

Jessie Wiseman Gibbs

If we believed in God, there would be light
Upon our pathway in the darkest night.

If we believed in God, there would be power
To foil the tempter in the sorest hour.

If we believed in God, there would be peace
In this world's warfare, ever to increase.

If we believed in God, there would be joy
Even in tears, that nothing could destroy.

If we believed in God, there would be love
To heal all wounds and lift the world above.

Lord Christ, be near us, that, beholding Thee,
We may believe in God and be set free!

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

FROM REV. D. A. BRASWELL

Concord, July 26, 1927.—I spent 40 days in the Sanitorium which makes 56 days and nights of suffering. Yesterday was the first day I have sat up all day. I was left here without a dollar in money to buy provision, or medicine, or hire a man or a boy to do one thing for a ppreacher that was down and out. Health all gone, no work to draw from, no bank account to draw from. Oh think in the midst of deathly suffering. When I had one moment to reflect I was made to wonder where my support was coming from. But thank God next morning God sent a good M. E. man to look after us. And up in the day a good old M. E. preacher came over and offered his services and we gladly accepted it. And three good M. E. families have taken care of us for 16 days and nights. And my poor wife and Dr. Yow have nursed me like I was a baby. I think others will come in later. You know some folks are good on cold trail. I have received my bill from the Sanitorium. It was about $600.00. I did not have the money. Mr. J. S. Braswell said, I will pay the bill and you can pay me. He paid the bill, and when I got home I made a draw on what little property I had left and paid my son $500.00 and he said he would give me the other. I called up the real estate man yesterday and put all the property I have in the world in his hands for sale. Well, that leaves me without a home or any income. It means I must get a meal wherever I find a man that will open his heart and give the old preacher a crumb. Or get a nickle wherever you can find one in the trash pile. I have given the very best there was in me to my church and I did it willingly. It is true that I have had work the most of the time but it was picked up work that cost me much more than I got out of it. I am glad I could do it. And if I live to do any more work for God it will be among the fallen ones. I hate to give up my home that has cost me so much and is so dear to me. I do not know how much longer my Father is going to let me remain here. I want to stay as long as He is willing for me to stay. But let me stay here a short while or a long time, I see that I must not expect anything but a crumb here and there and a nickle wherever there is one that is not in use. God our heavenly Father never intended it to be so. He wanted them to be like lambs in His bosom. Oh I wish I could say something that would stir the whole church. God bless everyone of you. Pray for me. I may be writing my last article. Pray for us.

Yours in His name,
D. A. BRASWELL.

P. S. If I recover from my trouble, and my plans mature, we will leave Concord soon.

Mt. Hermon Charge.—July 24 was a fine day for Bellemont church; at the morning service the people raised one hundred dollars which was due on the recently purchased land, thus making the land ours. At the evening hour the children, under the direction of Mrs. Elsie Sharpe, rendered an excellent program. The "Klein Memorial" offering was $32.83.

A goodly number worshiped at Cedar Cliff in the afternoon. The protracted meeting will begin there the fifth Sunday in July. Rev. T. G. Madison will do the preaching. Federation prayer meetings will be held each night of this week beginning Wednesday.

Friendship, Bellemont, and Mt. Hermon Christian Endeavor societies organized into a charge union July 8. The meeting was at Mr. Jacob Sharpe's home. The officers of the club are: President, Mr. H. E. Coble; vice-president, Mr. Lonnie Holt; and secretary and treasurer, Miss Callie Isley. The meeting will be at Friendship, October 28.

The following members represented the charge at the Y. P. S. C.: Misses Mae Patterson, Truth Isley, and Ruby Isley, Mr. Lee Moser, and the pastor.

J. ELWOOD CARROLL, Pastor.

Mebane.—Our work at Mebane is progressing nicely, we think. We are not having any great upheavals, but taking everything into consideration we are doing very well. The attendance at all of the services is very good for this warm weather. The pastor has been receiving tokens of kindness all through the year. We have been remembered recently by several of our good people. We thank them very much for their kindness.

The third quarterly conference will meet Thursday, August 4th, at seven-thirty. We are urging all officials to be present.

EDW. SUITS.

Saxapahaw Charge.—Children's Day services have been held at Concord, Salem, and Orange Chapel. The children rendered their parts well. The committees in charge deserve special credit for training the children so efficiently.

Dr. R. G. McPherson is in the hospital taking treatment. We trust he will soon be restored to his normal health. He is missed so much from Sunday school and church services.

The trustees of Salem church met yesterday and decided to start plans at once toward the erection of four Sunday school rooms. This church voted to build about a year ago, but decided to wait a while because of the crop conditions.

Brother Foust Thompson has our sincere thanks for a fine pig. The good ladies of Salem church have just donated a beautiful memory quilt to pastor and wife. We have also been receiving vegetables and fruits from members of the other churches. We are grateful for all these favors.

H. L. ISLEY.

Moriah Church.—Our pastor delivered a wonderful sermon Sunday at the eleven o'clock service.

Joseph Coble is attending the Young People's Summer Conference at High Point.

There were only 91 present for Sunday school Sunday. That is not as good attendance as we have been having, but it is an increase over one year ago which was only 71. We hope it will continue to increase.

A quartet from the city entertained the Christian Endeavor Societies Sunday night which was greatly enjoyed.

A wedding of much interest took place last Wednesday night at the church manse when Miss Sarah Edna Sharpe became the bride of Mr. Charles E. McLean of this city. We wish for them a losg and successful life together.

The meeting will begin at Shady Grove Sunday, July 31. We will not have church service at 11 o'clock but will have it at 8 p.m. We will have Sunday school at the regular hour, 10 o'clock.

Best wishes,
REPORTER.

Jerusalem.—Our regular services were held for July, on the second and third mornings at 11 o'clock. We had a larger attendance at these services than usual. On the third Sunday morning the vote for delegate to the Annual Conference was taken and Brother W. Jennings Ward was elected.

We are planning for our revival meeting at this place to be held in August. We are expecting Rev. Atlas Ridge to assist in the meeting. C. B. WAY, Pastor.

South Lexington.—Last Sunday was a good day for this church and Sunday school. There was a good increase in the attendance in Sunday school, 165 being present. This was a considerable increase over the few previous Sundays.

At the eleven o'clock service the children from the Children's Home gave a program of music and speeches which was thoroughly enjoyed by the large congregation present. Dr. Allman was with them and directed the exercises. Pastor Ridge was absent on account of an engagement to preach at one of the churches on Davidson charge.

Last Sunday night a large congregation assembled to witness a musical program rendered by the orchestra of the First Baptist church in this city. Lee Myers, formerly of South Lexington Sunday school, directed the program. The pastor was present and made a brief talk during the program. An offering was taken for the benefit of the piano fund. The piano was purchased about two weeks ago and is being used to a great advantage in the Sunday school and all of the services of the church.

Rev. and Mrs. Atlas Ridge attended nearly all of the sessions of the pastors' and young people's summer conferences at the High Point College last week. This writer attended two sessions.

Next Sunday being the fifth Sunday it is likely that the pastor will be away and no preaching services will be held.

C. B. WAY, Pastor.

Gibsonville.—The work here is making progress. One hundred song books have been purchased for use in Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, etc. Book racks have been attached to the backs of the pews. A small book case has been placed in which to store choir books when not in use.

Our Children's Day service was unique and one of the most interesting I have ever witnessed. The Sunday school attendance varies. Sometimes it hovers near the two hundred mark but about the time you expect it to go above two hundred it drops down, may be away down.

The senior Christian Endeavor society tried the experiment of conducting the mid-week prayer meeting, but after a few weeks went back to Sunday evening as the best time to meet. During the hot weather we are dovetailing the evening preaching service onto the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting, this prayer meeting serving in a measure as the preliminary of the preaching service.

Our Junior Christian Endeavor seems to be doing good work though it is not my privilege to attend. The Intermediate is picking up in interest. The boys are taking a more active part.

We had hoped to have a number of our young people in the Young People's Conference, but only two could go.

Rev. F. S. Robinson, of Durham, has preached for us, and very acceptably, for several Sundays at 11 o'clock. Sunday the 17th Rev. Mr. Robinson joined our church as a first step toward offering himself for service in our conference.

The Ladies' Aid gave an ice cream supper Saturday, the 16th, and realized a nice sum toward the hundred dollars promised in payment on the parsonage. It is expected to pay two hundred of the claim in the near future. The girls' Philathea, one of the most active agencies in our church, is helping quite liberally on this.

Some of our laymen are conducting our mid-week prayer meeting, showing us the kind of prayer meetings they think we ought to have. The pastor is urging the people to show the size attendance they think we ought to have. The girls' Philathea class will have charge on a Wednesday night in the near future and show us the kind of prayer meeting the young people think we ought to have.

T. M. JOHNSON.

Palestine, Flat Rock Charge.—Our revival meeting came to a close last Friday evening, July 22. We had a splendid meeting. I think it did all of us lots of good. Rev. N. G. Brittain of St. Paul's charge, was our pulpit help. He preached us some good sermons. I think they were enjoyed by all present. We had seven additions to the church.

Our Sunday school is still on the growing list, and we hope to continue increasing both in number and in spirit. We had 87 present last Sunday. Our regular attendance is about 80. We have five classes, three quarterly, the card, and the Bible.

The mothers of our community are still having prayer meeting once a week and I think it is a great help to them and to the community.

Of those seven that joined the church in our revival meeting, five of them are our Sunday school scholars that we have been praying for. Let's continue to pray, for in prayer, there is power.

Love and best wishes to all.

T. G. YOUNG.

High Point.—After a profitable as well as delightful session of a week at the College, the Young People's Summer Conference came to a successful close on Monday morning. One hundred and two certificates were presented to the yohng people in the different courses, Dr. R. M. Andrews making the address and Rev. Fred W. Paschall delivering the certificates. On Friday evening Dr. Leonard B. Smith of Wilmington, Del., delivered a masterful address on "The Call to Youth," after which a large number of young people came forward and gave him their hands, thus consecrating their lives to sedvice for the Master. On Saturday evening Dr. Roberta Fleagle, medical missionary to China, at home on leave of absence for a year, addressed the Conference, and her talk was highly entertaining.

On Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock Dr. J. H. Straughn told the Conference about the "Centennial Gratitude Gift" of $100,000 which it is proposed to raise by May 1928, as a gift to the church on the One-hundredth Anniversary. This gift will be presented at General Conference in Baltimore with elaborate and appropriate ceremony. Dr. A. G. Dixon and Mr. J. D. Ross of Asheboro are Chairmen for N. C. Plans are being formulated for the raising of this fund at an early date. It is expected that the people of our denomination throughout the length and breadth of our fair state will respond quickly and liberally in this gift of gratitude to the mother church.

On Thursday afternoon the members of the two Missionary Societies were invited to the home of Mrs. R. M. Andrews on West College Drive to meet and hear Dr. Roberta Fleagle. About 35 ladies and twelve girls and boys of the Junior Mission Circle responded. Dr. Fleagle told us in an informal address many things of interest about her work in China and the customs and manner of life there. After her talk, many questions were asked relative to conditions in China and the progress of our missionary work there, where Dr. Fleagle has labored so faithfully and effectively for seven years. The hostess, assisted by her lovely young daughters, Rosalie and Alma, served delicious refreshments, and a delightful social hour followed. Mrs. Geo. R. Brown of Reidsville, wife of our former pastor and who did such splendid and successful work in the misionary cause in our church during the nine years' pastorate of her husband, was present and we were all delighted to greet her again.

The pulpit on Sunday morning was occupied by Dr. E. C. Makosky, President Maryland Conference, and our congregation was much pleased with his beautiful sermon. He spoke again at the College Sunday evening. About fifty ministers attended the Pastors' Summer Conference, and they thoroughly enjoyed the rest and relaxation, the pleasant fellowship with their brethren, and the splendid addresses.

The Christian Endeavor Society met Monday evening as usual after a rest during the Conference. On Friday evening the quarterly mass meeting of the High Point Christian Endeavor Union will be held in the community room of First church. An interesting program for this occasion is being arranged by President Arnold J. Koonce, after which a social hour will follow. During the business meeting plans will be discussed for sending delegates to the Annual State Conference at Blue Ridge August 19-21. Special musical numbers will be given Quarterly Conference will convene Wednesday evening after a brief prayer meeting. Announcement of election of delegate to Annual Conference in November will be made. Messrs. H. A. Moffitt and A. A. Hill are the nominees.

Many friends here of Dr. Roger W. Ogburn, his father, and the members of his family are sorely grieved to hear of his untimely and tragic death in New York City on last Sunday. He was a splendid young man of excellent worth, fine ability, and great promise; was greatly beloved by a host of young friends, who feel this loss most keenly. Loving sympathy is extended to his mother, sisters, and brothers in this hour of grief and pain. He had often been a guest in the home of his sister, Mrs. W. C. Jones.

Mrs. A. F. Franklin and three daughters of Richmond, Va., have been guests of her sister, Mrs. S. A. Holleman, and her niece, Mrs. C. C. Robbins. Mr. S. A. Holleman has returned from a trip to Alaska.

Rev. and Mrs. E. L. Ballard will leave this week with Dr. and Mrs. Dixon and Miss Visto Dixon for a trip to Alabama to attend Summer Conference.

Misses Lucille Pickens and Blanche York returned Monday evening from a vacation trip to New York and Philadelphia.

Mrs. John C. Hunt of Lexington was a recent visitor to her sister, Mrs. C. L. Whitaker.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Penny have returned from a trip to Blowing Rock.

Flint Ridge, Chatham Circuit.—Rev. C. G. Isley filled his appointment Sunday P. M., and preached us an excellent sermon. The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Stout was laid to rest in Flint Ridge cemetery Saturday a.m. We are planning to put new cover on our church this summer. Some of our members have been on the sick list, but am glad they are able to attend church again. Our revival meeting begins July 31st. Rev. D. I. Garner of Why Not Circuit, will be the pulpit help. Hope we will have good meetings.

EVELYN TEAGUE, Reporter.

Bessemer City Church.—We will have home coming here at this church first Sunday in August. Everybody is cordially invited to come and enjoy the day with us. Rev. C. E. Phillips will preach Sunday morning and Hon. S. J. Durham is expected to deliver an address Sunday afternoon. We wish to extend a special invitation to all the ex-pastors. Dinner will be served picnic style on the grounds.

Our Sunday school is very good at present. There were 104 present last Sunday. The Sunday school went to Gaffney, S. C., on a picnic July 16th and had a very enjoyable time.

Remember us in your prayers that we may have great success and accomplish much and lasting good for the Master. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

LUCY BLANTON, Reporter.

—Dr. Roger Ogburn, youngest son of Rev. T. J. Ogburn, lost his life in an automobile collision in New York City last Sunday morning. He was in an ambulance sent to the aid of a man who had collapsed when there was a collision with a taxi. The doctor's skull was broken, and death resulted. His brother, Dr. Herbert Ogburn of Greensboro went by airship, hoping to see Roger yet alive, but it was not to be. He found only the lifeless form. What a shock this death brings. He was young and strong and had entered upon a most promising career as a physician. He was connected with Bellevue Hospital.

—Miss May Murchison and Ruth Laughlin and Merritt Sullivan were the young people sent by Calvary church to the High Point Young People's Summer Conference. They enjoyed the time they had.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Hipp

Mrs. Mary Gosset Hipp was called home at the noon hour on Sunday, June 26th, 1927, in her 70th year. She united with Yarborough Chapel M. P. Church in early girlhood (about 14 years of age) and remained faithful until the end, about 55 years, being the oldest member of this church at the time of her death, truly a life of service for the Master.

She had been sick for more than two years, but confined to her bed for only a few weeks. I visited her often, as she lived near the parsonage, and she told me one day in conversation with her, "I am ready to go and I have always tried to do just what God would have me do. I only regret leaving Eddie, my boy, (Her stepson, Brother E. M. Hipp) and loving brothers and nephews and nieces."

She quietly fell asleep and awoke with God.

Funeral services were held on Monday afternoon, June 27th, at Yarborough Chapel church, and her body laid to rest beside the loved ones gone before.

She leaves an only stepson, three brothers, a number of nephews and nieces, and a host of friends to mourn her going.

A great throng of sorrowing friends gathered for the funeral services.

Let faith exalt her joyful voice and now in triumph sing;
O grave, where is thy victory, and where, O death, thy sting.

Her Pastor, E. G. COWAN.

Dunnaway

R. L. Dunnaway passed away on Wednesday, July 13th, 1927, being 67 years of age. He still held his membership at Yarborough Chapel M. P. church, although having moved away some twenty years ago.

I am told that he came back as often as possible until sickness kept him away, or at home for the past two years. It was not my privilege to know Brother Dunnaway, as he lived quite a distance from us and I never met him; however I knew some of his children and our hearts go out in sympathy to them in their sorrow. May the Great God of Love sustain them, comfort them, and strengthen them, is our prayer.

Funeral services were held at Yarborough Chapel church on Thursday afternoon, and his body laid to rest in the church cemetery to await the resurrection.

REV. E. G. COWAN, Pastor.

Medlock

At the midnight hour of June 2, 1927, God called the soul of Grandmother Medlock back to Heaven to be with Him.

She, oldest member of Harmony church, and the oldest member on the charge, was in her ninety-first year.

Those of us who had the privilege and pleasure of visiting her, always left her presence with the feeling of a benediction, and we always felt that we had caught a new glimpse of Heaven.

Grandmother Medlock had been an invalid for a number of years, yet she always bore the testimony of her Lord and Master, despite her suffering. It has never been my privilege to meet a more devoted and consecrated sufferer; she was always cheerful, and full of life, and she enjoyed so much the calls, talks, and prayers of her pastor and other friends.

Numbers of times she told me that she was ready and anxious to go. On one occasion I entered her room while she was asleep; when she awoke, she looked up at me and with a smile of joy on her face, she said, "I have just been dreaming of Heaven and walking with my Savior there, and everything is just as I had pictured it out, everything is just as I thought it would be, the same color and all." Oh how happy she was at the thought of going home.

It was with sorrowful hearts that we laid her body in the cemetery at Harmony church, beneath a beautiful mound of flowers to await the resurrection morn, but turned away knowing full well, that there was joy in Heaven for her coming. For certainly Earth's loss is Heaven's gain.

Mother

She has come to the end of her journey,
Her sickness and sorrow are o'er;
She has entered the beautiful city,
She dwells on the golden shore.

Beholding the face of her Savior,
The one whom she loved so dear;
Oh, I know that her joy is unequaled,
By any who journey down here.

Her spirit is hovering o'er us,
Her memory dwells in our hearts;
For I know that some day we shall meet her,
Never, no never to part.

Now, Jesus, we pray that you help us,
Tread in her footsteps so grand;
And finally, Dear Loving Savior,
Meet us all in that Heavenly Land.

May the God of all Grace comfort and sustain her loved ones in this their trying hour.

Her Pastor, E. G. COWAN.

Hopper

Walter Orrin Hopper, born September 29th, 1901, died July 6th, 1927. Thus, in one brief sentence is recorded, the death of one of the young men of our church in Winston-Salem. He was the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Hopper, who together with an older brother and his young wife, mourn his going away.

Brother Walter united with the church during the pastorate of Rev. S. W. Taylor. He was faithful to his church and attended the services, taking keen delight in the success of both the Sunday school and any work of the church. He was a fine, clean young man, whose honesty in business and genial companionship made him a favorite with all who knew him. It can be truly said of him that "he was a good man."

On August 5, 1924, he was married to Miss Vilma Maydell Howland, who after nearly three years of happy married life, suffered the loss of the sweetheart of her youth. On the Sabbath before her husband died, the writer assisted at the funeral of her father. Crushed under the double bereavement of father and husband in less than a week, she is sustained by the precious memory of the loving and trusting faith of both in the goodness of God.

Brother Walter was operated on for appendicitis on Friday, July 1st. He seemed to be recovering nicely, but passed away suddenly in the presence of his father in the Baptist Hospital, from a clot of blood forming on the heart. He was buried in beautiful Salem cemetery on Friday, July 8th. The large number of beautiful floral pieces gave mute testimony to the esteem in which he was held by the community.

The writer was assisted at the services at the home by Rev. Mr. DeGafferely, pastor of the church of Christ of this city.

We extend to the sorrowing family and to the doubly stricken wife our deepest sympathy and love and commend them to the infinite care of the Heavenly Father whose they are and whom they serve. I do not like to say "farewell," it seems too harsh, but I will say "Goodby, Brother Walter," 'till we meet again.

Scott

Ed Hugh Scott was born in Orange county, August 13th, 1880. He departed this life July 15th, 1927. October 12th, 1904, Brother Scott accepted Christ and joined the Methodist Protestant church of Mebane. He remained a faithful member of this church till God took him from labor to reward. Brother Scott was a quiet, unassuming Christian man. I heard one person say he was the best man they ever knew.

In April of 1914 he was married to Miss Ada Ward. He was a devoted husband, and our sympathy goes out to the grief-stricken wife and children. May the Lord comfort and sustain them in this hour of sadness.

Brother Scott will be missed in the church and Sunday school, in the community, and in the home. Those who knew him best loved him most. The funeral services were conducted in Mebane Methodist Protestant church by the pastor, assisted by Rev. T. M. Johnson, D. D., who was a former pastor.

MARRIED

Iles-Williams

July 16th, 8:30 p.m., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. O'Briant, Rosemary, N. C., Mr. Robert Iles of Littleton, N. C., and Miss Tempie Williams of Enfield, N. C., were united in marriage. Only a few of their friends witnessed the ceremony. May God bless the happy couple with a long and successful life.

—A colored working man employed to wash windows at a certain factory in Boston was working so moderately that his actions might very well be termed "slow motion?"

"Why don't you hurry a little more?" demanded his superior.

"Boss, Ah has only two speeds and de other am lower than dis one."

Notes and Sundries

Few Students Drink.—Fewer than five per cent of this year's college and high school graduates drink and less than one-half of one per cent drink to excess, according to a survey conducted by the Anti-Saloon League. Princeton and the University of Wisconsin were the only large universities reporting students drinking in excess.

Farming on His Knees.—Mr. Will Kirkman who lives near Moriah church and who has recently become afflicted with a weakness in his legs does not like to give up work. He goes on crutches and cannot plough as heretofore, but he has planted a water-melon patch and cultivates the plants on his knees.

—The Northern Baptists in a recent meeting in their convention at Chicago showed they are fully as dry as their Southern brethren, according to Rev. E. J. Richardson of the World League Against Alcoholism, who attended the convention.

"Three strong addresses made by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the National W. C. T. U.; Dr. F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, and Congressman Grant M. Hudson, of Michigan, at the convention met with strong approval," declares Rev. Mr. Richardson.

"There were 12,000 persons at the convention and 20,000 at the rally of the young people," he continues, "The program was arranged largely by Rev. Dr. M. P. Boynton of Chicago and Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., two prominent temperance leaders. There is no question as to the attitude of these Baptists regarding wet candidates for president and regarding the efforts at world prohibition."

—The corn borer, an inch-long worm which appeared in New England in 1917, now infests more than 500,000 square miles and has eaten its way through New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan aand Indiana until it threatens the heart of the corn belt. Government experts regard the pest as one of agriculture's worst enemies since it not only attacks corn but also some 200 other crops, including cotton and sugar cane.

—Soon after the publication of the letter of Gov. Smith of New York, potential presidential candidate, on the church and state question the pope gave orders that no person should presume to express the Vatican's views on the matter. Such instructions were sent through Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state, to other countries warning them against expression of opinions, and reminding all that the Holy See maintains an unchanging policy of non-interference in presidential campaigns in the United States, as well as in questions "of purely political character" in any country in the world.

—The nth degree of modesty was demonstrated by the man who gave an unsigned check to a charitable association because he desired to make an "anonymous contribution." —Lafayette Journal and Courier.

—Demands of creditors for $5,000,000 still due them from last year's unsuccessful Philadelphia sesquicentennial exposition caused Federal Judge Thompson in that city to order a "friendly" receivership to straighten out the tangle. Mayor Kendrick promises that everybody will be paid in full. However, Philadelphia itself faces bills totaling $2,400,000 with only $2,150,000 remaining in the city's borrowing capacity.

A bill permitting husbands to demand alimony and separate maintenance allowances from wives during the year interlocutory divorce decrees are effective became a law in California with Gov. Young's signature.

—Clergymen and laymen attending the annual meeting of the Episcopal diocese of New York abolished the custom of rising when a woman addresses the gathering. This was not done because of woman's bid for equality but because many men used to leave the session when the time came for women to speak.

—Death from rabies of many cows in Grant county, Ore., led state health authorities to order every dog in the country vaccinated.

—The Christian Endeavor societies of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa hold their two-yearly meeting at the end of June. There are about 6,000 members in the Young People's societies of this denomination and 21,000 members in the Junior society. One of these Dutch Reformed societies probably holds the world's record for giving to the mission. This society has given three thousand pounds sterling in the past two years, or about $15,000. The reason for this large amount is that one of the members of this society conducts his farm for the Lord, giving the profits to Christian work. It is his contribution that makes possible such a remarkable record.

—The famous Reims cathedral, battered to a wreck by the German guns in the late war, was formally reopened when Minister Herriot handed the keys of the building to Cardinal Lucon. M. Herriot expressed gratitude to John D. Rockfeller, Jr., for financial aid, and U. S. Ambassador Herrick voiced America's pleasure with the partial reconstruction of the cathedral. Nearly half the historic building has been roofed and repaired, but it was said that complete restoration would require from 25 to 50 years.

The barber was much surprised to receive a tip before he had cut the customer's hair. "Thank you, sir; it isn't many customers who tip first," he said.

"That isn't a tip," said the customer, "it's hush money!"

OUR BEST RALLY DAY SERVICE

There will be the usual music, recitations, pantomimes, drills, dialogues, etc., etc., an abundance of material from which to select a varied and interesting programme.

A standard feature of the Rally Day services has been an original play, setting forth in dramatic form some special Christian truth. Last year we tried to depict the influences leading to surrender for full-time service for Christ. This year it is a call to parents to dedicate and surrender their children to the service of God.

Dorothy Elderdice

The talented daughter of Rev. H. L. Elderdice, D. D., president of Westminster Theological Seminary, is the author of the play. It is the story of Abraham's offering of Isaac and is entitled, "Jehovah-Jireh." It is a unique production, deeply stirring and appealing.

Give us your order for as many of these programmes as you need.

Help us to make Rally Day, 1927, the greatest yet.

We appreciate very much each contribution. We were very much favored again, in receiving the garments and good materials from the Concord Vacation Bible School, which are so nice and will be very helpful to us. While these schools are helping their children, they are also proving to be a great help to the Home. We were glad to have a Vacation Bible School for the children in the Home for two weeks. It was very successfully conducted under the supervision of Rev. E. L. Ballard and Miss McCulloch; to them and the teachers who assisted so well, we are grateful.

We were pleased to have a delegation from Connelly Springs circuit, near Morganton, with us Friday; before leaving they gave us a nice donation. Each of the above personal donations were given by these good folks. We thank them sincerely, and hope they come again.

What to Do When You Don't Know What to Do

Paul was in that predicament once. It was on the road from Jerusalem to Damascus. He had started from Jerusalem feeling that he had a most important commission. It was for him to suppress a new and dangerous religion. It was a great undertaking. The new movement had gained great headway. To bring it to an end would require mighty effort on the part of a mighty man. What greater and better task could Paul devote his life to than that of exterminating Christianity? He had found his work and was devoting every ounce of his abundant energy to the successful prosecution of it. But suddenly all was changed. A voice came from heaven addressing itself to Paul and showing him in an instant that he was wholly wrong. The thing he was doing was not a great and good thing, but a very bad thing; not a courageous thing, but a cowardly thing. What was he to do? He did not know what to do.

There were several things he might have done. He might have gone on contrary to his new convictions and for the sake of seeming consistency have continued his work of persecuting Christians. No man likes to be thought weak and vacillating. He might have gone back to Jerusalem and resigned his commission and asked for another that he could execute with a clear conscience. But he was too honest a man for the first of these courses and he was too whole-hearted a man for the second. What then should he do? The thing he did do reveals a complete change in his allegiance. Heretofore he would naturally have turned to the heads of the Jewish church for direction. But he had discovered a higher authority in the heavens. He at once transfers his allegiance to this new authority in the heavens. He prays a prayer that he could not have prayed before, as he cries out to Jesus, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?

Paul's example may serve you when you do not know what to do. You may have been taking orders from your own will or from the will of men of your party. You may have recognized no higher authority. You may never have looked above your own choice or the choice of men for direction. In the service of self or of men you may have come to the end of your row. The way may seem closed to you. You may not know what to do. Of course you could do something, something foolish or something wicked. But there would be no satisfaction in that. There would be suffering in that. You want to do something satisfying, something worthy of you.

Paul's prayer will fit your mouth: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" To refuse to pray this prayer is to refuse to recognize the authority of God. To pray this prayer as Paul prayed it is to find the way of duty, the way of worthy and satisfying service. Service of God is the only reasonable service. Some men have to be brought into desperation to teach them that there is a God in heaven who has both the right and the will to direct men in their lives upon the earth.

—Look for the best in everything; we can see all the worst; look for the best, and you will find it.—Sydney Fowler.

Minify, Not Magnify, the Evil Results

Last week Brother Dozier called attention to a slip made in the Young People's Conference. A young teacher felt called upon to characterize dancing, and made the statement that it is permissible under supervision. We do not know who the young man was. His remark seems to imply that dancing would not be right or permissible without supervision, and it is difficult to see how a practice that would be wrong without supervision would become right when brought under supervision. Probably he meant that proper supervision would prevent the bringing in of elements that make dancing immoral. This week we have a letter from a good brother who feels aggrieved because he sent one of his girls to be instructed, not in worldly amusements, but along religious lines.

But there are well-meaning young people, young people who mean to be religious, who sometimes ask the question as to the morality of dancing. We suspect that the young man referred to above was pointedly asked the question as to the morality of dancing. Had he had more time to think he might have answered the question in a way unobjectionable to anyone. At any rate, one should not lose faith in the young people's conference as an institution. Mistakes may be made, but they should lead to a greater effort to avoid all mistakes in the future.

Vanzetti, one of the Italians electrocuted on Monday night for a murder committed more than seven years ago, repeatedly declared himself to be an atheist and an anarchist. In making himself an atheist he cut himself loose from the most powerful restraints that hold men from evil conduct. Without the fear of God men are held in check only by the fear of men, a comparatively feeble restraint since it is possible to elude the attention of men. In declaring himself an anarchist Vanzetti denied the right of his fellowmen to restrain him. There was left only tyranny of usurping human government to restrain him. With such a creed it is easy for a man to become a criminal. It is almost inevitable that he will become a criminal. His creed makes him the enemy of all. He is against every man who would compete with him or oppose him. There is a possibility that Vanzetti was innocent of the specific crime for which he was executed, but with his principles he could not escape a criminal career of some sort. He had declared war against government and he was beaten by government, whether fairly or not. The man that does not fear God or regard men is sure to be beaten sometime and in some way. All men need the restraint of God and of men.

—When you get even with any one that has wronged you, you put yourself exactly on his level; but when you not only take no revenge, but act kindly toward your enemy, you rise far above him, and possibly help him up too.

—There is no success in all this world which is so to be dreaded as the success of getting away from God's purpose for us.—R. E. Spear.

THE DANGERS IN GETTING AN EDUCATION

One of the greatest dangers lies in the fact that the mind, the thought, the time are almost entirely taken up with the purely secular, human, and worldly. From the time one enters high school until he finishes college there are eight years, in the most impressionable period of life, in which the intellect is wholly occupied with human books and human thought. That which appeals to the heart, the higher, spiritual nature, is crowded out. The intellect and the body are developed and trained at the expense of the spiritual. The result is that the spiritual is starved, stunted, and dwarfed. This may be overcome and "out-grown" later in life, but the whole course is extremely dangerous to the religious life. Had you thought about this? If not, think it over seriously, and see that this is fearfully true. We do not say that this follows in every individual case to a very great degree: but this is the tendency, and observation shows that this is largely the case. The courses of reading during "vacation" and at the Summer Schools are wholly secular, or non-religious. So, unless the student is postively religious in his or her nature, already well-grounded in the religious life, the Bible and other reading drawn from the Bible, and friendly to the Bible, are ignored, neglected, and crowded out. These are facts that cannot be successfully denied. When the mind is kept concentrated on the non-religious during the whole school period of life, it cannot be otherwise than dangerous to the religious life. You say, "There are chapel services." Sometimes there are, and sometimes there are not. This depends on the school, the principals, and the professors. And of course they are necessarily short, and often perfunctory. We've been reliably informed of state high schools taking up the chapel period, not in Bible reading, singing religious songs, and prayer, but in reading from some human book and singing non-religious songs, and, of course, prayer was entirely absent. We cannot expect worldly-minded, unconverted principals to conduct religious services, especially in an evangelical, religious manner. And we sometimes have principals and teachers of this kind. And added to the fact that the religious nature of the student is given the frazzled end of time for growth, development, and culture, there are some studies containing things absolutely antagonistic to the Bible and revealed religion. And added to all this, sometimes teachers skeptical, agnostical, and atheistic. And then say that there is no "danger," in getting an education? The danger is very great.

When boys and girls went to school only three or four months in the year the danger was not so great. Only a third or fourth of the time given to school work. Now it is two-thirds to three fourths of the time—the school age—that they are under this non-religious influence and pressure.

You say that it is all right to go to school and get an education. Certainly. But if one gets an education at the expense of his religious nature and life, it's a losing bargain. "What will it profit a man if he gets an education and loses his own soul?" We believe in education; but as our schools are today, there is very great danger to the religious nature of the student, because the mind is kept in a non-religious rut or groove almost entirely. And not only non-religious, but in some cases the atmosphere is positively anti-religious. There ought to be a remedy. Our histories, readers, biologies, geologies, and psychologies ought to be written by devout Christian men and women. This would help very much in creating a wholesome, Christian atmosphere in our schools, colleges, and universities. But as it is, the atmosphere, if not the actual teaching, is wholly of the world. Not essentially different from a pagan Greece and Rome.

From six to twenty-one, our children are under this influence. But after they have finished high school, and attended college or university, is the most dangerous period. And should they teach, or do post-graduate work, the danger is increased, because the whole life-thought continues in this secular, worldly, non-Christian groove. And there is danger of one thus becoming "fixed," formed and fashioned in this non-religious, non-Christian, unspiritual "groove" beyond remedy.

Forty and fifty years ago, the Christian parent had some "say-so" as to what their children studied, and who should do the teaching; but now they have no voice in the matter whatever. Had you ever thought of this? We hear complaint on every hand, not publicly, but privately, about some things taught in our schools, and the lack of religious atmosphere in our schools. What are real Christian people to do about it? Continue to obsequiously submit? Pay their taxes and continue to submit to men and women of the "world," or at least, at best, those of low religious ideals, to say nothing of the infidels and atheists, shaping the life of our schools—paganizing our children, creating a mind, or spirit, of indifference, carelessness, and in some cases downright antagonism, to the church and religion? Do not misunderstand us. We are far from saying that we have no real Christian teachers. But they have a poor chance under the present system of making their influence felt. The preponderating influence is against them. As has already been said, in the very nature of the case, it is the intellect and body that are being used, developed, and trained, and the highest part of our nature, that which differentiates us from the brute, is left largely inactive, and of course becomes stunted, dwarfed, and to a degree abnormal and subnormal. O, you say, they have home training and Sunday school and church to counteract all this. Of course this is true in a measure. Were it not for this the situation would be hopeless. But many times the student loses interest in Sunday school and church services, and becomes too "wise" (?) to listen to the admonitions of age and experience. He does not realize the situation, and it is next to impossible to get him to see it. He's spent a decade and a half, more or less, in mind exercise and training, in the purely secular and worldly, to say nothing of the skeptical, agnostic, and atheistic, that runs through the school life of our high schools, colleges, and universities. And this is the result. Some times he's a comfirmed scoffer at religion, the church, and the Christian ministry. Need we be surprised? Nay, verily; it's but the logical result of what he's gone through. And this does not stop with the boys and men, but girls and women are also "subverted." There is a certain woman who writes for one of the daily papers of the state who scoffs at and derides true old-fashioned religion, and a common-sense orthodox interpretation of the Bible. No doubt she went to school sometime somewhere. And the school life influence is mainly responsible for these things. If all skepticism and infidelity were eliminated from our school books, and all skeptics and infidels from amongst our teachers, and a reasonable degree of emphasis placed on religion in our chapel services, and a religious atmosphere in the class-room, the result would be quite different from what it is. The time has come when the Christian people should demand a "house-cleaning" in reference to the evils herein noted.

We believe in education. We believe in the public school; but it ought not to be surrendered to the worldly, the unconverted—the infidels, agnostics, and atheists, to write our books and do our teaching. They have inoculated about everything with their unbelief but mathematics. They would poison this if they could.

We are glad to say that there are a few schools who have not surrendered to the enemy. Would to God that there were more. People do not have to follow the "fashion" in education any more than in the cut of one's coat or dress. But there are comparatively few who have the good old-fashioned common sense and courage to stem the tide of "fashion" in dress, let it be ever so silly, foolish, grotesque, or immodest. And it seems to be largely so in matters of schools and education. Let some big, richly endowed institution set the pace, let it be ever so un-Christian, foolish, or absurd, the most of the smaller institutions think they must follow suit, to be "in the swim," and keep their reputation up. It's like we heard a man remark when we were a boy, that a certain man was "following right after Billy W., and Billy W. was right after the devil."

But we have a few colleges—just how many we know not—that have the courage and grace to bid defiance to the evils herein spoken of, though sponsored by the big millions endowed institutions. We have in mind one now, an A grade college, with a student body of at least 600 or 700, where none of these evils spoken of exist. If one college can be sound and four-square against infidelity, in whatever form, others can. Some folks seem to think we must make a compromise, or an alliance, with the devil, to "be up-to-date" and get an education. There has never been a bigger delusion. When will the people of God get their "eyes open," and buckle on the whole armor, and fight the devil to a finish, instead of whining and cringing because Dr. So and So said so, or Professor So and So thinks so, remembering that Dr. and Professor So and So are but fallible men. The millions of endowment backing them do not give either brains or grace. When these men become so big as to know more than God Almighty they are too big to teach our youth, and ought to be asked to resign, and let a more humble, less pretentious man take his place. Somebody that believes the Bible, and believes it in its plain, old-fashioned, evident meaning.

But we've wandered away from one of the main dangers to which we have called attention: That is, of almost the entire time and thought, and study, being taken up for years, with the purely human, secular, and worldly, to the exclusion of the religious and spiritual. Now let me prescribe a remedy for this. Dr. Howard Kelly, M. D., L.L. D., of Baltimore, the noted physician and surgeon, being second to none in his profession, and also a devout Christian, writer, and scholar, has this to say in a late copy of the Sunday School Times. He says that years ago he realized that amid the press of study and work, that he was starving his spiritual nature. So since that time he has made it a rule of his life to read nothing after his last evening meal—supper with us—but the Bible. And also to read nothing on Sunday but the Bible. The result has been that he has become a very devout Christian and a great Bible scholar. And all this Bible reading and study have not detracted one iota from his ability and skill as a physician and surgeon, as he stands at the very head of his profession. So if the students in our schools and colleges would set apart a definite part of their time for Bible reading as Dr. Kelly did, this would avert much of the danger involved in getting an education. The soul would be fed and not starved, and would not be soil in which skepticism and infidelity would so easily take root and thrive. In fact, such soil would be wholly unfavorable for unbelief of any kind to take root and grow. This could be made mandatory on the part of the school. Not make it an excuse, however, for some Professor to air his unbelief, but just require the boys and girls, men and women to read the Bible, so much daily, as a minimum, "without note or comment." Leave the book to do its own work, without any "tinkering" of scholars (?) and infidels. It's transformed many an unbeliever into a devout believer. More than one man has started out to refute the Bible as he vainly thought, but got refuted himself, and converted, exclaiming like Thomas of old, "My Lord and my God!" Among them Gen. Lew Wallace, of Ben Hur fame, and a number of Chinese and Japanese employed by Missionaries in translating the Bible. They started out as Bible haters and ended as Bible lovers. The Bible itself is its own best defense. If one will read it unprejudicedly, honestly, and thoroughly, it will carry conviction. Jesus Christ was not afraid to risk the word on its own merits, saying, go into all the world and "preach." He did not say to go and "fool" time with the "critics"—the truth-haters, for they are hopeless cases, as long as they hate the truth—but to preach, proclaim, announce the word, the truth, and whosoever believes it will be saved, and he that does not will be "damned," because he rejects the only way, and "damnation" is inevitable. Jesus spoke with authority in the matter, because he knew what he was talking about, and simply stated an inevitable result. There was nothing more to be said, or any apology to make. It was an eternal ultimatum. So all this "modernism" that has invaded our schools has grown out of unbelief, and is unbelief, and nothing else. So Jesus was not afraid to risk the word on its own merits, for he knew what the word could not do nothing could do. So give our boys and girls the plain word, without any "tinkering" of so-called teachers who do not believe it. Explaining away miracles &c., &c., and calling it "religious education." If such men as this do not find a warm reception in the "sweet bye and bye," it seems that nobody else need to have any fears. Jesus said that whoever caused "one of these little ones to offend (stumble) it were better for him to have a millstone hanged about his neck and he be cast into the sea." This shows that there is something more fearful than physical death in store for such persons. Those who receive not the "love of the truth, that they be saved," receive "strong delusion," and are "damned," whatever this may mean.

ONLY A SUGGESTION

It was just a class of young people that I taught in the Sunday school of a little country church, a few weeks ago. But the suggestiveness of it was so great that I want to pass it along. The class was composed of just a dozen young men and women. But what of them? One was a graduate of the state university; another a graduate of a teacher's college; two others were college students and three more high school students. And there were five members of the class not present, who were high school students.

Suggestion number one: How can a pastor with less than an eighth grade education, received in a one-room country school, hope to interest and lead such young people?

Suggestion number two: If such young people are to be held in the Methodist Protestant Church, and become the future leaders of our denominational enterprises, what must be the attitude of our conferences toward the question of ministerial efficiency?

Suggestion number three: What must be the attitude and ambition of the young man who feels the "divine call," and aspires to become a "feeder of the Lord's flocks?"

The little class that I taught is a fair example of what may be found in hundreds of our churches in nearly all of our conferences. Which way is the wind blowing?

Fairmont, West Va.

—Once an English friend found Jenny Lind sitting on the steps of a bathing-machine on the sands, with a Lutheran Bible on her knee, looking out into the glory of a sunset that was shining over the waters. They talked, and the talk drew near to the inevitable question, "Oh, Madame Goldschmidt, how was it that you ever came to abandon the stage, at the very height of your success?" "When every day," was the quiet answer, "it made me think less of this (laying a finger on the Bible) and nothing at all of that (pointing to the sunset), what else could I do?"

NEWBURYPORT——WHERE WHITEFIELD DIED

Every Methodist, who travels near Newburyport, Massachusetts, should visit that popular old seaport at the mouth of the Merrimac River. For in this city beneath the pulpit of the Old South Presbyterian Church rest the remains of George Whitefield, evangelist, preacher, and early coworker wtih John Wesley. He was born in England and ordained to preach the gospel on two continents.

Traveling into the city one is told that the church is in the section to the right of the main road from Boston. After driving a few blocks through the quaint, narrow streets, suddenly one can see that long, finger-like church spire pointing far into the blue sky. It stands as a sentinel guarding the quiet remains of a great Christian soldier, while at the same time reminding men of the God above.

As the tourist draws nearer, the beauty of the white edifice grows upon him. The pastor very kindly escorted the writer to the innermost wonders and secrets of the holy place. The exterior of the building is rectangular and plain. The front of the church has been changed from its original design, and the beauty of it has been enriched. The interior is spotless, as the exterior would indicate, even though the church has long since passed the century mark. The parishioners take pride in the realization that their church edifice has been the shelter of many weary souls. To them it is hallowed ground. Its walls still echo with the master voice of its founder, George Whitefield.

The pews are box-like with entrance gates, and beneath the seats are parking places for the stove-pipe hats, worn by the deacons. In the corner of each pew may be found the little benches or stools where children, who were seen but not heard, could be seated. At the front of the auditorium is the beautiful pulpit. Unlike the arrangement in most churches the pulpit of Old South has no choir behind it or at its side. The portion of the church devoted to music, including the organ and choir loft, are in the rear facing the pulpit. The architect may have taken account of the annoyance sometimes furnished by groups of singers and therefore put the choir directly under the eye of the minister.

Perhaps the most interesting sections of the church, aside from the pulpit and altar, are the slave pews in the right and left corners of the rear balcony. To the modern observer it may seem a strange contradiction that in this church these pews are found while at the rear of the building is the house in which William Lloyd Garrison, founder of the anti-slavery movement in America, was born thirty-five years after the death of Whitefield. Possibly the inspiration for Garrison's work in after years came from the sight of the slave and owner in the same building, worshiping the same God, hearing the same sermon, but separated by class distinction. Little wonder, then, that Garrison should have become the fearless leader that he was! Whitefield, being an owner of slaves, very naturally provided a place for them in his church.

Our guide, the minister of Old South, permitted us to stand in the sacred pulpit where Whitefield thundered out the gospel message in his day and attracted the crowds from near and far. When he whispered every worshiper heard him; for one to this day can turn his face towards any corner of the church, and, speaking in very low tones, be heard throughout the entire auditorium. When the great orator cried aloud he could be heard not only by the worshipers in the church, but as Benjamin Franklin once said, by thirty thousand listeners. To stand in this pulpit is an inspiration. If one can be moved at all, this experience will certainly stir his emotions. To the writer it was a thrill not soon to be forgotten.

If the visitor will look out over the empty pews of historic Old South Church and allow his imagination full sway, he may visualize the weary mariner just back from a long trip, for Newburyport was important in oversea's trade, the aged mother anxious about her wayward son, the slave owner and his slave, the saints of God, old and young, and the penitent in tears under the terrible preaching of Whitefield.

From the pulpit our guide took us to the burial place of Whitefield just beneath it. We stepped through a small opening into the brick vault and with the aid of a lantern saw the bones of the great precher which are still visible through the glass cover of his coffin, which lies on the floor of the vault. Two of Whitefield's associates also are buried here. In our Protestant faith we do not worship relics, but here in this dark vault is all that remains of the earthly tabernacle of that great soul who led thousands into the way of Christ, and who still speaks the words of life today to weary wanderers everywhere.

The pastor of the church told a story to the writer which adds somewhat to the accounts of the biographers of Whitefield. On Saturday, September 29, 1770, Whitefield had preached at Exeter, New Hampshire, and then returned to Newburyport for rest and recuperation. Arriving late in the day he sought solitude. But some one saw the great preacher as he entered the town and it was soon noised abroad that he had returned to his home. In a short time a crowd had gathered in front of the parsonage, the second house from the church, and they earnestly besought him to preaeh to them once more. Presently he came to the front door of the house, and with a lighted candle in his left hand, poured out his heart until the candle burned out in its holder. Then he went back into the house and retired in the front bedroom upstairs where his great soul went home to God at dawn on the next day, September 30, 1770.

Like the candle in his hand he had burned out. His voice was stilled forever. His body had been frail through many years, made so perhaps by his repeated fasts in the early days of his life and his vigorous work of traveling and preaching. Thirteen times he crossed the ocean. He had traveled far and near in his effort to lead men into the way of life. No preacher worked harder or preached louder or more enthusiastically than George Whitefield. We do not raise the question of his theology but record his life as that of a truly great evangelistic preacher.

The church at Newburyport is the mother of three others that have gone out from it. They have died but she still lives. With a small but devout congregation regular services are still held. Old South ministers as in the days gone by but to a society greatly changed from that of Whitefield's day. It is to be sincerely hoped that, as the years come and go, this sacred edifice may continue to stand as a guidepost on life's highway directing weary pilgrims along the pathway of the Saviour. It is a place of interest and inspiration, not only because Whitefield, the preacher, once ministered there, and hundreds of souls have found God within its walls, but also because this church is the last resting place of the man who paved the way in America for Methodism. "Ye must be born again," was Whitefield's cry from Georgia to Maine, to rich and poor, to sinner and saint. He lived and died but his soul goes on forever. Every visitor to New England would do well to make a pilgrimage to the Old South Church in Newburyport.—Zion's Herald.

—Some will censure the courts and the governor of Massachusetts for consenting to the death of Vanzetti and Saccho. Others will censure them for delaying so long their execution. It is an unfortunate case any way you look at it. Taking mankind the world over, some will blame the courts and some will put all blame upon the victims, and some will suspend judgment. It would seem that great care was exercised to weigh the evidence, yet there are some intelligent people who declare themselves not fully convinced by the evidence.

BIBLE STUDY

Dr. Howard A. Kelly, of Johns Hopkins University, is known and honored among learned men and societies throughout the world. He is one of the world's greatest surgeons, an authority on radium and an author of note in the medical and scientific world. Dr. Kelly is also a great believer in and student of the Bible. For the past 25 years he has spent from one to four hours a day studying the Bible.

"While I was at college," he says, "I often met men who scoffed at the Bible; it 'wasn't practical' and 'didn't mean anything' in the battle of life. I realized, however, from God's living Word and from experience that Christianity was pre-eminently adapted to our human needs, and that it was a workable proposition. So I made a definite resolve to incorporate it into my daily life and to show the world its practicability."

Not resting on the conclusions of mere reason, he has put the teachings of the Bible to definite trial in his life, making what may be called a laboratory test of Christianity.

"The Bible," says Dr. Kelly, "does work, and does just what it promises to do—transforms life. I have never in my whole life met a man who really knew the Bible and rejected it. The difficulty has always been an unwillingness to give it an honest trial. As our Lord Himself says, 'Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.' "

"The crying need of the world today," he says, "is a more intimate, thorough knowledge of the Word of God, for the Bible is in reality the rarest of books. The heart of man the whole world over hungers for God. St. Augustine cried, 'Lord, thou hast made us for Thyself and restless are our hearts until they rest in Thee.' The Bible message is God's perfect answer to that cry of spirit-starved humanity.

"It is the one book in the world which is always young and fresh and inspiring.

"Whatever there is in civilization that is worth while rests on the Bible precepts.

"If only half the people would accept and apply the Bible whole-heartedly, myriads would be won for Christ and the terrors which threaten our nation today would vanish and peace with her attending blessings would reign!"—The Program Builder.

KNOWLEDGE

There are three kinds of knowledge, so-called. Certain knowledge, such as that of mathematics, is based upon facts, and cannot be disproved. Uncertain knowledge, such as that of the evolution of the species, is based upon mere theory, and awaits proof or demonstration. Erroneous knowledge, such as that of idolatry, is based upon falsehood, and cannot be proved to be true.

Knowledge is power. To know the truth is to wield a scepter of wonderful enlightment and uplift. Consecrated learning means much for the betterment of the race and the glory of God. Unsanctified knowledge is a doubtful, dangerous, and, too often, a deadly acquisition.

The following "Arabian Legend" is opportune:

"He who knows not, and knows not that he knows not, is a fool,—shun him.

"He who knows not, and knows that he knows not, is docile,—teach him.

"He who knows, and knows not that he knows is asleep,—awake him.

"He who knows, and knows that he knows, is a leader,—follow him."—Word of Life.

A FIVE-POINT CREED

As to my personal faith, it is very simple and very real—a reflection of the faith of my father and mother, the faith that comes up to me with ever growing power from the hallowed association and memories of their lives. In its practical phases, I may perhaps better express it in five principles which I have tried to follow in dealing with men. I believe them to be vital to the success of anything that I may attempt.

I believe that preparation wins. A man must know all about his business; he must know a little more than any other man knows. As a rule, we find what we look for; we achieve what we get ready for.

I believe that hard work wins. The only kind of luck that any man is justified in banking on is hard work, hard work which is made up for sacrifice, persistent effort, and dogged determination. Growth is never by mere chance; it is the result of forces working together.

I believe that honesty wins—the kind of honesty that keeps a man's fingers out of his neighbor's till, of course, but the finer honesty that will not allow a man to give less than his best, the kind of honesty that makes him count not his hours but his duties and opportunities, that finer honesty which constantly urges him to enlarge his information and to increase his efficiency.

I believe that confidence in men wins. I have found my most successful associates by giving men responsibility, by making them feel that I relied upon them, and those who have proved to be unworthy have only caused the others, who so far outnumbered them, to stand in a clearer light. Use good business judgment, of course; do not throw away common sense, but trust your fellows!

I believe that the spirit wins. The Bible says, "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Every enterprise I have been interested in demonstrates this fact. It is the spirit of the hardy pioneers on our orchards and farms; it is the spirit of the builders of our cities, the founders of our industrial enterprises; and it is the spirit of the men and women who are establishing our homes, that will solve the problems, conquer the difficulties, and achieve the permanent prosperity of America.—Zion's Herald.

THE GLORY OF A YOUNG MAN'S LIFE

Do not dare to live without some clear intention toward which living shall be bent. Mean to be something with all your might. Do not add act to act and day to day in perfect thoughtlessness, never asking hourself whither the growing time is leading. But at the same time, do not dare to be so absorbed in your own life, so wrapped up in listening to the sound of your own hurrying wheels, that all this vast pathetic music made up of the mingled joy and sorrow of your fellow-men, shall not find out your heart and claim it, and make you rejoice to give yourself up for them. And yet, all the while, keep the upward windows open. Do not dare to think that a child of God can worthily work out his career or worthily serve God's other children unless he does both in the love and fear of God their Father. Be sure that ambition and charity will both grow mean unless they are both inspired and exalted by religion. Energy, love and faith—these make the perfect man. And Christ, who is the perfectness of all of them, gives them all three to any young man who, at the very outset of his life, gives himself to him. If there is any young man here who generously wants to live a whole life, the Lord stands ready to give these three, energy, love and faith, and to train them in him all together, till they make him the perfect man.—Phillips Brooks.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

Good News From Japan

Rev. E. I. Obee gives us the following encouraging information relative to the work in two of the Mission Stations in the Yokohama District. "The work during this quarter has been regular and in general quite satisfactory. Oyama Mission has improved especially in regard to the Sunday school. The Kindergarten teachers are giving splendid help and the pastor, who acts as superintendent, is a good and willing worker. It is a pleasure to see this busy, thriving school in session. Aggressive evangelistic work is also being constantly carried on.

"Taurumi Mission, too, is in a growing condition. We have finally secured a larger chapel in a better location. This will give an opportunity for expansion of our work. The owner of this chapel is a Buddhist but he is willing to give the Gospel a hearing and to allow his seven children to attend the meetings. During the summer vacation the theological students serving this work can give their full time to it and we are expecting good results."

Miss Olive I. Hodges reports also that the Kindergarten at Oyama seems to be in the best condition it has ever been. The majority of the children attend the Sunday school in which both of the teachers teach. Heretofore the children have come largely from the homes of the managers and officers of the big factories but now many of the town children are also enrolled.

Of the Honmoker Kindergarten she writes that its enrollment is the largest it has been for several years. She attributes this increase largely to the greater interest in the Kindergarten on the part of the Church people.

Miss Mary E. Williams gives us this very encouraging report of the Kakiwa-Shinsei Kindergarten in Nagoya: "Three of our Kindergarten mothers were baptized and received into the Atsuta Church on June 11th. At the same time the little son of one mother and little daughter of one of the other mothers received baptism. The father of the little daughter had come into the church in November of last year.

"Because of the advantageous location of our plant here, and because of the intelligent reliable character of this section of Nagoya, the prospects of building up a strong church from the immediate neighborhood seems more promising to me than that of any of our other churches in Nagoya City."

With the leaving of Rev. and Mrs. J. Clyde Auman on their furlough Rev. Paul F. Warner has been put in charge of the Nagoya College. This work is new to Brother Warner yet he is taking hold of it in an intelligent manner and is highly pleased with the caliber of the instructors and the future outlook of the college.

Among the posthumous papers of that acute Frenchman, Anatole France, is to be found this shrewd sentence: "To love war because it makes heroes is like loving croup because doctors and nurses have died in an attempt to save a child's life." Heroic deeds are recorded in connection with all the works of the devil, but they are not because of the devil, but in spite of him. Upright living gives ample opportunity for heroism without calling in the aid of that terrible iniquity, war. Never indeed, is it war that makes heroes, but their heroism is exercised in seeking to put an end to war.—Arrow.

HONORING WORTH IN LABOR

The process of putting up some of the recent important buildings in New York has been varied by an interesting incident. When the construction reached a stage when certain classes of workers had finished their part, a little gathering was held on a decorated platform. The architect and the builder were there. A hod-carrier, perhaps, was called forward to be decorated with a gold button and to receive an engraved certificate. A bricklayer might be the next, and so on through several of the trades represented. After the building was finished there was another such ceremony, at which workers of other classes received like honor for excellence in service.

The New York Building Congress is said to be responsible for furthering this plan, and more than three hundred workmen have received such recognition.

Ambition simply to get public credit is a low motive; the approval of conscience ought to outweigh all other praise. But as it is a mark of poor breeding in a child or an older person not to express thanks for a service, the community suffers a loss from not expressing appreciation of what benefits it. Skill of brain or of hand is likely to win recognition. The toiler on work that is useful if not artistic will be helped by knowing that his faithfulness is not ignored; and it ought to be counted a privilege to give him such encouragement. The practice of standardizing labor and counting hands and hours without reference to results tends to put all workers on the same level and thus to discount real worth, to cheapen the work, and to degrade the laborer. The new plan deserves hearty praise and wider application.—Christian Endeavor World.

GETTING SOMETHING FOR NOTHING

It has been estimated that approximately one billion dollars are filched from the American public by unscrupulous swindlers and promoters of wildcat schemes. They trade on that firmly ingrained delusion, so common to thousands of citizens, that it is possible to get something for nothing or next to nothing.

Aesop's time-honored fable of the dog who lost its bone in an effort to snap at the shadow seems to have lost its application or to have been allowed to drop into obscurity. There are people who are chasing shadows and losing sight of their substance.

Day by day new schemes are being devised for extracting hard cash from the bank accounts of the frugal-minded who wish to better themselves. When will the people learn that honest industry is the surest road to independence? Getting something for nothing is against all natural laws and against the promptings of common sense.—Christian Endeavor World.

THREE KINDS OF GIVERS

Someone has said that there are three kinds of givers—"the flint, the sponge and the honeycomb."

To get anything out of a flint you must hammer it, and then you can only get chips and sparks.

To get water out of a sponge you must squeeze it, and the more that you squeeze the more you get.

But the honeycomb just overflows with its own sweetness.

Some people are stingy and hard. They give nothing away if they can help it.

Others are good-natured; they yield to pressure, and the more they are pressed the more they will give.

A few delight in giving without being asked at all; and of these the Bible says, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—Wesleyan Methodist.

The WORK and the WORKERS

Since our last report we have been very active in the service, and a complete report would call for a rather lengthy article. But we shall try to be brief.

Albemarle

On Sunday morning, August 14th, I preached to a splendid congregation in our Albemarle church. Our people are happy in the work and are moving along splendidly. The pastor, Rev. J. R. Anderson, is greatly loved by his people. The young women of the Philathea class contributed something over $14 to the A. C. B. that morning and thus started the ball rolling which has caused that church to pay the A. C. B. in full for the year. (See financial report).

We were assured that they will pay all budgets in full for the year. I was glad to see Mr. J. E. Gantt and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Moton in the congregation. These are missed so much by our people in Albemarle. Brother Joy Hatley is building a new home which he proposes to move the pastor into, thus permitting the parsonage to be moved preparatory to building a new church.

Friendship

Sunday evening I was at Friendship with Rev. C. H. Hill and his people. It is always a pleasure to visit this church. Here we were greeted by a large congregation which listened to the Word gladly. Some improvements have been made in the building of a larger platform for the pulpit, and in adding to the lighting which add much to the appearance and attractiveness of this already splendid church. The parsonage and grounds are also beautifully kept. They love their pastor and the work is going well. The pastor is not so sure about the budgets, but is doing his best to collect them, and it is safe to say they will have the best year yet in raising budgets.

Midland

Mrs. Dixon was with Rev. J. W. Hulin and his people at Love's Grove in a meeting on Sunday, and I went to them on Monday. We held three services per day, closing the meeting Thursday evening. It was one of the greatest meetings we have been in for a long time. There were many conversions and reclamations. Thirty-five joined the church, and perhaps others will yet join. Brother Hulin is happy in the work, and his people are delighted with him. He is in a meeting at Mill Grove this week, and will hold his third and last meeting at Pine Bluff next week.

Lexington

On Wednesday evening I drove to Lexington to meet Miss Alice Koonce and Mr. Cary Davis, and married them in the home of Rev. and Mrs. N. G. Bethea. As soon as the ceremony was over I went with Brother Bethea to his C. E. meeting, which was fine. Following this deeply spiritual meeting we were all invited to participate in a delightful social meeting in the basement of the church. It was a happy evening in service for these young people. The work here is in fine shape.

Chatham

August 20 and 21 were given to Rev. C. G. Isley and his people on Chatham. On Saturday afternoon the third quarterly conference met at Pine Grove. It was well attended and a good interest was manifest. The reports were fairly good.

At night I preached in the closing service of a meeting in Hope Church at Bonlee. It was a good meeting. Seventeen joined the church, making twenty-four for the year. They have put in new pews, have painted and beautified the church inside and are planning to paint the outside of the building right away.

Sunday morning I was at Hickory Grove. They set a day to clean off the grounds and to build concrete steps at the door. Their revival here is to be held the third Sunday in September. I preached to an attentive audience. Glad to have Rev. W. M. Pike in the congregation. This is his home church.

In the afternoon we were at Pine Grove. A revival was in progress near, so the congregation was not large, and yet we had 60 or more people present, and they gave good attention to the Word. Rev. F. L. Gibbs and Brother Woody, from Siler City, were present.

The revival services are to begin here next Sunday. Flint Ridge and Zion churches are planning improvements on their buildings.

Brother Isley is doing a good work on Chatham, and the people seem well pleased with him. He and his mother are living in Bonlee now. He says he has already added over ten per cent to the membership this year, and has two more meetings to hold. Chatham will do better financially this year than it has done for a long time.

Guilford

While I was on Chatham Sunday Mrs. Dixon was with Rev. O. C. Loy at Midway on Guilford in a meeting, and this week both of us are doing our best to help out with this meeting. This is a strategic point for us, and we are hoping that this meeting will do great good in the community.

A DAY AT A TIME

"Be not anxious for your life." "The worst of our fears never happen," said Gladstone, the "Grand Old Man" of England. After years of forebodings in government, after many misunderstandings with the crowned heads of Europe, after motives of Christian service had been misconstrued, Gladstone bore testimony that the things that worried him most never happened.

Jesus realized, as He went about among men and women, how many people were carrying unnecessary burdens. Just as it is happening today. Mothers are worrying themselves sick about their children and cumbered about serving; fathers, fearful of the years ahead, buying the home, paying for children's education, carrying business responsibility. And the strength needed for life's battle is sapped during sleepless nights and fretful days.—Exchange.

MRS. BROCKTON'S AWAKENING

Mrs. Brockton was reclining on a low couch. Her pale face wore a fretful expression, her hair was uncombed, and her hands were not too clean. The book she had been reading had dropped to the floor.

"Helen!" she called impatiently.

A bright-faced girl of eighteen came in from the next room.

"What is it, mother?" she asked.

"What is it! Oh, everything. My head aches and I can hardly stay on this couch. The boys are so noisy before they start for school that it upsets me for the entire day. It does seem as if they might be more quiet. What are you doing?"

"I have just finished washing the dishes. I suppose I must make a pie for dinner."

"A pie for dinner! Are we to think of nothing but eating? But I suppose your father must have his stomach well filled, whether I live or die. He is exceedingly selfish and you are just like him! This room is in terrible disorder."

It was, indeed. Magazines and papers were scattered about, the floor needed sweeping, and various articles of wearing apparel were hanging over the chairs. The piano was covered with dust.

"I'm sure that old piano might as well be sold, or carried out into the shed," grumbled Mrs. Brockton. "You seldom touch it, even with a duster."

A pained expression came into the girl's eyes, as she looked at her stepmother.

"I don't have time, mother, to play"—

"That is your excuse for everything! I'm sure I can't imagine what you are doing all the time. You only have the cooking and housework to do for five! When I was eighteen, I could easily have done twice as much work as you do, and had time for recreation. But girls do not have the ambition now that they had years ago. O dear, how terribly my head aches!"

"Mother," ventured the girl, half pleadingly, "there is going to be a picnic tomorrow afternoon in Sawyer's Grove. I should like to go."

"A picnic!"

"Yes; a Sunday school picnic."

"Why didn't you speak of it before?"

"I didn't know it until last night. Sue Clayton called and she told me about it."

"I wish Sue Clayton would keep away! She makes you more uneasy than you would be naturally. When I was a girl, I did not always want to be going somewhere. I suppose you are just selfish enough to go off and leave me, as ill as I am, alone for the entire afternoon."

"I thought some arrangement might be made so I could go".

"Some arrangement, indeed! But go, if your heart is set on it. If I die here alone, you will have it to think of, that's all," and the invalid raised a handekerchief to her eyes.

Suppressing the retort that rose to her lips, Helen escaped to the kitchen.

The pie was made and a roast cooking for dinner. Then Helen swept and dusted the rooms and combed her stepmother's hair. When her father came, dinner was on the table.

"A good dinner, as usual," he said, smiling at his daughter. "And how are you feeling today, Louise?" he added, turning to his wife.

"Oh, about as usual. I'm a poor, helpless creature. I suppose I live for some purpose, but I often wonder what it is."

"We must trust to God's mercy and wisdom," said Mr. Brockton reverently.

"Yes, of course, but I am discouraged and who can wonder? I am a burden to you and Helen."

"De we ever complain?"

"Why, no; sometimes I wish you would. O dear! my appetite is so variable. I have eaten little today, and I am not hungry now."

And yet she ate a good dinner, finishing with a generous square of custard pie.

"Your pie was good, Helen," she said. "You are a fairly good cook and do very well as a housekeeper, although, of course, you are young and inexperienced. When I was eighteen, I could do as well as I could ten years later, but I took more interest in housekeeping than most girls do. I was naturally ambitious and I always liked housework. Husband, if you will assist me, I will try to get back to my couch. This weakness is terrible."

Two years before, Mrs. Brockton had had a serious illness from which she had made a slow and tedious recovery, finally relapsing into a state of semi-invalidism. She complained a great deal, her two little boyys, eight and ten years of age, annoyed her, and things in general were all wrong from her view; but her husband and stepdaughter were very patient with her.

The morning of the next day after Helen had spoken to her mother about the picnic, Aunt Mary Tasker—she was "aunt" to everybody in the neighborhood—called. Mrs. Brockton, as usual, was in a despondent mood.

"Now, Louise," said Aunt Mary briskly, "I think you have much to be thankful for. You have a pleasant home, a kind husband, and a daughter who does everything she can for your comfort."

"She is not my daughter."

"She is your stepdaughter, but no own daughter could be more respectful and obedient. She works hard to make a home for you all, and she goes but very little."

"Has she been complaining to you?"

"By no means. But I am an old woman and I can see how things are. I am coming over to stay with you this afternoon, and Helen can go to the Sunday school picnic."

"You are very kind," said Mrs. Brockton meekly. "I suppose it is natural for girls to want to go. But when I was young" —

"You wanted to go out occasionally, I dare say. It would be a strange girl who wanted to stay in all the time. I'm going now, but I'll talk with you this afternoon."

She did. Mrs. Brockton was complaining about the state of her health.

"If I could only be well," she said mournfully. "I can't work and I don't even enjoy reading. I'm very unhappy."

"I don't doubt it. But don't you think you dwell too much on your troubles?"

"I don't know how I can help thinking of them. I have little else to occupy my mind."

"Try to think of something cheerful."

"What would it be?"

Aunt Mary smiled slightly, then she sighed.

"Louise, you may think I am meddling with what does not concern me, but you know I am your friend, and whatever I say is said in a spirit of love. You are a Christian woman?"

"W-why, yes. I have been a church member for many years. But I—I am unworthy."

"We are all unworthy. But as Christians we can always find something to cheer us."

"But I am so afflicted"—

"We are all afflicted in some way. Paul tells us that 'our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.' You are afflicted with poor health, but there are many who are crippled, blind, helpless, and many have not the comforts that you enjoy. Try to think of your home, your husband, your children, your many friends. Oh, there are so many blessings for us all."

"If I could only regain my health!" sighed Mrs. Brockton wistfully.

"You will regain it; I feel sure that you will. Nerves are troublesome things, and you are very nervous. If you can only get away from your fears, so to speak, your health will improve."

Mrs. Brockton flushed. "Then you think there is really nothing the matter with me, I suppose," she said, in an aggrieved tone.

"I didn't say so, Louise; but I do think that if you could get your mind off your troubles, you would be much better than you are now. You suffer, of course, but I don't think you need to suffer so much."

"Probably you are right," said Mrs. Brockton, with a sigh. "Dr. Colson has told me that I need to rouse myself. I wonder if I can do it."

"Certainly you can do it, and you will be surprised at the result."

"Well, I don't know," said Mrs. Brockton doubtfully. "But I'll try to think of others and see if I can forget my own troubles."

"God bless you, dear," said Aunt Mary, kissing her friend. "Helen is coming now, and I must go."

"I will try," murmured Mrs. Brockton again.

She did try. At first there were failures, of course. But gradually she ceased to worry about herself, and became interested in her home, her friends, church affairs, and other things. To Helen the change was very marked.

"Are you going out, mother?" she asked, in surprise, when Mrs. Brockton came into the living-room, one afternoon, clad for the street.

"Yes, I'm going to call on Aunt Mary. I want her to see that I have taken her advice. I'm afraid, Helen, that I haven't been a good mother to you. No," as she saw that the girl was about to speak, "let me relieve my mind and I shall feel better. I haven't spoken harshly to you, perhaps; but I have been selfish and you have had few privileges and many things to discourage you. Now that I have roused myself, I see that I wasn't so ill as I fancied, and taking an interest in life gives me new strength and courage. God helping me, I intend to turn over a new leaf. Kiss me, my daughter."

With tears in her eyes, Helen kissed her stepmother.—Zion's Herald.

OUR CHARACTER OF LIVING DETERMINES OUR CHARACTER OF TEACHING

Jesus taught. But He lived what He taught. And He lived it first before He taught it. And He lived it most, more than He ever could teach it. On the human here was the great power of His teaching. He will teach us. We need it. We need it daily. But we must live it as we learn it: then we teach it to others. This is the first rule in Jesus' school.—S. D. Gordon.

Men do not complain of the sixth commandment, which protects their persons; nor of the eighth, which protects their property; why, then, should they complain of the fourth, which protects their rightful heritage, a weekly day of rest?—Eugene Stock.

THE DIVINE PRESENCE IN THE WORLD

The most comforting truth of all is found in the assurance that the Christ is still abroad in this world, and that the testimony of his divine achievements is still the most convincing evidence of his mission as the world's Saviour. Yea, Jesus is still the miracle-worker! The physical miracles of long ago have given way to greater spiritual wonders. If we are still carnal and political in our views of the Kingdom of God, like the old Jews; if we still require signs and symbols; if we want a Messiah for nothing more than to break down visible prison-walls, like a John the Baptist—then to us the age of miracles is indeed forever past. The Master is not here to heal outwardly, in answer to every human cry, nor is he silencing troubled waters with audible voice. But is not human intercourse all the more perfect since the world has substituted the wireless telegraph for the ancient messenger? The Saviour is all the more truly present today than ever before; present in the pervading and determining influence of his omnipotent love; present in the person of the Holy Spirit; and he is therefore doing greater miracles than even in his earthly ministry.

What healings, what transformations he has wrought in this world since first he began to go about doing good! The greatest miracle of all is the miracle of regeneration; the miracle which gives to man the new heart out of which to send forth the springs of new life. And the regenerate heart, let us remember, is the essential preparation for the testimony of achievement in our own province of Christian duty. "Not every one that sayeth unto me 'Lord, Lord;' but he that doeth the will of my Father!" That is the final standard of efficiency! That is the testimony of achievement!—Methodist Recorder.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Anderson.—There has been no report from this pastor for some time. The reporters have been giving you a little insight to what we have been doing. Two Children's Day services were held and each was very impressive. The pastor was away attending the Summer Conference and did not have the privilege of attending the service at Liberty Hill. I was told that the children rendered their parts well and those in charge have our thanks for their kind work. On the fifth Sunday in July our Children's Day service was held at Fairview. It was well rendered and enjoyed by a large congregation. The offering for Foreign Missions was about $20.00 on the charge. Many thanks to the ones who prepared the program at Fairview.

Our meetings have been held and the pastor is much gratified that much good has been accomplished. A ten days meeting at Fairview began Wednesday night, August 3. Rev. E. G. Cowan from Cross Anchor did all the preaching. Brother Cowan preached splendid sermons and they were enjoyed by a good many people. The interest was not at all what the pastor had expected and the results were far from my expectations. So far as I know and could see no visible results were realized. I feel however that much good was done and the church was revived very much. The pastor enjoyed the association and fellowship with Brother Cowan in the meeting and also his helpful messages. We were glad to have Mrs. Cowan and E. G. Jr, with us a few days during the meeting. A purse of $25.00 was given to Brother Cowan as a token of appreciation for his services. Brother Cowan and family with the pastor enjoyed a very delightful trip to Pickens, S. C., on Monday during the meeting where we had dinner with Brother T. B. Nalley and his family. In the afternoon he took us with Mrs. Nalley and little Emma Nan through Rocky Bottom and on through the mountains into North Carolina. Brother Cowan and his family had worn the tar off their heels considerably and were glad to get back over the line and replentish their supply before returning to Cross Anchor.

On Sunday, August 14th, we began our meeting at Liberty Hill. Rev. R. Lee Leonard, a former member of Liberty Hill, now a licensed minister in the M. E. Church, South, residing in Greenville, S. C., was engaged to assist the pastor in this meeting. It was the intention of the pastor to do most of the preaching with Brother Leonard in charge of the singing, but owing to my physical condition that had to be changed, Brother Leonard did all the preaching except for one service when his throat was giving trouble and the pastor preached for him. Two services were held each day with a song service for the young people in the afternoon and during the remainder of the time Brother Leonard and I were in our old Ford visiting and helping the people to get right with their fellow man and God. It was a busy week but we witnessed a good revival and much good was accomplished. The church was revived and many were saved or reconsecrated. Wednesday morning ten young people came forward in a consecration service for Life Work. Fathers and mothers were saved and reconsecrated during the meeting. Yesterday (Sunday) the doors of the church were opened for the reception of members and ten young people united with the church. I think there will be more to join later. The ordinance of infant baptism was administered to three candidates at the morning service. The services closed Sunday night with people rejoicing because of blessings from God. Pray that He will continue to bless us and that those unsaved will soon accept Him. As a token of our appreciation for Brother Leonard's service we gave him a purse of $61.15 at the close of the service last night. I think it was the happiest week in the service I have witnessed during my work as a pastor.

We were glad to have Mrs. Leonard and the children with us Saturday night and Sunday.

The attendance and interest was good from the beginning. On Sunday morning two came forward and asked for prayer and in 'most every service there was requests for prayer. The house was packed most every night regardless of the fact that other meetings were in progress nearby. Sunday night one young man counted the cars and there was 188 besides some trucks and wagons. The church was filled and people were standing in the aisles forty-five minutes before the preaching hour last night. I was told that there was enough people outside to have more than filled the church.

M. IVEY CRUTCHFIELD, Pastor.

Moriah.—The attendance at the church services has been good for the summer months due to the wonderful messages which Rev. Mr. Carmichael brings to the congregation every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.

Our pastor, Mr. Carmichael, helped in a revival meeting at Shiloh during the past week.

Several from our church are attending the meeting at Alamance.

We are sorry to hear that Mrs. Sam Ingold is seriously ill at her home, we are hoping that she will soon be out again.

Our Christian Endeavor Societies are moving along nicely now, and we hope our membership will continue to increase.

We were glad to have a number of visitors for Sunday school and also for church service Sunday.

Our Sunday school picnic which was held on the church grounds recently, was attended by a large crowd and every one seemed to enjoy the afternoon.

Our meeting will begin Sunday, August 28. We will have all-day service Sunday, at 11 and two o'clock; at three o'clock and 7:30 during the week. Pray for us that we may have a successful meeting.

We are glad to hear that Mrs. Lizzie Gladstone has returned to her home, after being a patient at the Clinic hospital.

Our superintendent, Mr. J. C. Coe, is spending his vacation at Baltimore and other points north.

We will have choir practice Thursday night at the church. The Greensboro Young Men's quartet will be with us and we are expecting a large crowd.

Best wishes,

REPORTER.

Asheboro.—Ordinarily my reports are written about our work here. This time I have decided to scatter a little. First, about that meeting at Bethany on Randolph Circuit, Rev. A. O. Lindley, pastor. It was indeed refreshing to be in a meeting of this kind once more. Brother Lindley preached Sunday morning and the writer did the remainder of the preaching to the close of the meeting Friday night. At this meeting people came to the altar just like they used to do. At one service a man and his wife were at the altar at the same time and at the last service they with others united with the church. The day of revivals has not passed.

Yesterday at the close of the morning service the writer drove down to Fairgrove church at what used to be called Why Not, now the Post Office is Seagrove, to the beginning of their revival and their homecoming service. A number of people who once went to school at Why Not Academy were there to tell how much they owed the community and the school for the influence of others. Rev. J. H. Stowe was in the congregation and it was thought that he was too feeble to say anything, but one of the speakers asked Brother Stowe to stand in order that the people might see the man who served them for eight years and whose life had been a perfect benediction to the community. Brother Stowe stood and began to talk. His voice was weak and his body was shaking but of all the rich things he said! I grabbed my note book and took them down. The four things which he said the young preacher must have were 1. Convictions. 2. Experience. 3. Education. 4. A Voice. He said without Convictions the man would not stand for any thing. Without experience he would have nothing to tell. Without Education he would not know what to say nor how to say it, and without a voice he could not be heard. Wonder if we realize what a great man Brother Stowe is. My opinion is that he has been a great preacher.

The writer goes to Gibsonville today to be with Brother Johnson in a meeting. Rev. W. F. Kennett will preach next Sunday morning, Rev. Robert Lloyd at night.

J. E. PRITCHARD.

Dulin's, Mocksville Charge.—Our Sunday school attendance is not near as good as it was in early spring. Revival meetings and other things seem more interesting to some of our people. Our pastor, Rev. J. T. Sisk, filled his regular appointment yesterday being absent only twice recently and he was very busy then holding and helping in revival meetings. The message that he delivered yesterday was interesting from the beginning to the end. He began a revival meeting at Bethal at 11:00 with Brother Williams to help him.

The third quarterly meeting was held Saturday at Elbaville.

Our revival meeting will begin the first Sunday in September with Brother Short of Concord as pulpit help. We ask all of the Herald readers to join us in prayer for a glorious meeting.

We appreciate the sacrifice that Brother Sisk made in order that those who were going away to school might attend the meeting. He refused a call to help one of his friends in a meeting. Best wishes.

LEONA HENDRIX, Reporter.

High Point.—After being closed for two weeks, the First church was opened for worship with the usual 11 o'clock services last Sunday morning, and the congregation was much pleased to see Rev. P. E. Lindley back in his accustomed place in the pulpit. He brought us a splendid message on "True Discipleship," and emphasized the fact that in order to be true disciples or followers of Jesus we must be faithful. A great number of people start well in the Christian life, but grow tired and lured by temptations of the world, fall into sin. We need to study to know God better, and live in closer communion with Him. Mr. Lindley mentioned the fact that Napoleon's great Marechal and intimate friend, Peter Stuart Ney, the one who knew him best and all about his plans, lies buried in a little cemetery in Rowan county. At this service the choir rendered a beautiful Anthem, "The Lord is my Strength," with Prof. Dan W. Smith at the organ, and Clarence Schultheiss, the popular tenor, sang a lovely solo. Immediately after the close of the service a wedding was solemnized in the church, when Miss Beulah May Kinley of High Point became the bride of Mr. Rowan Zimmerman of Winston-Salem. They are not members of our church, but almost the entire congregation remained to witness the ceremony, thus proving the old adage that "all the world loves a lover." The union service for the four churches on North Main street was held Sunday evening in the Lutheran church, and was conducted by Rev. P. E. Lindley.

The Sunday school picnic will be held next Thursday afternoon at Ritter's Lake near Greensboro, and cars will leave the church at 1:30 o'clock. If the weather is unfavorable, it will be postponed until Friday afternoon.

Mr. Arnold J. Koonce, President Christian Endeavor City Union, Mr. Ralph Vance, and Miss Juanita Hammer left last Thursday morning to attend the State Convention of Christian Endeavor at Blue Ridge. The Convention was in sesion for three days, and was well attended by delegates from all sections of the state.

Prof. Paul S. Kennett returned Saturday morning from New York, where he has been taking post-graduate work in Columbia university.

Dr. and Mrs. R. M. Andrews and children left Tuesday morning for a visit to Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lloyd in Alamance county. They will return home Friday.

We regret exceedingly to learn that Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett and family will leave High Point in a few days to make their home in Alamance county with Mr. Garrett's father. They have leased their home on West College Drive to Prof. Hinshaw, a new member of the College faculty. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett have a host of warm friends at the College, the Children's Home, and in High Point, who are indeed sorry to lose them from our midst. They did splendid work at the Home for 12 years, and still hold a warm place in the hearts of the children there. For two years Mr. Garrett has served as Bursar of High Point College. The warmest wishes of their numberless friends follow them to their new home.

Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Montgomery have returned from a stay of ten days at Wrightsville Beach.

Mrs. A. J. Koonce and children, Davis and Arnold Jr., are visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Ramsey, in Salisbury, and will be away for two weeks.

Mrs. Roy Montgomery and little daughter have gone to Polkton to visit her parents.

Miss Margaret Neese is spending the week in Oxford and Henderson as the guest of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Koonce and Miss May Koonce have gone to Asheville on a vacation trip of ten days.

Mrs. J. C. Welch and her daughter, Mrs. George T. Penny, and Mrs. H. A. Moffitt left Tuesday morning on a motor trip to Lake Lure, Asheville, and other points of interest in the mountains of Western North Carolina.

Rockingham.—We had our Children's Day program on the first Sunday night of this month. There was a very good program rendered. It was about one hour and 15 minutes long with good music by the choir. Our collection for Foreign Mission was $13.12.

Our Sunday school is good for the season of the year with so many of our folks visiting. We have had a good collection for the past two Sundays.

Our pastor has delivered some fine sermons since we last wrote. He delivered a very inspiring sermon directly to the new converts on the third Sunday morning.

Our Evangelistic is at work and seems to be growing. They held a special meeting in the home of Mr. Edd Hunt on Friday night, August 19. They intend to hold another meeting in the home of Mr. Pat Hudson this coming Friday night. The members have made several visits to different homes in the community.

We had the pleasure of having Rev. D. A. Braswell and wife with us in our community part of the past week. We were glad to see Brother Braswell well enough to come in our community again even though he is yet in ill health. We are always glad to welcome him. Brother Garner was also here on a short visit. We are also glad to welcome him back at any time.

We had our regular monthly teachers' meeting in the home of the writer on Tuesday night following the first Sunday. We had a very good meeting.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

(Miss) BIRDIE CONNELL, Reporter.

Concord.—In the absence of our pastor at the Sunday morning service, Rev. Lawrence Little, Secretary of the Board of Young People's Work, conducted the service. Mr. Little preached a very inspiring sermon, one which impressed each hearer. It always seems good to have Mr. Little with us.

Our pastor, Mr. Hendry, is in Fallston, N. C., assisting Rev. J. M. Morgan in evangelistic services there. Let us all pray that great good will be done there for the Master.

We are very proud, indeed, of our new Sunday school department which is being constructed. It was started a few weeks ago, and progresing very rapidly. The new department will be modern in every respect. The Sunday school has been very crowded for several years, for lack of space, but the new plant will take care of the school now and for many years to come. The plant when completed will cost $15,000.

BERNICE NASH, Reporter.

Mebane.—We had good attendance for Sunday school and church services Sunday; 173 were present for Sunday school. Monday evening of last week at 7:45 the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies met in joint session at the church. We were glad to have with us as visitors at this meeting, Dr. Johnson and a group of ladies from Gibsonville Home Missionary society. A very interesting program in charge of our home society was given. We were also glad to have some of the Gibsonville ladies and Dr. Johnson tell us something of their work. We were indeed delighted to have them with us and hope they will come again. During the social hour ice cream and cake were served.

The different organizations seem to be moving on very nicely with their work. This (Monday) afternoon the William Nicholson Mission Band met at the home of Mrs. H. C. Nicholson at four o'clock. An interesting program in charge of Lois Wilkerson was rendered; 14 children were present. At this meeting the members brought pillow cases to be sent to the Children's Home and also to Bethel Home. After the business, fruit and candy was served by Miss Elizabeth Nicholson.

The September meeting will be with Mrs. J. E. Foust. Last Thursday evening the members of the church and Sunday school enjoyed a watermelon feast; about 175 being present. This was declared an enjoyable occasion and everybody had a real good social time together.

Mrs. H. C. Nicholson is our delegate to conference in November.

Misses Viola, Irma, and Ezora Suits of High Point spent last week at the parsonage with Rev. and Mrs. Suits.

The total collection at the missionary meeting on Monday evening of last week was $6.17 for the Home society and $5.45 for the Foreign society.

REPORTER.

Henderson.—As vacation time is nearly over, we notice an increased number and interest shown in the different departments of our church. Our Sunday school attendance is going up again and several classes are having perfect attendance.

The Ladies' Aid Society held its regular monthly meeting in the Sunday school rooms of the church, August 8th. at four o'clock. The president, Mrs. S. R. Watson, presiding. After the business of the society was transacted, Mrs. Cary Harris, of Washington, D. C., a former charter member of the society, gave a very interesting talk on the work done in Washington by her society there. The meeting was closed by prayer offered by Rev. R. A. Hunter.

On Sunday night, August 7th, Dr. Allman, accompanied by his wife, and a group of the children from our Children's Home, had charge of the services. The children rendered a splendid program which showed much training and credit due their supervisors. A large congregation was present and everyone enjoyed the recital.

On Thursday night, August, 18th, the Young Ladies' League held their meeting at the home of Mrs. Annie Mae McIntosh with Mrs T. A. Beckham assistant hostess. The meeting was presided over by the president, Mrs. McIntosh. Devotionals were held by Miss Elizabeth Fox, followed by prayer offered by Mrs. Clyde L. Finch. After the general business routine, the program committee, Mrs. R. A. Hunter, gave some splendid readings from our Missionaries, on "Why They became Missionaries." After the adjourment, the hostess served delicious refreshments.

Yesterday morning at the eleven o'clock service, Rev. R. A. Hunter delivered a most impressive sermon, having as his subject "The Visible and the Invisible." The main auditorium was completely filled and a number of visitors in the congregation. Miss Keiser, of Burlington, rendered a most beautiful solo, accompained by Mr. Earl Harris at the organ.

The Missionary societies will meet this afternoon at Mrs. Tom Hights. A full report of this meeting will be given later.

MRS. CLYDE L. FINCH, Reporter.

Hope, Chatham Charge.—Our special meeting began the second Sunday and closed Friday night, August 19. Our pastor had for his pulpit help Rev. Mr. Loy, of Burlington, and Mr. Wayne Curtis, also of Burlington, directed the singing.

Mr. J. B. Turner, of Burlington, and his choir were with us Sunday afternoon and rendered a splendid song service. I am sure every one present enjoyed it. We also enjoyed Mr. Turner's talk, and hope that these good folks will come again.

We feel that we owe much to Brother Loy and Brother Curtis. They won a warm place in the hearts of our people as they labored so faithfully among us. Every sermon was full of gospel truths, and each service was well attended. The splendid cooperation of the other denominations of Bonlee and the entire community was certainly fine and no people can appreciate this fact more than we do.

We feel that the whole church has been greatly strengthened and revived. There were about thirty conversions, and seventeen additions to the church. Seven of these came by letter from other churches, and ten came upon profession of faith in Jesus Christ. We were so glad to receive each of these new members.

I cannot close without saying a few words in regard to our Sunday school and progress in other ways. Sunday school is still growing. The enrollment is now about 65. Since my last report we have painted the inside of our church and reseated it with new pews, and we are planning, at an early date, to have new chairs for the pulpit.

I feel like our pastor, Brother Isley, deserves special mention in this undertaking, for while we had long wanted this done, we did not feel that we could undertake it, so Brother Isley just lined up with us and said, "Come on, we can do it," and that is just what we did.

KARA ANDREW, Reporter.

Orange Charge, Hebron.—The revival meeting began here Sunday, August 14th, and closed Thursday, August 18th. Rev. H. F. Surratt came to us Monday, 15, and did all the preaching from then until the close.

Brother Surratt was at his best. His sermons were clear and to the point. Visible results: 10 reclaimed, eight conversions, eight additions to the church, church revived. At the close a purse of $30.00 was presented to Brother Surratt. To God be all the praise.

B. M. WILLIAMS.

Flat Rock, Vance Circuit.—Flat Rock does not report often, but just the same there is something doing most all the time. Good news doesn't travel as fast as bad, and as we haven't any bad news I report. We are not rich, neither are we beggars; we don't scratch in trash piles for nickles, but we do have to work pretty hard for a living. And believe me, I am glad we do; for when you find a bunch of working people you are mighty apt to find a contented bunch. We laugh and the world laughs with us. Some times we laugh until we cry when we read the pitiful letters from complainers. Why complain—if you have cast your lot with God. Can't you take your part in Christian silence. I believe that if everybody would cast their burdens on the Lord and have the faith of a sparrow that they would be happier and everybody else would too. Troubles are like weeds, the more air they get the faster they grow. Let's try putting them under bushels—and setting our blessings on the hill tops and see which grows fastest.

We have had a fine Sunday school this year, the very best in many years. Also we have had some splendid programs, but as I didn't tell you of them at the time I won't go into details now. We also had a Sunday school picnic which was enjoyed by both young and old. Wish we could have one every quarter.

We have preaching every third Sunday. We always look forward to that with pleasure as our pastor gives us just what we need. Our meeting will start the first Sunday in October. We plan to be caught up with our work by then so we can attend every service.

A Well Wisher,

MRS. A. H. DAVIS.

Mt. Carmel, South Lexington Charge.—Our revival started August 7th with a Children's Day at 11 o'clock which was enjoyed by all. Collection amounted to $7. Brother Ridge, preached at 2:30 o'clock an interesting and forceful sermon for the beginning of a revival and Brother C. B. Way preached at 7:30. He also brought us a good message. A very large congregation attended all of the services through the week. Brother O. C. Loy came on Monday and did the preaching through the week. He is a fine young minister of the gospel. When the door of the church was opened for the reception of members we were glad indeed to see the following come forward for admittance: Brother R. M. Rowe and good wife and two sons, Clifton and R. B., Virginia Helmistetler, Coy Swicegood, Lloyd Swicegood, Elsie Leonard, Arvil Shoaf, Viola Lanning, Meradith Hedrick, eleven in all and more to join later. We were glad to have Brother C. B. Way and wife to worship with us in the meeting and many others. Brother Osco Fritts is in the hospital and is improving nicely.

REPORTER.

Bess Chapel.—Though we have not reported in the Herald for some time, we are still moving along about like usual. I will mention a few things that should have been reported before now. Some time ago we had Dr. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon with us at Bess Chapel. They both brought us good messages that were greatly appreciated. The children from our High Point Children's Home gave their service at Bess' Chapel. We were very glad to have them and gave them an offering of $20.65. The fifth Sunday in July Mr. H. A. Garrett brought the Beam children on a visit to their relatives in the community. Mr. Garrett made a short talk, and the children sang a few selections. We took another offering for the Home that amounted to $16.54. We would be glad to have them come again.

Our special meeting began at Bess Chapel on Monday after the fourth Sunday in July with Rev. H. Freo Surratt as pulpit help. Brother Surratt did some good preaching that was greatly appreciated by our people. There were about twelve professions, with nine additions to the church.

Our people at Bess Chapel were glad to have their former pastor, Rev. T. F. McCulloch, preach for them the first Sunday in August. A large congregation was present. We hope these brethren can be with us again.

E. A. BINGHAM.

Orange Circuit, Hebron.—The work of the church is moving along smoothly. The attendance at Sunday school is increasing some, but still could be much larger. Our new board is indeed a help to the school. We also purchased new song books before the meeting.

We have held Children's Day services and the collection was good. The children rendered their parts well. Much credit to Misses Mildred and Velma Sykes and Bettie Nelson who trained them.

The protracted meeting was held at this place last week. Brother Williams preached on Sunday and Rev. H. F. Surrett came on Monday and preached till the meeting closed. He preached the gospel and his sermons were enjoyed by all. We all learned to love Mr. Surratt when he was our pastor some years ago and enjoyed having him back in our midst again. There were sixteen or seventeen converts and eight joined the church.

The Sunday school held their picnic last Saturday on the church grounds.

Both Christian Endeavor societies are doing good work now.

MRS. T. A. GILL, Reporter.

Midway, Haw River Circuit.—We are so glad that the Lord has restored our pastor's health so that he can be with us again. And we were also glad to have Mrs. Reed with us the fifth Sunday. We did not know how much we loved them until they were kept from us by sickness. May the Lord bless them and give them health and strength so they may continue their good work.

Our revival started the fourth Sunday in July. Brother W. F. Kennett did the preaching on Sunday and did it well. We are always glad to have him with us. On Monday at eleven Brother Reed did the preaching, and Monday night Brother Trollinger came to us and did the preaching until the Sunday night following when the meeting closed. Brother Trolinger's messages were wonderful, the church was greatly revived, five were added to the church and I think others will join later. The people of Midway learned to love Borther Trollinger while he was with us and enjoyed having him in our homes. We hope he can come this way again.

Our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work are still moving along nicely.

MRS. G. W. APPLE, Reporter.

West Forsyth Circuit.—Have had two meetings to date.

At Harmony Grove began Wednesday before the fifth Sunday in July, closing first Sunday in August. Had the efficient help of members of the "Billy Sunday Gospel team." Visible results were disappointing. There was some revival. One conversion.

The first Sunday in August began at Stony Knoll. Rev. A. L. Hunter was the engaged help. He was pastor of this church in his early ministry and found many old friends who remembered him with great affection. Now many new friends remember his faithful gospel preaching. While he was pastor he lived just across the road from the church. Because of his fearless denunciation of the liquor traffic the "White Caps" threatened him, but were met with such a bold and determined front that they decided he was "bad medicine" and left him unmolested. Here there were several conversions. One accession.

The Woman's Missionary societies held the August meeting at the parsonage. The usual attendance. All came bearing gifts. Quite a nice pounding of things for the pantry. The denizens of the parsonage feel that both spiritual and material blessings were ours. Thanks to all, and to a loving Father who puts such thoughts in the hearts of His children.

The junior choir of Pleasant Hill sang two selections very sweetly the third Sunday morning.

This church has recently purchased an additional supply of our church hymnal. So that the congregation may join in this part of the worship. We use the order of service, and all seem to enjoy it.

C. H. WHITAKER, Pastor.

Mt. Hermon Charge.—Revivals are in full swing on Mt. Hermon charge. Rev. N. G. Bethea is conducting one at Mt. Hermon church this week; Rev. F. W. Paschall conducted a meeting at Friendship the first week in August in which there were ten conversions; Rev. Madison was the help in a meeting at Cedar Cliff during the last of July, there were six conversions; and next week Rev. Mr. Johnson will do the preaching in the Bellemont meeting.

Several Saturdays ago the pastor was over town, for country will go to town on Saturday afternoon. While he was over there a couple of young brothers came along and invited him to go with them to a clothing store. When they arrived at the store the two brethren told the preacher he was to get a suit of clothes and pair of shoes at the expense of some of their friends. One of the boys also gave me six pairs of socks. Many thanks to all who contributed towards these gifts.

Present plans are that the Alamance County Sunday School Association will hold its next meeting at Friendship church, September 4. There will be all day services.

J. ELWOOD CARROLL, Pastor.

Piney Grove, Chatham Circuit.—We are moving along, though slowly. We have a very good Sunday school. Our attendance is not what it should be. We held our third quarterly meeting last Saturday with Dr. A. G. Dixon as chairman. The work seems to be growing financially. Also Dr. Dixon preached an able sermon for us Sunday afternoon. I wish more could have heard this wonderful sermon on, What must I do to be saved.

Our special meeting will begin the fourth Sunday in this month with H. L. Isley as pulpit help.

Mr. Cooper has been teaching singing at this church for the past few weeks which I think will be a great help to our church.

Pray that we may have a great revival.

A MEMBER.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

Mr. and Mrs. J. Williams, of Summerfield, Route 1, had a very pleasant surprise first Sunday when their friends reminded "Babe," as his friends know him, that he had another birthday. He insists that he is still young, but he looked younger when the whole party gathered around a well loaded table prepared in his honor.

Cary, his son, and family, who live in Greensboro, spent the night and Sunday morning invited him for a drive over to Reidsville. This gave Pearl, the daughter who lives in Elon College, and her husband a chance to get all the arrangements made for receiving the company, about one hundred strong, who came, many of them, after attending church.

"Babe" had entirely forgotten that he had a birthday coming at this time until he got home about 12:30 and found the grove full of automobiles and people. They came from Reidsville, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Summerfield, Stokesdale, and all about the country side.

Rev. W. F. Kennett, who officiated at the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Williams, and also tied the knot that their daughter says got her in trouble when she and her husband, T. R. Styers, were united in matrimony, was the honored guest of the occasion. Mr. Kennett came into the community many years ago as a young minister, and has been a part of Flat Rock community ever since.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams are not anxious to add years to those already past, but would be ready for another birthday party at any time the neighbors and friends wish to come, and it is quite certain that the friends are glad for any occasion that will allow them to gather under the shade of the fine oaks that have witnessed the joy of friends and neighbors who have gathered here on so many happy occasions.

R. F. WILLIAMS.

MRS. MOORE HONORED

Saxapahaw Circuit, August 22, 1927.—Our Sunday, August 14th, a large number of relatives and friends—more than 200—gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Moore for the purpose of celebrating the sixtieth birthday of Mrs. Moore. All plans and preparations had been carried out under cover, and the real significance of the day was not known to Mrs. Moore until after she had gone visiting and reluctantly returned home, suspecting developments.

The Moore family stands second to none in the community and the friends and near kin were very glad of the opportunity to show their respect and love for the Moores. There is a large number of children and stepchildren, and a still larger number of grandchildren, most of whom were present. Three ministers were present: Ed Harris, Rev. Mr. McKinley, and Spurgeon Slosson. Mr. Harris made a few very appropriate remarks and then introduced Mr. McKinley, a cousin of our former President.

The dinner was a great factor, and every body cooperated perfectly in disposing of it.

Other tokens of memory came in the form of presents. One of these was from Tom Ray and Mrs. Ray; Tom is Mrs. Moore's son, and lives in Baltimore, Md.

Mr. Moore, and Mrs. Moore especially, have recently been in poor health, but are much improved now and we hope for them much happiness.

SHOWER FOR MR. AND MRS. SIDES

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society, of the Methodist Protestant church, met at the new home of Mr. and Mrs. Jernie Sides, who were married August the eleventh, and gave them a surprise linen shower. Many useful articles were drawn from an umbrella which was hung in the middle of the room by the bride who sat under it. They were opened by the groom. Among some of the gifts were pillow slips, table covers, scarfs, vanity sets, buffet sets, and many others.

The seniors left wishing Mr. and Mrs. Sides a long and happy life.

A FRIEND.

—Recently we were on the road from Wrightsville Beach to Wilmington, and our attention was called to the scene of an automobile accident that had occurred a few days before. The accident was so unusual that we stopped to see the place. We had been told that a man driving at a furious rate had driven a Cadillac car against a tree by the side of the road and that the tree had been knocked down by the impact. We found that two trees had been knocked down. The first one struck was a green juniper tree about fifteen inches in diameter. It was broken off about two feet from the ground, leaving the stump with a splintered top leaning over at an angle of about forty-five degrees. The second tree struck was about six inches in diameter. It was torn up by the roots. Both trees were lying by the side of the road. The car at once was stopped in its mad career and fell over into the ditch. The driver was taken to a hospital and was reported as not very seriously hurt. The car was damaged much but not to the extent one might expect. The front bumpers were bent and the lights were facing each other, but the wind shield was not broken. It is a good advertisement for the Cadillac car, but a poor advertisement for the man who was driving.

—Misses Pearl and Mary Wills McCulloch and Miss Pinkie Waugh of Calvary church are resting at Wrightsville Beach for a few days this week, guests of Captain and Mrs. C. E. McCulloch.

—Calvary church has lost one of its best and most highly esteemed members. Brother Walter J. Williams died last night in the Clinic Hospital, following an operation for gall stones. He is a brother to Rev. J. S. Williams and has been the treasurer of Calvary church from the beginning. The church will greatly miss him.

—Rev. L. W. Gerringer is preaching in a meeting at Mt. Pleasant this week.

1 Per Cent on Budgets For Superannuates

English Street	$ .50

Forsyth, Concord and Albemarle go over the top on the A. C. B. this week. New entries on this budget are Albemarle, Asheboro and Statesville. All enter with good amounts while Albemarle goes over the top. There are twenty-six charges not yet heard from on this budget. But there is this encouragement about that that among these twenty-six there are a number of charges that never fail to pay up and several of the pastors reporting for them say that they will pay up. Let's have every one of the twenty-six pay up in full. That is quite possible and would be a great blessing to the kingdom. Let's every one ask ourselves in dead earnest, "How far would the Kingdom advance if every charge does just as I and my church do?" Then let's try hard to be able to say to the Conference when it meets as the Master said, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do." The Conference committed to you the whole task as well as the preaching and the attending church.

There is a great privilege waiting some church to join Spencer over the top on the C. C. B. Chatham enters this budget at 54. There are sixteen charges to be heard from on this budget, of which four have contributed to one or the other of the Missionary Societies. To raise this Budget means to send the kingdom to the needy places in our own land and to the heathen lands. "We can do it if we will." What we can do we ought to do and will we all say "By the grace of God we will?"

Saxapahaw church on Saxapahaw charge goes over the top on the College Budget. Pleasant Grove enters this budget at twenty-one. In this Budget we have the greatest deficit of charges of any, there being thirty-three not yet heard from.

Could we but realize that the college is the very heart of our Conference every charge would pay the small amount asked for the running expense of this institution. We must have trained workers. We must educate our own young people or lose them to what ever denomination educates them. Here too let's work dilligently to have every one of these thirty-three go over the top. This budget is small for each charge and each charge could raise it. No one can complain that it is too much or that it would be hard to raise. Let's go to it in dead earnest and say, "It must be done."

Yours in His service,
A. G. DIXON.

MARRIED

Sides-Helms

Miss Nola Helms and Jernie L. Sides were united in marriage on August 11, at the home of the bride's parents. The simple but impressive ceremony was preformed on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock with their pastor, Rev. G. H. Hendry, officiating. Only members of the immediate families and a few close friends witnessed the marriage.

Mrs. Sides is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Helms. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Sides and is associated with his father in business. Both are active members of the Methodist Protestant church of Concord and are popular with a wide circle of friends.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Sides left for a motor trip to Wrightsville Beach.

They are now residing in their recently constructed brick bungalow on Kerr street.

Davis-Koonce

A wedding of great interest to many relatives and friends in High Point and Davidson county was solemnized in Lexington last Wednesday, when Mr. Carey Davis and Miss Alice Koonce, both of this city, plighted their troth. Dr. A. G. Dixon of Greensboro was the officiating minister. The groom is a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Davis of Davidson county, and is a worthy and popular young man, being a music teacher of talent and promise, while his bride is the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Koonce, formerly of Lexington, but now residents of High Point. She was a member of the High Point High School Class of 1924, and is very attractive and popular. Both Mr. and Mrs. Davis have been members of the church choir for several years, and are excellent young people and loyal church workers. The congratulations and hearty good wishes for a happy wedded life are extended to this young pair by a large number of friends here and elsewhere. After a honeymoon trip through the Shenandoah Valley to Washington they will be at home to their friends on Carrick Avenue.

Koonce-Davis

On Wednesday evening, August 17th, at eight o'clock Miss Alice Koonce, the youngest daughter of Mr. J. D. Koonce of High Point, and Mr. Carey Judson Davis, son of Mrs. Flora Davis of Kernersville, were united in matrimony at the Methodist Protestant parsonage in Lexington. The ceremony was performed by the writer.

The bride and groom motored to Lexington for the wedding. They were accompanied by the father of the bride, her two brothers, H. B. and A. J. Koonce and their wives, and also a brother of the groom, Mr. N. A. Davis and his wife. After a wedding trip this splendid young couple will make their home in High Point.

We wish for them joy, happiness and success.
A. G. DIXON.

The Junior Paraca class of Concord expressed their sympathy in a very helpful way this week to Sam Coble, our little boy who suffered a badly broken leg in our sad accident on April 10th, and can not walk a step yet, only with the aid of crutches,) when they sent him $2 as a token of their love and sympathy. They would feel rewarded could they only have seen his glowing countenance when receiving this gift. Many others helped to brighten lonely hours for him, during his long stay in the hospital. We desire to thank each of them.

FRUITFUL OF MANY EVILS

The above heading is quoted from Brother Dosier's article on "Supervised Dancing." I read and reread his article and say I agree with him.

"The modern dance is worse than unfruitful, being fruitful of many evils." When the young people's conference for weeks ahead and our pastors urged and re-urged for each church to register, and send 50 cents for each registration and go if you can, but be sure to send the 50 cents whether you go or not, and we send them and they are taught that "It is all right to dance if properly supervised," I shall be sure to keep mine away. At a cost of $12 to me I sent one of my girls to be instructed along religious lines and not to be taught that worldly amusements that do not lift to a higher Christian life are all right, and when a minister who professes to be called of God so violates the obligations and Christian duties laid down in our church Discipline, teaches contrary thereto, I, like Brother Dosier, think we had better keep them under our own parental roof, and use our money in another direction I for one shall do so.

Wonder if that young preacher ever read our Discipline. If so, did he not promise to avoid worldly amusements that would be harmful to the cause of God, and is not modern dancing one of them? If he can't see any harm in the modern dance is he not blinded by the world and would not it be well now in his youth for him to consult the only eye specialist for his trouble, Jesus Christ?

Did You Ever Hear of It?

The Census of Religious Bodies published by the United States Government gives information concerning "The Catholic Apostolic Church." This must not be confounded with The Roman Catholic Church nor with The Apostolic Holiness Church. It has altogether only about a dozen churches with less than four thousand members. Chief interest in it is in certain peculiarities of doctrine and history and plan of organization. In its account of itself it gives the following statement:

"The movement which resulted in the formation of this communion had its inception approximately at the beginning of the second quarter of the nineteenth century. The momentous events of the closing years of the eighteenth, including the French Revolution and the rise and fall of Napoleon, had aroused in the minds of many devout men a conviction of the nearness of Christ's personal return, which was accompanied by a deep sense of the unreadiness of His church, in its divided condition to meet Him. At the same time there began to be a realization of the importance of prayer for the coming of the Holy Ghost and an earnest desire for the renewal of the spiritual gifts of apostolic days. As a result of these things pious people of all denominations began to pray for a general revival and for the outpouring of such a measure of the Holy Ghost as distinguished the apostolic age. About 1830 there appeared among some of those who were engaged in this concert of prayer what were considered as distinct and abundant manifestations of the presence and power of the Holy Ghost, similar to those of the apostolic age, taking the form principally of speaking in tongues and prophecy, as at Pentecost. These manifestations continued, and in 1832, as a result of the 'prophetic revelations,' certain men were regarded as called to the office of apostle. Others were added from time to time, until, in 1835, twelve in all had been chosen, corresponding to the number of the original apostolate."

These twelve men were made the ruling body of the new church. The movement seems to have started in England. The first of its churches in this country was organized in Potsdam, New York, in 1851.

In doctrine this church seems to have been in the main evangelical. The last member of the college of apostles died in 1901, and the church seems to be passing into a decline which will probably end with its extinction.

The history of this denomination has in it lessons for other denominations.

—School days are coming again. Many of our young readers will be returning to the life of the student. What a privileged life it is. The student not merely sits at the feet of his personal instructors, but he sits at the feet of the great teachers of the past who discovered much of the truth now taught and who gave themselves to the spread of that truth for the good of the world. The student is the heir of all the ages and it is a great thing to enter into his goodly heritage.

—Faith in God is needed for right conduct toward others. —Rev. John F. Cowan.

What is a Christian?

The question is difficult but very important. To be a Christian or not a Christian is the question of questions.

How may one know whether he is a Christian or not? To ascertain one's position in this matter one must know what a Christian is and must also know what he himself is.

All understand that in order to be a Christian one must sustain some sort of relationship to Christ. But what sort of relationship is it? This opens quite a field for study. Christ has placed himself in several different relationships to us and we may individually place ourselves in several different relationships to Him.

Jesus has made himself the world's greatest ethical teacher. The ethics of the Sermon on the Mount had never been equaled and can never be surpassed. The teacher capable of uttering the lofty precepts of that sermon has won the admiration of men of all countries and ages. But that simply to admire the Sermon on the Mount will not make one a Christian all will agree. To adopt the Sermon on the Mount as one's ethical guide might by some be regarded as sufficient to make one a Christian. To adopt Christ's teachings for the regulation of the moral life, to make Christ one's example in the moral life,—does this constitute one a Christian?

Many have thought so, and have tried to make themselves Christians by acting accordingly. But there is much more involved in being a Christian than simply trying to imitate Christ. It is very difficult to imitate Him, and most of those who would make themselves Christians by merely imitating Christ give up the undertaking in despair. The real Christian must take Christ for teacher and exemplar, but he must do more than that.

Christ has not only made Himself the world's great teacher, or phophet, but he has made Himself the world's King. He has been given authority over the world of mankind and has issued commands to be obeyed by all. He has adopted a missionary program for the world and has in the last great commission mapped out a task that will occupy men until the end of the age. When one accepts Christ as King and commits himself to a life of obedience to the will of Christ, does he become a Christian? Unhesitatingly many would answer in the affirmative. They can conceive of nothing more that is needed to make men perfect Christians than sincere acceptance of Christ as Lord, King, of their lives. What more, they ask, can be required besides obedience?

Between Christ's career as Teacher and His career as King there is another career of His that must not be overlooked. No man can be a Christian who ignores Christ's career of suffering, His Passion. Here is found the very heart of the matter. Paul said, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of Christ." The man who does not see that Christ suffered for him, the just for the unjust, has not yet come to understand the secret of redemption. Christ must appear to a man in the aspect of Redeemer before that man can be a true Christian. He must come to feel that he is under everlasting obligation to Christ for suffering for him, before he can have the feeling and experience of a real

OUR GIVEN TASK

Every normal human being enjoys and appreciates responsibility, it makes a better citizen, a better Christian.

The Christian women of years ago, who heard the cry of their sisters, in the lands across the seas, God laid upon their hearts, very definitely, the burden of souls. Did not Jesus, at the tomb say first to the women, "GO TELL" and all through the ages, this command has been heard, and it is considered "OUR GIVEN TASK."

We want to speak especially of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of our denomination, who for 48 years have successfully established, and maintained, a department of Christian work, at the present time operating in three countries, among women, girls and children, of which our church is justly proud.

Those pioneer women, whose early endeavors laid the foundation upon which all this work has been built, saw then, that the only way to function legally, was to secure a CHARTER; the financial obligation, necessary to carry on such a work, made this a necessity; thus the CHARTER made them a CORPORATION under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

This Charter permitting them to secure funds, buy and sell property, to legislate and administer their own affairs, which they have done most creditably. Reports being made regularly to the General Conference.

As years went by plans were increased to meet the needs of the work at each stage of developement, so in 1911 the Budget system was adopted in the annual meeting of the W. F. M. S. Heretofore, the Branches raised funds, having no set goal. The amounts thus received were inadequate to meet the need.

It required time for this new method to be understood, but our women are loyal and consecrated, and the result is, that we receive the regular and systematic remittances, each and every month from all the large Branches and many of the smaller ones.

Thus a Christian work, among women and girls and children of non-Christian lands, has been established, of which our Church can well be proud.

If the women of our churches had not organized and established and developed this great work, would the Church have been able to do so? Survey would show that the Church at large, has had all it could do. In the Churches where the women have their organizations, for this department of work, they have been able to finance and develope their work, while in most all cases the CHURCH through their Foreign Mission Boards have had to reduce their work program.

The mission work as done by the women of the denominations is not only a great benefit to those in non-Christian lands but of great value to those at the Home Base. Through the educational work Christian leaders have been made. When a "key" woman in a denomination is needed for any work of the church, in almost every case the missionary leader is chosen. The missionary women are the ones who get back of all the programs of the denomination, they are glad to assist in all departments of church work. They are back of all the program of the whole church, without an exception.

The question has been asked, if the receipts of the W. F. M. S. have not been increased since the credit has been given on the church Budget.

I do not think they have, it may have been in a very few instances where people gave "if it would be credited on their church Budget" but very few, and not enough to make it noticeable, in the result.

The result of the Texas work is due to the efforts of the traveling secretary. New Branches have been established also by Miss Forrest. We do not give their report because they were not in existence in 1919-20 when the Church Budget was introduced.

Funds are received from individuals that would not be given to any other organization, or to the church at large, for special work.

If at the beginning of the Budget plan, when the Church was to have credit for money raised by missionary societies, and as these Societies were apportioned a percentage of the entire General Conference Budget, if in the beginning the church had credited only the 12 per cent for the W. F. M. S. and six per cent for the W. H. M. S. or 18 per cent the combined percentage of what the Societies raised, then the Church would have realized that the rest of the General Conference Benevolences were to be raised by the church, and there would have been no confusion as it is now, and the other Boards would have had the Budgets raised.

The missionary societies raise their funds in a very different way from any Board of the church and have never received any portion whatsoever from any benevolent offerings taken in the church. They have their one public service, granted them by the church, to celebrate their FOUND-

ING, and at which time they bring their Thank-offerings laid aside during the entire year. The INGATHERING occurs at this meeting, always an educational meeting in the church and usually on the Sabbath day. We have found that the largest "Ingatherings" have been at the homes of one of the members, at which time she asks her friends and neighbors, and prepares a program, which is always greatly enjoyed.

When the program is given in the church there are always some who contribute to the thank-offering, which is always thankfully received. No great amount is received in this way, just the gleanings.

Did not one Conference President say, in a recent meeting, in speaking of the contributions of his Conference referring to the Benevolences, "the tragedy of it all is, that the missionary societies raise about all," did he not mean, that the tragedy of it all was, that the church did not do its part. We have reported a membership of 188,000 and out of this about 18000 belong to the missionary societies, and these women give to every Board of the church, and give until it hurts, is it wise to think that they should give for the WHOLE MEMBERSHIP?

These missionary women know about the Benevolences and realize what it means, because of the system of education they carry on, but when does the CHURCH hear anything about our Colleges, our Home missions, the Church Extension program, our Children's Home, our Aged People's Homes? Whose work is it to present these to the people? Our Discipline says that the pastor shall preach "at least ONE Missionary Sermon a year." Do some of them even do that?

Is not the greatest problem of the church, the question of how to reach the Christians not interested in Missions?

As one studies the church we find that only about 25 per cent of the membership give to Foreign missions, and much of this is not sacrificial gifts. At the rate of 25 per cent of the membership that would be per capita about $6.00 each per year, or 50 cents per month, about 12 cents per week. "This represents the price of a cheap magazine or one cigar, two street car rides, about one half of a movie picture show ticket. Surely the church is not interested in the greatest international enterprise of our day.

The women who have faithfully "carried on" the mission work have done so because they firmly believe that Jesus Christ came to save the women of India, China and Japan, just as surely as he came to save the women of America, and they know full well if he did not come to save INDIA, CHINA and JAPAN, he never came to save AMERICA.

We are vitally interested in the Woman's Foreign Missionary at the present time. Many things are being said, and many questions are being asked. They have a DUES paying membership, which amounts yearly to quite a sum, and without which our work would be greatly embarrassed. We have trust funds, one is the Perpetual memberships which is in a Savings account bearing interest, from which we pay back to the Branch treasurers the yearly dues of the one who is a Perpetual member, this is $1.20 per year, and is credited as dues. We have been selling for years Annuity Bonds; these are interest bearing also, and the interest paid semi-annually. We have property that is ours under our Charter, we have leased and purchased and transferred, and sold property, and if we had not had our Charter we never could have done so. These holdings are very dear to the W .F. M. S. because of the struggle they had, to pay for it all. Now if, the W. F. M. S. ceases to be an organization under their CHARTER, and become affiliated with any other organization, will all members of the new organization be dues-paying members? If not, the WOMEN would not, surely be expected to PAY dues. If there is an organization of men and women on an equal basis then all would be a dues paying member, else thousands of dollars would be lost each year. Will every one pay a BIRTHDAY fee? Quite an amount is raised this way each year. Would there be a "Mission Study" attended by both men and women? Would there be monthly meetings for the collection of the DUES? Some one has said, we could get "a new Charter" yes, that is not a difficult thing to secure. But it would never be the same kind, else why a new one?

It would be a great injustice, to the Christian women who have gone forward with this great work entrusted to their care "OUR GIVEN TASK," to make a change just for financial reasons, which seems to be the center of controversy. The church has received ALL THE CREDIT for the WORK DONE ON THE FOREIGN FIELD and as a church has not CONTRIBUTED ONE DOLLAR TO PURCHASE OF PROPERTY or the SUPPORT OF THE WORK. We have been careful of the dimes, the nickels, the pennies, and the dollars, and know where each comes from. The Church has not proven that it could have started and maintained this work that God certainly entrusted to the care of the WOMEN, and He promised to be with them and He has. He opened the doors and they entered, not because they had the funds, but because they had the FAITH. There is also a beautiful fellowship that has become a vital thing for our church, for these women not only have brought in their offerings, but they have grown spiritually. These meetings for women, of women and by women, CAN NEVER BE REPLACED by any other kind of a meeting. It will mean taking the HEART OUT OF THINGS.

It has taken years and years to build up the splendid work begun by those earnest workers of years ago, and if a new plan is introduced, and a new organization is formed, it will require many years for it to become as efficient as the organizations we have now. The women have proven that they are capable of raising funds and financing the work they have; of course as the work develops more funds will be needed.

It has been pointed out that the UNION on the Mission Field is just what they needed. That is very true, because they are doing work in a country, the same work, only in different departments, one department for men and boys and one for women and girls and children, and because of the laws of these countries there certainly is no danger of "OVERLAPPING" in the schools, they are separate, and managed separately, so there is no overlapping there, and there is no overlapping in the adminstration of affairs because the women administer the affairs of the W. F. M. S. and the men missionaries the affairs of the Church. The forces on the fields would have problems in common at times, and it is ideal to confer with each other as to their solution.

At the Home Base, the situation is somewhat different. The main work at the Home base is the raising of the funds to carry on the work of the departments. We have stated before that the funds are raised so different that there is certainly no overlapping there.

The Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration, is a "TRYOUT" and the Executive Committee of the W. F. M. S. is still maintaining its Charter, and feels that they still have authority over their own. When a paper is sent to them for action, they feel that it is their duty to act; this is overlapping.

The Funds of the Society have been sent to the General treasurer monthly, and been used as from a "common fund." This has been a great benefit to the financing of the men's department, but it has not increased the finances of either

Society or Board, not one dollar. It is very doubtful if the INTEREST in MISSIONS has been increased throughout the church membership.

If by this "TRYOUT" we have not found finances and interest increasing, those are TWO PARAMOUNT ITEMS, and by a UNION, the DUES may cease, the SPECIALS will cease, and as it is now, the Church has not supplied sufficient funds to carry on their ENTIRE MISSIONARY PROGRAM, IN WHICH COUNTRY WILL THE MISSION WORK CEASE?

HOW WILL THE INTEREST IN THE LOCAL WORK BE INSPIRED? WHOSE SPECIAL WORK WILL IT BE TO KEEP THE "MISSIONARY FIRES" BURNING?

Some years ago before the "Budget" of the church, in looking over the minutes of the Annual Conferences, we found that in every case where the Benevolences were paid they had a Foreign Missionary Society. This is worth remembering.

The women's missionary societies have done a great Christian work, and all the credit has been given the church, and the Church at large has not had the problems and the support of the work. What would the church be without the women?

The women can do a better work for women and with women. It has been tried, and not found wanting.

LIDA K. EAST, Treasurer.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

With the coming of the college opening we feel a fresh interest in the courses to be given. This year we are prepared to do more intensive work in the Department of Religious Education. During the Freshman year the principles of Religious Education and the methods of doing Sunday school and church work will receive chief attention. These are very vital and practical courses. Then for the advanced classes we offer courses in Psychology of Religion, Social Theory of Religious Education and General Ethics. Mention must also be made concerning the course in Christian Evidences. Ministerial students especially will be interested in this treatment. No effort is made in any of the courses at aimless wandering over the misty fields of thought just for the fun of the wandering. On the contrary, great care is exercised in the selection and preparation of material with the students' deepest needs in view.

In fact these "deepest needs" of the student supply our near and ultimate aims in the whole Religious Education program. While it is difficult to state the case for Religious Education in one brief sentence, I often give the following as a definition. Religious Education is the cultivation of the best in Christian living. We must discover what goes into a good, religious life and cultivate that! And while much will always remain unknown, we certainly have found a good quantity of this religious truth and can benefit by it.

The boys and girls come to us, as you know, from various home influences and unlike traditions. Practically every one is possessed of conceptions, ideals and traits of mind that are most sacred and precious. These well grounded attitudes and sentiments provide a rich soil. The teacher has here a fruitful heart into which he may plant the Truth. And it is our business in Religious Education to strengthen every noble sentiment, guide every pure impulse, and fan the lofty imaginations into a flame of reality that finds maturity in a soul that is truly sensitive to the "sad music of humanity," and a heart that happily trusts in the love of God.

Here are some of the objectives in Religious Education as taught at High Point College:

1. We endeavor to conserve the sacred sentiments brought by the students from his own home. It would be both futile and unkind to disregard this original store of religious impressions. We must use them.

2. Onto this foundation, laid in earlier days, there must be built a more adequate and servicable interpretation of Christian living. Larger meanings must supplant the smaller ones. As the mind expands by intensive study in other fields, and as the student comes to know the joys of scholastic advancement over vast stretches of scientific facts, there must as truly be some growth in religious conceptions or else suffer the spiritual outlook to become seriously dwarfed. A mature mind has a right to demand a mature view on religious matters.

3. Then we strive to establish, what I call, permanency in religion. Let the student clearly understand what is required in religious living; let him realize it is a life proposition. Then by sufficient training in this idea he never can, we believe, look lightly upon Christian duty. We want reliability in discipleship. Education must build men and women of character; persons who can be depended upon at all times to bear their part in the large program of the church.

4. Every student is drilled in the age-long expressions of religious experience. The Bible, poetry, the classics, hymns, history and biography supply a large part of the subject matter for this purpose. No student, we believe, can afford to be ignorant of these lasting expressions of religious devotion. All of this is calculated to heighten one's appreciation of true Christian culture.

5. Again, we hope to aid the student's thinking as he faces an age torn by opinion and controversy. There can be, of course, no conflict in truth wherever found. True science and true religion go hand in hand. But much cloudy thinking centers on this point, and it is a delight to lead the young scholars into a wholesome, Christian understanding of the situation.

6. Above all we must nourish in all students a growing and vital sense of God. This is not always an easy task, as pointed out by Brother Dosier in last week's Herald. But in Religious Education we place great importance on reverence and devotion. We try to teach people how to worship—an art long neglected in many quarters! To accomplish it is necessary to work along two directions. First, we study the psychology of worship to find out just what goes into the experience of public worship. Then programs that produce the best atmosphere for true worship can be organized. Then, second, the student is urged and trained to cultivate his own resources for spiritual communion. Every person ought, in a sense, to be able to generate his own inspiration, and bring his heart into a sense of the Divine under almost any ordinary circumstances.

We believe it should be the normal privilege of every one to share in the rich heritage of our faith, understand its expression, and enjoy its benefits in life. Too, we feel that the student's conception of religion should not suffer in comparison with his other education. One's religious experience should be, perhaps, his chief control in living—it ought to be very useful. Then he wants to be able to help others along the way by living an inspiring, noble and cultured life. Finally, the program of Religious Education must lift one away from the burdensome grind of "the world" and teach him the better to feel "that presence that disturbs with the joy of elevated thought."

—The only cure for prejudice is Christian love—love to God and love to man. The root of prejudice is selfishness. Most of us think far too much of ourselves—our work, our possessions, our good qualities. We need to live more in the lives of others if we would be true to them and ultimately to ourselves and to God.—Amos R. Wells.

THE DANCE—A MISUNDERSTANDING

We wish to say that we have had a conversation with the young preacher referred to in our article, "Supervising the Dance," and he positively disclaims having made the statement attributed to him, or supposed to have been attributed to him. That the statement is entirely a mistake. That he preaches against the dance and uses his influence against it.

He said the question of "recreation" and "amusements" was being discussed with, and before, the class, and that the dance was being discussed. That the book they were using—he did not state its title—gave the different views held on the dance question—the "extremes," as he stated it to us, all the way from no dancing at all, to the other extreme, whatever that was,—he did not say—and among these different position given in the book, one was, it seems, that dancing was permissible, if "properly supervised;" but that he himself did not endorse, nor commend, this position, but repudiated it. He said further, that he was in harmony with the position taken in our article, touching the dance.

We wish to say further, that we feel sure that the parties who reported the matter to us would not wilfully make a false statement, and that the whole thing has grown out of a misunderstanding on the part of some person, or persons, who were in the class, and, of course, honestly reported the matter as such person, or persons, understood it. We do not believe that any one has intended to misrepresent any one or anything.

We wish it distinctly understood, however, by all parties, that we do not hereby recede one iota from our position taken on the dance in our former article, "Supervising the Dance," that it is fruitful of many evils, and should in no wise be indulged in by Christians, but feel it to be but fair to the young preacher to make the above correction. J. F. Dosier.

IN BEHALF OF OUR SUMMER CONFERENCES

It is to be very greatly regretted that this matter has gotten into print, but since it has then I feel constrained to write in behalf of our Summer Conferences before it goes any further. Personally, I think there is an awful mistake somewhere. The person or persons reporting to Brother Dosier that a "Young preacher taught supervised dancing" at our Summer Conference should have reported to the president of the Summer Conferences, or to the president of the Annual Conference, and had a thorough investigation made before anybody went into print about it. However, both of these presidents taught in the Summer Conference, and it may be one of us who is the accused. Then too the term "Young preacher" is very broad, and might include Brother Paschall and me, and for that reason we would like to have it cleared up.

Glancing over the list of preachers who taught in the Summer Conference I find that Rev. C. E. Forlines, A. G. Dixon, H. W. Maier, J. E. Pritchard, S. W. Taylor, L. W. Gerringer, R. W. White, J. D. Hardy, F. L. Gibbs, M J. Shroyer, and E. L. Ballard taught in this last Summer Conference. Knowing each one of these men as I do it is very difficult for me to believe that either one of them was guilty of teaching what WE are reported to have taught. This is a very grave charge that confronts us, if true; and a much more grave charge if not true. I think I speak for every one of us when I say that for the good of our Summer Conference we want the thing absolutely cleared up. These are all men of God, and every one of us willing to suffer if need be, or to make correction, or to apologize if in error, or to do whatever is necessary to set the thing right. But we are unwilling for our Summer Conference to suffer. It does seem that in the first place there was a better way to get at this. In Gal. 6:1 we read, "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." I do not think either one of us has erred in the thing whereof we are accused, but our good names are called in question, and the good intents and purposes of our Summer Conference have been questioned. For the sake of the Kingdom private inquiries should have been made, and perhaps they were, but I fear not. I do know that no one communicated with me about it, and yet I was one of the teachers.

Some ten years ago these Summer Conferences were started in the denomination for the glory of God and the good of our young people and workers, and when we started them in all our counsels we urged the most careful selection of the books to be taught, and of the teachers to teach in these in Conferences, and so far as we know this has been done most scrupulously. And when we went into our last Summer Conference I was willing to vouch for every teacher on the program, and I believe I can still vouch for every one of them. If I am wrong in my judgment then I wish to be shown; for most certainly in this case I am from Missouri.

During this past Summer there have been held some eighteen or twenty of the Summer Conferences throughout the denomination, and it is safe to say that some five or six thousand people have attended them, and nearly all these have been blessed and uplifted because of the teachings to which they have listened. And during the ten years of the life of these Conferences thousands have received inspiration, and information in these Conferences which has sent them back home to be a hundred fold better workers than they otherwise would have been. And although the life of these Conferences has been only about ten years, there are already several young men preaching in our pulpits as a direct result of these Conferences, and we already have missionaries in the Foreign Field and in the Home Field who are the product of the Conferences.

And I have faith to believe that all of these young workers are sound in their teachings.

Already hundreds of the very leaders of our denominations are saying that these Summer Conferences are doing for us the biggest piece of work that is being done in the denomination today. And each year we are just as careful as can be in the selection of our books and our teachers,—I say "We," because though Lawrence Little is the Executive Secretary of our Board of Young People's Work I happen to be president of that Board and a close adviser to Brother Little.

Some one may say, "Now, Dixon, you ought to have sense enough to know that no one has accused you of such teaching." I think so, too, and yet in looking over the list of teachers, and knowing them as I do, and having the utmost confidence in each one of them, and knowing how each one of them stands on the subject of dancing, it would seem to me that either one of them would have the same right that I do to say,—"Well, certainly no one thinks that I taught foolishness like that." And yet it remains that one of us is accused of this thing.

Some years ago in one of these Conferences a young preacher was accused of teaching "So and so." This was reported to an older preacher who had known the young preacher from his babyhood. The older preacher went to the young preacher, and said, "My young Brother, you are reported to have taught so and so in—Conference." Whereupon the young preacher said to his elder,—"Did you tell them that I didn't teach anything of the kind?" "Why, no," said the older preacher, "I didn't tell them that you did not teach that, though I didn't believe you did." The young preacher replied,—"You have known me all my life, and you should have known that I did not teach that; and my greatest disappointment in the whole thing is that you did not have confidence enough in me to tell them that I did not teach it." So, dear friends and brethren of the Conference, permit me to say again that I know each one of our teachers so well that I cannot believe that either one of us taught that "The supervised dance is all right."

For the sake of ourselves and for the sake of our Summer Conference, I am making every investigation about this that I know how to make, and will just ask the readers of the Herald to withhold any harsh judgment in the matter, and any further criticism of the matter until we get at the bottom of the accusation. I am sure that every one of the teachers whose names occur above will join me in saying that by the help of the Lord no chaff shall get into our Summer Conference, to say nothing of permitting corruption to come in.

Praying God's richest blessings upon each of you, and upon all His workers everywhere, I am,

Faithfully yours in His service,

A. G. Dixon.

What Is a Christian?

Christian. Christ must be recognized as Priest as well as Prophet and King, and as Priest as offering in his own person the sacrifice that made pardon and salvation possible.

God might have sent angels as prophets; He might have sent angels as kings and rulers. But what angel could He have sent who could redeem us by dying for us? Christianity will never appear in its glory to a man who cannot see the glory of the atoning death of Jesus Christ. To the man who does see it, the "Man who died for him" becomes "the fairest among ten thousand," the "One Altogether Lovely." A soul with such a Christ is a Christian. He has caught the meaning of redemption. The Savior that loved him well enough to die for him he will gladly follow and obey. He feels beneath him the everlasting arms. He feels the power of an endless life. Christ has become to him not a mere name upon a banner, but a power within the heart. A divine power that makes sin repulsive and holiness attractive. A Christian is one who finds Jesus to be a Savior from all sin.

THE SUN AND THE LANTERN

I was walking full of gladness
'Neath the azure dome,
In the splendor of the noontide,
Heading straight for home;

In the sun which since creation,
Through unnumbered years,
In its undimished brightness
Still our planet cheers.

When a courteous stranger offered
To enhance my view,
From the candlelight which flickered
In his lantern new.

"May I know thy name, kind stranger?"
"Modern Thought," said he.
Said I: "When yon sun is finished,
I will send for thee!"

The WORK and the WORKERS

During this last week Mrs. Dixon and I were with Rev. O. C. Loy and his people at Midway on Guilford Circuit. We feel that much good was done in this young church during this meeting, though no one joined the church at the close of the meeting. We are hoping, and believing that several will join at the next regular appointment. The meeting should have continued through Sunday and into this week, but as is so often the case, the pastorhad to begin another meeting on Sunday, so this one had to close on Friday night. This is a new community for us, and our membership is small, so a meeting here ought to be held longer so as to interest the people of the community. Brother Loy is doing a splendid work on Guilford, and both he and his young wife are much loved.

Richland

On Sunday, August 28th, I was with Rev. F. R. Love and his people at the beginning of the revival at Brower's Chapel. I preached twice to very attentive congregations. It is a joy to preach at these old time country churches where the people seem eager for the gospel. Brother Love was planning for another service last night. His people are fond of him and his wife, and are cooperating with them splendidly. We trust they will have a good meeting at Browers, and that the year's work will wind up well.

Two Months

It is well for us to remember that there are just two months between us and the Annual Conference. What we do to round out a good year's work for the Lord must now be done within two months.

Pay-Up Day

I am hereby suggesting October 16th as Pay-Up Day for pastor's salaries and the budgets. If each charge will endeavor to pay up by October 16th that will give a good chance to round up any deficits that may be before the pastor and delegate start for conference. Delegates do not like to go to conference with pastor's salaries unpaid, and pastors do not like to go to conference with salaries paid in full, and little paid on the budgets.

Rally Day Services

I have on my desk a sample copy of the Rally Day programs. It is a worthy program, and well gotten up. I am hereby urging every church and Sunday school to get busy in time and hold the Rally Day services. The money collected at these services is for Christian Education. It will help to pay your part of the G. C. B., and will also be a direct benefit to High Point College. Be sure to order supplies early from Rev. F. W. Stephenson, D. D., 613 West Diamond street, N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Appointments

September 3rd and 4th—Connelly Springs.
September 11th—Uncertain yet.
September 24th—Melton's Grove.
September 14th to 21st—Creswell.
September 25th—Rockingham, Dedicate Church.

A. G. Dixon.

DEDICATION OF THE KLÉIN-COLBOURNE MEMORIAL CHURCH AT NAGOYA, JAPAN

June 26th was a red-letter day indeed for the members and friends of our Nagoya School church. It was a day on which their long cherished hopes and earnest prayers were finally realized, in fact, a day of pride and joy for all Methodist Protestants in Japan.

On Sunday, June 26, the Chukyo Mifu Kyokwai, which is known to us as the Klein-Colburne Memorial Methodist Protestant Church, was formally opened, and dedicated to the worship of God. Appropriate services marked the day.

At 10:00 o'clock in the morning the congregation assembled for a last hour of worship in the old church building. As the benches had all been removed from this building, the congregation stood for a brief ceremony. Remarks were made by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Sakaino, and a brief history of the old church was given by Mr. Kimura, principal of our Nagoya School, and an official member of the church for many years.

The chief meeting was held in the afternoon at 3 o'clock. A large congregation assembled in the beautiful auditorium of the new church. The president of the conference and the former pastors were present. Pastors, mission workers, and missionaries of our own and other denominations from Nagoya and vicinity were also in attendance.

The sermon was delivered by Rev. I. Inanoma, former president of the Conference. It was brief, eloquent, and full of grace and power. Former pastors, Otake and Tamura, also took part in the service. On behalf of the building committee the church was presented for dedication by Brother Auman, and accepted by Pastor Sakaino on behalf of the congregation. President Sakai took charge of the dedication. Pastors of churches of other denominations and others offered felicitations. Dr. Layman pronounced the benediction. The whole service carried with it a genuine dignity and impressiveness. We left the service with the prayer in our hearts that this church might become a House of Worship and a House of Prayer where many souls should find life and peace and joy in Christ Jesus.

It would not be possible to give an adequate description of the splendid new edifice. The pictures will tell the story more satisfactorily. Suffice it to say that this church will compare favorably with any in Japan. It is by far the finest in Nagoya or vicinity, and one of which our denomination may well be proud.

We wish to give due credit to those in charge of the building operations. The architect and contractor were most efficient and conscientious in their labors. The Hirose Company, the contractors and builders, were most courteous and painstaking, and tried to follow the wishes of the building committee even to minor details. The carpenters worked faithfully from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., a thing of wonder to us who come from the land of the six and eight hour day. As Mr. Kimura expressed it, while he joyfully watched the progress of the building from day to day, "the noise of their hammers is music in my ears."

Special credit is due the Mission Building Committee, composed of Dr. Layman and Mr. Auman. Dr. Layman, himself more or less of an architect and builder, gave most generously of his time and talents in supervising the construction of this new building.

In addition to the dedication service there were other meetings which are worthy of mention. After the dedication, the pastors, mission workers, and missionaries of our own church met together in the spacious Sunday school room for an hour of social fellowship, and to partake of a delicious Japanese meal served by the church committee.

On Monday, July 27, in the afternoon and evening two powerful addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Imai, pastor of the Tokoyo Aoyama Cakuin (Methodist Mission) church. The main auditorium and gallery were packed to capacity with about 700 students. Several of the classes could not attend as there was not sufficient room. What an inspiring sight to see the church filled with so many young men, the future citizens of Japan. Brother Imai preached with exceptional power and fervor, and, we believe, with lasting effect. Will you not join us in the prayer that God may make this new church the agency through which many, many of these young men, and others, may be brought into the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ?

On Tuesday, the 28th, a memorial service was held for the teachers, students, and alumni who have passed on to the Great Beyond. In the evening an informal farewell service was held by the church Christian Endeavor society in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Auman, who are returning to America on furlough.

On Wednesday morning, the 29th, there was a special service in honor of Dr. and Mrs. Layman, who have given so many years of faithful service to our church in Japan. A handsome memorial window has been placed in the church in their honor, by the Alumni Association. Dr. Layman, in his address, stated that he greatly appreciated the Japanese custom which enabled a man to receive a memorial window while he was still living. He also said that he thought it would be most appropriate if a similar window were erected in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Kimura, whose faithful service has meant so much in the development of the school—a splendid suggestion, by the way.

We, as missionaries on the field, and also in behalf of the Japanese church, wish to thank the Board, and through the Board all those who had a part in this enterprise, for this splendid new edifice. We feel that our descriptions are so inadequate. We hope the pictures will be more satisfactory. If you might have the privilege of seeing this church for yourself, especially when it is filled with students listening to the Gospel, you would feel amply rewarded.

May God bless this church to the increase of His Kingdom; may He bless all those whose gifts have made it possible; may He bless all those who enter its doors for ministry or worship; —will you not join us in this prayer?

The above splendid account of the dedication of the Klein-Coulbourne Memorial Church in Nagoya, Japan comes from the pen of the Rev. Paul F. Warner written on the steam ship while on his way home for his vacation.

OUR STORY PAGE

THE DRUMMER BOY

Of all the small boys in Hillsburg, Clyde Meredith was the happiest. Not that the occasion called for mirth, for it was a solemn occasion. It was Decoration Day, and there were many aching hearts and wet eyes and many sorrowful thoughts.

"O, for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!"

But Clyde was too young to understand war and the awful meaning of death. He came of a very lucky and long-lived family. Even his great-grandfather Meredith was still hale and hearty. So, naturally, Decoration Day brought no sorrow to his heart. It brought keen excitement and pleasure, for there was a parade and speeches and picnics and at night a big bonfire. And the best part of all was that he was to have part in all these things. His great-grandfather had been a drummer-boy during the Civil War, and Clyde was to wear his old uniform and march in the parade.

"I hope," said great-grandpa, "you'll be worthy of that uniform. No matter what happens, be ready to do your duty as a soldier and a gentleman."

Clyde saluted, promising himself to do his very best. Mother Meredith pressed the old suit and laid it out for Clyde and then she said:

"I have everything ready, Clyde. I guess you can get into these things by yourself. I ought to take great-grandpa and grandpa over to the Hall so they can get places in the auto. It takes so long to get things started. Can you manage alone and join us at the Hall? I'll take your drum for you. Hurry and don't be late."

Clyde was sure he could get along very well. He had tried on the uniform several times and knew where all the buttons went.

So his mother and the rest of the family went on ahead to the Hall, in front of which the Decoration Day Parade was to start.

He found it quite easy to pull on the long pants and put on the coat. He was just buttoning it up when he heard a sound downstairs. Of course, he wasn't afraid. Drummer-boys have to be as brave as soldiers, if not braver. He called down gruffly:

"Who's there!"

"A-goo-gaa!" called a gay voice, and Clyde recognized the word as belonging specially to little Jimmy Holden, a two-year-old neighbor.

"How'd you get in?" inquired Clyde, coming down.

"Big Cop! Big Cop!" cried Jimmy, staring delightedly at Clyde in his uniform.

"No, I'm a drummer-boy," explained Clyde. "You'll see me in the parade."

Jimmy did not speak English very well. He had a language of his own which he preferred, and he said a few words, meaning something or other, and Clyde saw him hold up a bright object.

"What is it, kid?" asked Clyde.

He came close and Jimmy hid the thing behind him, but Clyde had already seen what it was—a gas key. There was natural gas in their town and almost everybody had gas fire-places which were turned on from the floor. Most people took out the key after turning on the gas, or turning it off, and Clyde wondered why the Holdens let their little boy play with a gas key. He looked hurriedly to make sure that the key did not belong in their fireplace.

"I turn on the gas," said Jimmy, cheerfully.

"Where?" demanded Clyde.

Jimmy wandered in and out of all the houses in the neighborhood, and was a great pet with everybody.

"I turn on gas!" Jimmy explained. "Just like that!" and he made a motion with his hand.

Clyde was getting quite alarmed.

"Jimmy," he said, "where did you turn on gas? Your house?"

"No, Beany's house," replied Jimmy.

He then toddled to the fireplace and stuck the key into the lock and turned on the gas.

Clyde hastily turned it off again and took the key away, which made Jimmy howl loudly.

"Now, stop that!" cried Clyde. "You're a very bad boy."

"I'm not bad," protested Jimmy.

"Well, you're foolish," Clyde replied. "Come on, now, and show me where you turned on the gas at Beany's."

Beany was one of Clyde's best friends and he would be at the parade with most of his family. But there was a very little baby in the family and Clyde feared that they might have left the baby home and the grandmother had perhaps stayed home with it.

He hurried out and ran Jimmy till his short, fat legs twinkled, over to Beany's house. They rang the doorbell and pounded, then tried the door, but they couldn't get in. Then they went around to the back door.

A man passing by called out:

"Hey, messenger-boy! They're there all right, because when I passed half an hour ago I saw an old lady sitting by the window."

"Jimmy," he said, "I'm getting scared."

Everybody else in the neighborhood had gone to the parade. Clyde was getting scared. He knew how very poisonous the fumes of gas were. Even now the old lady and the baby might be lying unconscious in the locked house, and unless someone got in quickly it might be too late.

He began to go around trying the windows and at last found one unlocked. As he opened it, he smelt gas, and it did not take him long to throw open all the windows, then rush to the fireplace and try the lock. That one was all right, so he went upstairs. The fumes got stronger and stronger, and he rushed into the front bed-room. There in a chair by the window sat the old lady, hunched up looking as if she were asleep. The baby in its crib was very still.

Although the day was mild and warm, the old lady was old-fashioned and very much afraid of draughts. Every window was tight shut. Clyde held his breath and quickly threw them wide open. Then he turned off the gas which was escaping into the room. Then he went over to the old lady and touched her gently. She did not move.

Never was a boy more frightened. He was afraid that she was dead and perhaps the baby, too. He had never seen a dead person, and he was so scared he felt like running away.

"No, I'm a drummer-boy," he told himself, and very trembling he laid his hand on the old lady's wrist. It was quite cold, and Clyde was more scared than ever.

"I'll do the baby first," he thought, trying to remember his First Aid Lessons in case of gas poisoning.

He went bravely to the crib and leaned over the baby. He gritted his teeth and threw off its covers and turned it on its back. Just then the baby puckered up its face and let out a loud scream like a kitten whose tail had been stepped on. Poor Clyde jumped nearly out of his skin.

"Thank goodness, you're alive!" he cried.

"Look here," exclaimed a sharp voice behind him. "How dare you come and wake up the baby!"

It was the grandmother, quite alive and looking mad enough to spank somebody.

"I—I'm sorry," stammered Clyde. "Please excuse me. I'm late for the Parade now. I came to give you a gas key Jimmy had swiped from your fireplace some time ago. Better keep it up on the shelf."

The old lady looked a little bewildered as she took the key, but the boy bounded off.

"I tried to do my duty," he thought, "but if I'm late for the parade I'll feel awful."—Selected.

THE LITTLE TOWN OF UPSIDE DOWN

There was once upon a time a good little girl who woke up one morning and got out of the wrong side of the bed. It was a dull, rainy day, instead of a bright, sunny one, and she had wanted to play out of doors in the garden. That is the way things started.

When her nurse wanted to wash the little girl's face, she sputtered and she pouted. When her hair was brushed, she squealed and she cried. She wouldn't let nurse put on her stockings, and she didn't want any breakfast. After breakfast she sulked with her nose flat against the rainy window pane. She was as cross as cross could be if anybody spoke to her.

Well, while she was standing with her nose flat against the rainy window pane, a little elf hopped out of a raindrop and slipped in through the window ventilator. "Hello!" he said, "I've come to take you to the little town of Upside Down. Come along! All aboard for the Upside Down Place!"

He took the little girl and whisked her off, and the first thing she knew she was on a puffy-puffy train that had its engine at the back and not at the front, and the train went backwards instead of going the right way! The little girl kicked and she screamed, but the train kept on going wrong! "Where are you taking me?" she asked.

"I'm going to show you what the Upside Down country is like," the little elf answered. "You belong there because you've been doing everything wrong since you got up this morning. That's why you belong there, and not with right side up people. That's why I'm taking you to the little town of Upside Down."

So they kept going on and on with the engine at the back of the train and the train going backwards instead of the right way. By and by the little girl noticed that the trees were all upside down, with their roots in the air; the sky was where the ground ought to be; the houses stood on their roofs, and everybody walked wrong side up. She didn't like it at all, at all.

"I don't want to go any farther," she screamed. "I want to go home."

"I can't take you home. You belong in the Upside Down country where the little girls won't let their nurses wash their faces, where they scream and kick when their hair is combed, and where they won't put on their stockings or eat any breakfast."

There was nothing to do but just as the elf said. And at last they stopped at an upside down station and got out at the little town of Upside Down.

"This is where you belong," said the little elf. "You don't belong where things are right side up."

So the little girl got out at the upside down station and walked through the upside down streets of the little town of Upside Down. It was not at all nice. It was horrid. When she spoke to anybody she met, that person snapped and snarled or else that person sulked and pouted. O, the little girl did not like being treated that way at all. She began to think that that was just exactly the way she had behaved to her nurse. And she said to the elf: "I am tired of this upside down place, and I want to be right side up. Can't I go home again ever?"

"If you do things the right way," said the elf, "then you can go home. But you really belong here." And he looked hard at the little girl. "Let me see how you act when the nurse wants to wash your face," he asked. "Let me see what you do when she puts on your stockings. Do you feel like doing things right and eating your breakfast?"

So the little girl said: "I want to go home and be right. Please take me home, and I will be good." And she showed the elf how she would behave when she went home again.

"It looks as if you might go home," he said. "But I must be sure you can be pleasant before I take you. Smile."

So the little girl smiled. And they went to the station and got on the train that went the right way and not the wrong way, and they went home lickety-split.

When they reached home there was the nurse waiting for the good little girl; and the little girl said: "Oh, I'm not upside down and wrong any more. I'm glad I'm home, where everything is polite and right side up. I don't want to go to the little town of Upside Down any more."

And what became of the little elf? That I don't know, but I wouldn't want him to take me to the little town of Upside Down, would you?—Congregationalist and Advance.

MOST BOYS HAVE DISCOVERED

That it pays to be friendly.

That it takes something more than clothes to make a good chum, why don't you get there first?"

That good habits and a good time have never yet been divorced.

That the sun invariably rises on time the day after his defeat; yes, and that it seems to smile, and say: "Another opportunity."

That work gives spice to play, and that play gives flavor to work.

That fairness says: "If you expect John to be a helpful chum, why don't yo uget there first?"

That high ideals keep his feet out of the mire.—Boy Life.

A WRONG COURSE

"We plan and plan, then pray
That God may bless our plan;
So runs our dark and doubtful way,
That scarce shall lead unto the day—
So runs the life of man!
But, hearken! God saith, 'Pray!'
And He will show His plan,
And lead us in His shining way,
That leadeth on to perfect day,
Each God-surrendered man!"

Among the 115,000,000 of our population it is impossible to say how many really try to follow Christ. And a Christian is a person that tries to follow Christ. Obviously, if there is any considerable number of persons that are not followers of Jesus, we need missionary work.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Fair Grove, Why Not Circuit.—Sunday, August 21, was home-coming day for this church and community. By 10 o'clock a large crowd had gathered until there was no more room in church and many on the outside.

Most of the sons and daughters of the Aumans, Kings, Cagles, Slacks, Spencers, Lawrences, Garners, Lowdermilks, and others returned home for that day. Also many of the students of Why Not Academy were shaking hands with friends. Rev. J. H. Stowe who was pastor here for eight years and has helped in several meetings was here, also his daughters, Miss Xannie of High Point, and Mrs. Carrie Royster of Troy, Mrs. Caro McNeil of Asheville, and Mr. Stowe of Greensboro. We would not forget to mention our own Rev. B. M. Williams, who was converted in this church and preached his first sermon here. We are proud of him. Other visiting ministers who were present were the Rev. R. F. Brown of Richmond, Rev. W. L. Maness of Siler City, Rev. J. E. Pritchard of Asheboro, Rev. J. R. Comer, Seagrove.

That day was also the beginning of our special meeting and it had been understood for some time that Rev. J. Clyde Auman would do the preaching which he did well. The visible results were not what we could wish but we feel that much good was accomplished.

Our pastor, Rev. D. I. Garner, has been very busy with his meeting and helping in others and it seems that each sermon he preaches is better than the others.

We held Children's Day in July and had a nice service. REPORTER.

Haw River Circuit.—Our special meeting at Brown Summit will begin the first Sunday in September. Rev. W. L. Carson will be the help.

Brother Rupert Butler, from Midway church, has been elected delegate to Annual Conference. We have held three of our special meetings assisted by Revs. Carson, Trollinger—J. L., and Sisk. All did fine work and the meetings were successful. The additions were not as large as some other charges have had but this is due to the fact that the material is kept worked up

In spite of the fact that the pastor and wife have been sick, the work is going well. The wife is still improving and the pastor has excelled himself in weight and is feeling fit again. W. D. REED.

Hollister, Halifax Charge.—Our Sunday school attendance has been very good during the summer months. We planned to have our annual Sunday school picnic last Thursday, but owing to the heavy rainfall it was postponed until a later date.. We were very glad to have with us last Sunday Mr. Yarborough of Richmond, Va. He gave us a splendid talk on, How to Improve the Sunday School.

Our Missionary societies met with Mrs. Edd Wood on Tuesday afternoon, August 16. We had a good meeting and nearly all the members were present. We missed our pastor at the meeting. He was in a revival meeting and could not be with us.

Our revival meeting began yesterday morning. We had three services yesterday. Our pastor preached two wonderful sermons. It seems to me he preaches better every time I hear him. Brother Suits came to us last night and will be with us the remainder of the week. He preached a good sermon last night. Pray for us that we may have a great revival in our church.

I attended the meeting at Union last week and heard some wonderful gospel messages by Rev. M. P. Chambliss. Surely Brother Chambliss is a man of God.

KATHLEEN SHEARIN, Reporter.

Alleghany, Davidson Circuit.—Our protracted meeting began the escond Sunday in August. Brother E. W. Jones of High Point was the pulpit help; he came on Sunday and did all the preaching. He did some great preaching. Every sermon seemed to be the best. I never saw better attention than they gave him. There were large crowds all the time, especially at night. The house was full and people out of doors. We had a good meeting. There were six converted and reclaimed; the church revived and we hope that we all may take new courage and live up to our duty. Sickness kept some of our members from the church. Brother Carl Coble and wife were kept away on account of his wife's mother; we miss them in the meeting; also Brother Will Crawford's wife is very sick; we miss them in the meeting. We pray if it is the Lord's will to restore them.

Mr. Jesse Aldred and Miss Cola Taylor were married on Monday of the meeting. We wish them great success in life. They were both members of Aleghany church.

While Brother Jones did the preaching our pastor was busy, he sang, he talked, he pled and prayed; he is always busy and gives us great encouragement. We have a good pastor. Pray for him that he may have great success in life and win many souls for Christ.

State Street, Lexington.—The pastor has such an efficient reporter that it has "spoiled" him about writing for the paper. Really there have been so many things happening that reports have been neglected on my part.

Our special meeting was good and several were added to the church and following that was our Vacation Bible School with a large attendance, 110, as large as some of our older and stronger churches. Immediately following that a trip to the Southwest in the interest of our young people's work.

It was quite a treat to be associated with some of our field workers like Mrs. Maier and Miss Shaeffer and then the leaders in Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma I found to be fine people. I told the people in Texas that I expected to meet the men with broad brimmed hats, leather breeches and pistols. But they dress like we do, look like we do, and in fact I felt very much at home, for many of them were either from North Carolina or their forefathers were and practically all names were familiar. If I were a young man and looking for a greater field of opportunity I do not know of a greater field for service than the Southwest.

In Oklahoma I had eighteen preachers in one of my classes, all of whom seemed eager to learn more about how to do church work effectively. Many of them have not had the advantage we have in the East.

This was the first real vacation that Mrs. Bethea has had in some time. The boys all away from home for the Summer gave her a good chance to go along. It was hot and the work was hard, but it was an enjoyable and profitable trip in every way.

The union meeting held in Cooper, Texas, for the Presbyterians, M. E. South, and Methodist Protestants was a delightful experience. The pastors all fine fellows, a great choir, a fine leader, several instruments, the best of music made it an easy matter to preach. Brother G. W. Sanders, pastor of our church there, many told me is the most popular and the best preacher in town. A fine gentleman of the old Southern type. Many things I would like to tell about, but space forbids. There were a number of professions—mostly reclamations.

In our third quarterly conference held last night the reports were fine, finances up to date, all claims will be paid.

Brother H. S. Lanier is our delegate elect to Annual Conference. N. G. BETHEA.

Asheville.—Last Sunday Pastor Bates preached in the forenoon on "The Secret of Becoming." At night Rev. J. T. Betts gave an illustrated lecture on the Holy Land. On Monday the interdenominational missionary union met in our church here.

Two Sundays ago, Brother Bates was ill and Rev. G. H. Enfield preached in his stead.

Mrs. J. E. Pritchard and Miss Callicutt, of Asheboro, were recent visitors to our church.

The joint meeting of our missionary societies and Brotherhood, two weeks ago, was very enjoyable. We met at the Bates' Cottage in Weaverville. We ladies furnished a sumptuous dinner. President Trowbridge of Weaver Cottage was most happy in the address of the evening. He declared that he is always delighted to meet with Methodist Protestants.

Misses Margaret and Elma Fawcett will enter Guilford College next week. They will be missed from our church. They have been faithful in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor.

Mrs. Lucy Robertson recently returned to Greensboro. She attended our services here many times during her stay. Rev. W. A. Ledford worshiped with us Sunday morning. We were glad to see him.

Rev. G. L. Curry and family were recent visitors to Asheville and Weaverville, to the delight of their many friends. Brother Curry, as pastor of Buncombe circuit, did infinite good. His work is still bearing fruit.

Chestnut Ridge, Orange Charge.—Announcement: Our special meeting will begin the fourth Sunday in September with Rev. Edw. Suits as pulpit help. We ask the prayers of the people, that we may have a good meeting.

High Point.—At the 11 o'clock service on Sunday morning Rev. P. E. Lindley delivered an inspiring message on "The Sweets of Life." He called especial attention to the delights of domestic life, of adventure, of memories, and of service for others. The choir sang a beautiful Anthem, "O How Amiable are Thy Dwellings," and Mrs. J. Hobart Allred rendered a lovely solo, "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains" by Harker in her usual charming manner. On Sunday evening the last of the August union services was held at Wesley Memorial M. E. church, when the sermon was delivered by Rev. W. A. Rollins of College Place church, Greensboro.

At the Senior Christian Endeavor Society meeting on Monday evening the Topic, "Why is Missionary Work Needed in a Christian Country?" was discussed, and Miss Alma Headen, returned missionary of the Presbyterian church from work in Africa, made a most interest talk, which was greatly enjoyed and appreciated by the members of the Society.

Rev. and Mrs. E. L. Ballard returned Thursday from their vacation trip to Baltimore, and services of the Junior church were resumed Sunday morning to the delight of the young members. There was a large and attentive congregation present.

At the 11 o'clock service the congregation was greatly pleased to receive a welcome addition, when Mrs. Furman R. Auman, nee Miss Doris Crooks, united with our membership. Mr. Auman has been one of our most loyal and esteemed members for several years, and we are delighted to know that his bride has cast her lot with us also.

The Sunday school picnic which was postponed on account of unfavorable weather last week will be held next Thursday at Ritter's Lake. Cars will leave the church at two o'clock p.m.

We regret to announce that Mrs. W. P. Pickett has been ill for several days. Her numerous friends are wishing for her an early recovery.

Mrs. S. C. Vuncannon and daughter, Ernestine, have returned from a visit to Rome, Georgia, where they were guests of her brother, Mr. W. K. Mebane.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Pritchard of Burlington, spent the week-end here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Pritchard.

Mr. and Mrs. Carey J. Davis have returned from their wedding trip through the Shenandoah Valley to Washington City, and are at home on Carrick Avenue.

Registration at High Point College begins next Monday, September 5th. Already reservation's for all rooms in the two Dormitories have been made. Classes will be resumed for the fourth annual session on September 7th

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hutchison of Charlotte have returned home after a visit of a few days to their daughter, Mrs. June Gray, and her family.

Mr. J. W. Hinkle is building an attractive new residence on Woodrow Avenue.

Rev. J. C. Auman, returned missionary from Nagoya, Japan, is the guest of his sister, Mrs. J. W. Austin.

The handsome new High School building is nearing completion, and will be ready for the opening on September 12th. The old High School will be used as a Junior High School, by the sixth and seventh grades.

Laurel Hill, Fallston Charge.—Our revival meeting began the second Sunday in August and closed the following Saturday night. Brother Morgan did all of the preaching. We, the members of the church, so dearly love him, and enjoy hearing his good sermons so much that we voted for him to do all of the preaching. This he was glad to do and he did it very, very successfully.

Brother Morgan did not preach at the first service, but he made one of the finest talks. He read the first chapter of St. James and explained it. Sunday p.m. he did not take a text, but gave us another splendid lecture on "Counterfeit Religion."

The following were his subjects for the week:

Monday a.m., "Christian Perfection."

Monday p.m., "The Broad and Narrow Way, and Praying for your Enemies." How many of us pray for our enemies? How much smoother this old world, in which we are living, would roll on if we did.

Tuesday a.m., "The Power of the Holy Ghost."

Tuesday p.m., "Sins and Times." This was one among the best sermons. I can't understand how sinners can listen to such a wonderful sermon and harden their hearts against God.

Wednesday a.m., "On Fire."

Wednesday p.m., "The Devil Goes Fishing, His Baits and His Empty Hook." Dear friends, do you know what the devil's empty fish hook is? It is the man who curses.

Thursday a.m., "The Devil Leaves."

Thursday p.m., "Whatsoever a Man Soweth That Also Shall He Reap."

Friday night, "Lost Souls."

Saturday a.m., the sermon was for the church members. "Laying Aside All Malice and Strife."

Saturday p.m., "Hell." This was a splendid sermon. It is, and was sad, for our meeting to come to a close with some of our fine young men on the road to this terrible place, although we had a great revival. It is one that will be remembered for ages. It was a great blessing to our church. May God's richest blessings rest upon our dearly beloved pastor for being so faithful throughout the entire meeting. When his work is done in this world and God says, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and takes him home to reign with Him, I believe that one among the brightest of stars in his crown will be for this great revival he has conducted. May God bless and keep him.

Christian friends, pray for us, our church and Sunday school, and that the new members will hold out faithful to the end, which have been brought into the church during our great revival.

ONE OF THE MEMBERS.

Union Grove.—The fact that we have not reported to the Herald for several weeks is no evidence that we have not been busy. The church has been wired and we now have electric lights. We are very grateful to the high school for allowing us to connect up with their Delco plant for power. We have painted the interior of the church and hope, in the future, to carpet the aisles and arrange Sunday school departments.

Our revival meeting closed on Friday night, August 19. We had good attendance and a glorious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The church was greatly revived, nineteen were converted and reclaimed, and four added to the church. We were glad to have the other denominations of this community cooperate with us. Rev. O. C. Loy did the preaching and his wonderful gospel messages were sanctioned by "amens" from four ministers of other denominations. The people of Union Grove were highly pleased with Brother Loy and want him to come back again. Mr. Robert S. Johnson, a member of the Carolina Quartet, directed the music.

T. GLENN MADISON.

Mizpah, Haw River Charge.—Our Special meeting was held the second week in August. Rev. J. T. Sisk from Mocksville, was the pulpit help. Brother Sisk brought us some unusually good sermons. I am sure every one enjoyed his music also.

On Friday morning his quartet from Mocksville came over and sang for us at the morning and evening services. The quartet was made up of Rev. J. T. Sisk, Pauline and Hughie Sisk, and Mr. Somers with Roy Massey accompanying. I haven't words to tell just how well these four sang. Our pastor called Pauline "a mocking bird." Pauline sings alto and I never heard better. We hope this quartet will come our way again some time.

We were glad to have Dr. George Brown from Reidsville, preach for us one morning during the meeting.

The third Sunday afternoon Dr. Allman brought a group of children from the High Point Children's Home to our church. The children gave us a splendid program. It does us good to see how well these children are trained and taught.

We are so glad that our pastor, Rev. W. D. Reed, and his wife have been restored to health so that they may be with us again.

MRS. FRED E. JONES, Reporter.

Friendship, Fallston Charge.—Our special meeting began the third Sunday and closed Friday night, August 26. Our pastor had for his pulpit help Rev. G. H. Hendry of Concord. Much interest was shown by an overflowing congregation. There were twelve or thirteen converts and nine joined the church. We feel that the church was revived. The people of Friendship learned to love Brother Hendry while he was with us. We enjoyed his wonderful sermons. We appreciate his earnestness and feel sure that he is a man of God. We hope he will come this way again.

Owing to the absence of our faithful pastor, Rev. J. M. Morgan, our young minister, Ptylla Bingham, who is spending his vacation at home, filled the appointment last Sunday afternoon. Young Bingham took for his text, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and these things shall be added unto you." He brought many points that will be helpful to all present. We pray that God will make of him a mighty man in his kingdom's service.

The Christian Endeavor Society has been re-organized at this place. The young people are taking more interest. Good programs are rendered each Sunday. We have planned to go to Pineview Lake for a watermelon feast Saturday, September 3.

KATIE LEE CLAY, Reporter.

Canaan, Denton Charge.—Our work is still progressing. Our special meeting began the third Sunday and closed Saturday night, August 27. Our pastor had for his pulpit help, Rev. Mr. Trogdon who was our former pastor for several years and was well liked by every one. Rev. A. A. Ridge of south Lexington charge who is a member of our church preached three interesting sermons and Rev. C. E. Ridge, another one of our members, also preached two very inspiring sermons which were enjoyed by all, as it was his first time to preach at his home church.

We feel that we owe much to these good ministers. They won a warm place in our hearts as they labored so faithfully among us. Every sermon was very inspiring and each service was well attended.

We feel that the whole church has been greatly revived. There were twenty conversions and two additions to the church. Yet we feel that there are others in our community that are wandering from the fold of God. We trust and pray that some one may speak a word to them taht will cause them to come into the fold.

Yesterday was our regular preaching day and Mr. Henderson preached a very encouraging sermon. We were glad to have with us Mr. Henderson's brother and wife from Greensboro. REPORTER.

State Street.—Our pastor, Brother Bethea, has returned from a week's work at Mount Hermon, where he conducted a successful revival meeting.

Votes were taken at the close of the morning service for delegate to the Annual Conference. Mr. Walker and Mr. Harold Lanier were nominees. The result of this vote will be reported at the quarterly conference to be held tomorrow night.

The Foreign Missionary society will meet at the church Thursday afternoon. Miss Cleo Spainhour was with us in the morning services a week ago yesterday and was received into the church here. She was formerly a member of Pinnacle church (M. P.)

We were all glad to have Mr. F. J. Cox and his family back in the services yesterday after an absence of nearly three months. Miss Clara Taylor is back from Boone where she attended the Appalachian Training School for teachers. REPORTER.

Hickory Grove.—We were very fortunate and very glad to have Dr. A. G. Dixon with us Sunday morning. He delivered a splendid and inspiring address,, stressing the importance of the church and its work. There was a very goodly number out.

Our meeting begins the third Sunday in September. Rev. Isley Cousin will be his help. We hope to have a good meeting.

A CHALLENGE AND AN OPPORTUNITY

A number of years ago the Methodist Protestant church had a very fine opportunity to organize and build a church in the city of Kannapolis, North Carolina, a thriving industrial city of nearly fifteen thousand inhabitants. For some reason we failed to take advantage of the opportunity and, consequently, other churches went in and have built flourishing churches. Many who were members of our church moved to town and naturally united with the other churches.

Finally, however, we have made a good beginning toward a church organization. During the month of June, Rev. G. H. Hendry, the pastor of our church in Concord, held a revival meeting there and was able to organize a church. The Sunday school is constantly growing in membership, and services are held each Sunday.

A large lot has been purchased near the City High School Building. A large dwelling house stands on one side of this lot, which will serve acceptably as a parsonage. On the other end of the lot has been built a tabernacle in which the services are being conducted. The church membership is much encouraged and is determined to go forward.

But right at this time when, if ever, the work is to go forward, the members there must secure a bit of outside aid, the Board of Church Extension is unable to render any aid whatsoever because of other outstanding obligations. Consequently, we have felt that if the conditions were placed before our workers throughout the state and they realized the wonderful opportunity we have now of building a church where one has been needed so long, that many would be glad to make some contribution.

The matter was presented to the patsors and young people at the Young People's Conference at High Point College. About two hundred dollars was given in cash and pledges. We need just about $1,000 to put the church where it can go forward of its own initiative. May we not appeal to YOU who read this article to send in a contribution of some amount to help in this fine enterprise? We know of nothing that will encourage the local workers more and that will be a better investment in the Kingdom of Christ.

The following cash payments have already been received and have been turned over to the treasurer of Kannapolis church and applied on the purchase of the church property:

H. A. Garrett, $5; Mr. J. Norman Wills, $10; Miss Ethel F. Blackwelder, $5; Rev. N. G. Bethea and wife, $10; Rev. W. D. Short, $5; Capt. R. M. Rankin, $10; Rev. F. R. Anderson, $5; Rev. Lawrence Little, $7.50; W. J. Widenhouse, $5; Y. P. Sunday School Class Concord, $5; Rev. J. D. Williams, $5; J. M. Millikan, $5; Mrs. Whit Wild and Mrs. Lonnie Morris, $1; Rev. J. E. Pritchard, $1; Rev. Robert Short, $2; Mr. T. O. Pender, $1; Rev. C. E. Ridge, $1; Rev. E. A. Bingham, $1; Rev. J. D. Cranford, $1; Rev. J. D. Morris, $5; Rev. M. P. Chambliss, $1; Rev. Fred W. Paschall, $5; Rev. W. H. Neese, $1; Rev. G. L. Curry, $1.

Additional payments may be sent to the following address and will be promptly forwarded to the Kannapolis church treasurer.

Thanking you for your assistance and assuring you of the worthiness of the enterprise, which promises much in the future of the Methodist Protestant church in this section.

Sincerely,

D. A. McLAURIN.

AN OPEN LETTER

Dr. Allman, and those who "serve" will be at Oak Grove, near Rural Hall, next Sunday at three o'clock p.m.

The pastor, Brother Curry, has authorized some of us to help to publish. His notice will be sufficient, but I think to venture with this "preamble." The children from the "Home," will sing, and exercise in their Bible lessons.

The extended invitation is for friends, near and far, to be in with their filled baskets, and serve as a festival occasion after his worshiping exercises are over.

The means of fast travel make it convenient for friends at a distance to attend such an occasion. Of course numbers from the Pinnacle circuit will be able to get in; and the "full basket" can serve, even if those at a distance are just a little late. A great lack is that some of "our" well-to-do M. P. families have not got the M. P. Herald. Every family needs their paper. If I were well able I would take a large roll of "our papers" in order to hand out to the neighbors and friends. W. F. GRABS.

THE RECENT YOUNG PEOPLES' CONFERENCE

I attended the entire Young People's Conference and it was certainly very inspiring to see that large number of young people so interested in their class work and such a large number volunteer for all-time service and many others for Sunday school teachers, Christian Endeavor workers, or whatever work their local church needed them to do. It strengthened my faith in the young people of the Methodist Protestant Church as nothing else has ever done.—(Not written for publication, but deemed worthy of it.—Editor.)

—Do you want an engine of two thousand horsepower as a gift? This engine cost $46,000 twenty-five years ago and is still good for years of use. It is being replaced by a modern engine that is more economical of fuel. You can have the old engine for taking it away. It is to be found in one of the great cotton mills of Greensboro. If you want it as a gift, apply to Mr. D. M. Sullivan.

WHAT CHRIST MEANS TO ME

(Testimony of a young man converted from Islam.)

I had gone through the Koran once under able leadership and attended many services of worship in the large and small mosques. I had lived among good Mohammedans for many years, but had subsequently the privilege of mingling with the highest type of Christian people.

One of the primary factors, therefore, in my conversion was the example set by Christians—their every-day life, their general behavior, their willingness to serve their fellowmen, regardless of race, nationality or color. Another factor was the systematic, habitual and careful reading of the Bible. More than twenty years ago the wife of a great missionary had a little school of a dozen boys and girls from good non-Christian families. During one hour a week she read with them the Bible first from the Old Testament and then from the New. The children learned some of the psalms by heart and some of the sayings of Christ in the gospels. I bear witness here that this planting brought forth abundant fruit. I find great joy, peace and inspiration in the Bible. I find rest and encouragement. I have never known the time when I have read the Bible without finding something new in it. I have yet to go to my Bible in hours of defeat and despair and discouragement and not find help in it. The more I read my Bible, the easier it is for me to believe that Christ cares for me, and the more do I enjoy the assurance of everlasting and abundant life in Him.

I have believed His promises and I have realized them. The more I have trusted in Him in everything, the more He has been able to do for me. I did not embrace Christianity without long meditation. And I can say without reserve that all I have and all that I do and all I can do is Christ's. He is all in all to me. He has helped me as a teacher in engineering, as a Sunday school teacher, and as a man. I doubt not that He will help me to cast off everything that still keeps His spirit from me.—Selected.

FREE TITHING LITERATURE

We hereby offer free, postage paid, to any minister or church worker who asks for the number needed, a sufficient quantity of the pamphlet "Winning Financial Freedom" to furnish one copy to every member of the official boards of his church and to the Presidents and Secretaries of both the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies; also, a reasonable number for the more influential private members.

Please give your denomination and mention the Methodist Protestant Herald.

There is no unimportant member in the Church. There is no one whom the Church does not need. The smallest service is worth while. We may be able only to open the doors; but that is necessary, too. We may be able to smile and shake hands with strangers. That is a divine service also. There is room in the Church for all sorts of gifts, all sorts of talents, all sorts of service. Our duty is to find what we can do, and do it with joy.—C. E. World.

A VIRILE ORGANIZATION

The No-Tobacco League of America recently held its annual convention at Winona Lake, Indiana. Over three thousand were present at various sessions with people enrolled from twenty-two states, four provinces of Canada, Australia, China and Japan. Reports showed an unusually prosperous year. Prof. F. M. Gregg, head of the Department of Psychology, Nebraska Wesleyan University, was re-elected President. Charles M. Fillmore, Indianapolis, was elected General Secretary for his eighth year.

The wide influence which this organization is beginning to exert is suggested in the following letter received recently at headquarters from the manager of the Publicity Department of one of the oldest and strongest denominations.

"I am very much interested in learning definitely concerning the No-Tobacco League which, I am told, is the best and the most effective organization in this country to combat the tobacco evil. I wish you would send me such literature as gives details concerning your work."

Of course the desired information was gladly sent to him as it will be sent to any one who is interested enough to write for it to Chas. M. Fillmore, General Secretary, No-Tobacco League, 821 Occidental Building, Indianapolis, Indiana.

THE MYSTERIOUS DOINGS OF THE EEL

One of the most familiar but least-known fishes of the United States is the common eel. It is found in the Atlantic and the rivers discharging into it, on the American side from northern Brazil to Canada. It is also found in the Great Lakes, though it does not climb Niagara Falls to get there, as some writer once said.

Considerable doubt formerly existed as to the relationship of the eels of the two sides of the Atlantic Ocean. It is now known that they are entirely distinct, one constant point of difference being that the American eel has about seven less vertebrae than the European species. The range of the European fish is from Norway to the Mediterranean and as far as the Azores.

While the remarkable habits of the eel remained unknown, imagination ran riot, fiction and fable were accepted as fact, and the eel was loaded with an incubus of impossible attributes. Now only a few phases of its life remain obscure, and most of the important discoveries relating to the eel in recent years come from Scandinavia and Germany. The reason for this is not strange, as the eel is a far more important food-fish in those countries than it is in America, and consequently of greater interest to the fishery authorities and biologists of those countries. The story of the eel proves to be more wonderful than any of the fables previously believed.

The cause of all the speculations and misconceptions has been the fact that eels do not spawn within the confines of the continents, or where human observation is possible. This, then, is why Aristotle, Pliny, Rondelet, Gesner, and other ancient writers give no account of the generation of eels, other than spontaneous origin from mud, slime, or skins of old eels, etc.

One of the most noteworthy writers of the Middle Ages was Albertus Magnus. An edition of his works published at Frankfort in 1545 contains the statement that "the eel comes out of the water in the night-time into the fields, where he can find peas, beans, or lentils." Because of this work by so reputable an authority as Albertus Magnus, teacher of Aquinas, the belief is current today in parts of Germany that the eel makes excursions on dry land. Now let us turn to the facts as recently discovered by scientific observers.

In the fall the eels which have been living in fresh water and have attained their full growth undergo peculier changes. They lose their dirty yellow-green color, and become silvery; and the eyes in the males become nearly twice their normal size. These eels begin to migrate down-stream, travelling mostly by night, until they reach the sea, where all trace of them is lost. Their behavior in the sea, the depths at which they swim, their rate of travel, and whether in compact schools or in scattered bodies, are the phases of the eel's life which are still obscure. It is known, however, that they do not spawn within the one-thousand-meter curve; that is, their eggs are never deposited in water less than one thousand meters deep.

The next evidence of these eels is met with on the high seas, far from land, in the form of their progeny, the larval eel. These are so different-looking from the fresh-water eel which we are acquainted with that only a trained observer could possibly recognize the fish. It is compressed laterally to the thinness of a visiting-card; it has a small head and large eyes; formidable but non-functional teeth that project forward and laterally; and the body is transparent throughout. It is practically invisible except for its shiny black eyes.

The larval eel undergoes an extraordinary metamorphosis. It remains at sea for one year, during which time it attains a length of three inches. This is the climax of the larval state, and now the eel actually begins to get smaller! There is a gradual change in the form from ribbon-like to cylindrical, a shortening of the body and intestine, and a gradual assumption of the eel-like appearance. During this time the eel is drifting towards the continent to which its species belongs. There is something very remarkable about this. How is it that the American eel always gets to the coast of the United States and Canada, and the European eel to the coasts of Europe? This is one of the peculiarities which science has as yet been unable to answer. All that is known is that the Gulf Stream carries the eels in three main bodies to the coasts of Europe.

One goes to and around the northeast coast of the British Isles, another to the Bay of Biscay and the English Channel, and another to the Straits of Gibraltar and into the Mediterranean Sea. The American species are carried by wind and tide currents, and it is remarkable that they ever reach the coast before they die, as they eat nothing during the whole period of more than a year, from the time when they hatch to the time when they arrive on the coasts. Their digestive organs are so weak at this time that they in all probability could not digest anything if they ate it.

Specimens of the larval eel have been found all over the Atlantic, and it has been noted that they are bigger as they are found nearer the coast and smallest in the vicinity of the Sargasso Sea. It is believed now that the older eels from both continents spawn somewhere in the Sargasso Sea. The eggs are carried to the surface by their natural buoyancy, where they hatch into larval eels.

When the young eels reach the coast, they develop a great attraction for fresh water, and begin to ascend rivers. The males often remain in the lower reaches of the streams, but the females swim on to the headwaters.

When they first arrive, they have little pigment in their skin, but they quickly acquire a brownish color as they go upstream and begin to eat.

At this stage they are called "elvers," a word said to be a corruption of "eel-fare," which originated on the river Severa in England, and spread to all English-speaking countries. "Fare" is from an Anglo-Saxon verb meaning to go over or to travel. Thus, "eel-fare" or "elver" indicates the eels' period of migration upstream.

One of the most surprising facts in the eel's life is that all individuals of both sexes die after spawning once. No "spent" eels have ever been found; no mature ones have ever been seen coming in from the sea. Just what becomes of the eels after they spawn is not known. A marine species called the conger eel dies through the jellifying of its tissues. It is supposed that the same fate assails the common eel.—Harry K. Hobart in Christian Endeavor World.

GYPSIES TAKE WATER CURE

Writing of the habits of gypsy tribes, Konrad Bercovici, who was born a gypsy, comments as follows on their use of water as a preventive of disease: "The gypsy believes in the curative qualities of water. When a child is born it is immediately immersed in running water. Before it is given to the mother's breast 49 hours after its birth it is given water. When someone is ill he is given water —cold water, hot water, water all the time, water against constipation, against headaches, as a cure for rheumatism and all old-age complaints. When a man is over 50 they say: 'He is drinking old-age water.' They use water to cure ills of horses and cattle and sheep. Even their incantations for happiness, their love potions and hate potions are all water. Water is their religion, their witchcraft. Many a gypsy has told me the reason gypsies move from one place to another is because they are going to better and better waters—to swiftly running waters. The gypsies use no drugs of any kind; not even herbs, dried or boiled. Next to water, their other remedy is fat—lard, grease and butter. They apply that to wounds after washing them. 'Water, grease and sunshine' begins the gypsies' prayer to Tchiuma, the mother of the world.'—Pathfinder.

JONES AND OUR FLAG

Congress created the American flag of stars and stripes on June 14, 1777. On the same day it made John Paul Jones a captain in the infant American navy. Jones once said of this coincidence: "The flag and I are twins, born the same hour and the same day out of the womb of destiny. We cannot be parted in life or in death. So long as we can float we shall float together. If we must sink we shall go down as one." It was this same dauntless fighter who, when asked to surrender, hurled back at the proud Briton: "I have not yet begun to fight." Although his own vessel was sinking Jones forced the British man-of-war to haul down his colors.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Towery

J. C. Towery departed this life August 15, 1927, aged 69 years, 11 months, and 11 days. Mr. Towery had been paralyzed for many years. He had been helpless for three or four years. Though he suffered so much, he was faithful until the end.

On August 8, 1895, he was happily married to Miss Catherine Bess. God blessed this union with seven children. Two of the children preceded him to the great beyond.

Mr. Towery professed faith in Christ in early life, and joined Bess' Chapel Methodist Protestant church. At one time Mr. Towery led the choir and enjoyed it as few men do. When he was no longer able to attend the house of worship, he was delighted to have his pastor visit him, read God's word, pray or preach. You could not please him better than to sing the old hymns of Zion.

The funeral service was conducted at Bess' Chapel by his pastor, assisted by Rev. J. E. Houser. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Jenks sang two appropriate duets. A large congregation was present to show their last respects. May God bless and comfort his companion and the children who are left to mourn their loss. Though an invalid for many years, Mr. Towery will be greatly missed by his home, church, and community.

Williams

It is with the keenest sense of loss to our church and with deepest regret that we record the death of Brother Walter J. Williams. He was one of Calvary's very best members—best in 'most every particular. Certainly he was one of the most loyal. He was always found in the business meetings and in the regular services of his church when his health would permit.

Brother Williams had not been well for several months. Something like a year ago he underwent a serious operation, and did not perhaps ever fully recover from that. Then when it was found necessary to perform another operation his strength was not sufficient to stand it. He was operated on Monday morning and lived until Wednesday evening when at 8:30 he passed to his reward.

He is survived by two sons, H. L. Williams, of Durant, Okla., and Earl Williams of Greensboro; three daughters, Mrs. T. F. Pickard and Miss Helen Williams of Greensboro, and Mrs. R. C. McCuiston of Philadelphia, Pa.; three sisters, Mrs. Elmira Garrett of Taylorsville, Mrs. R. S. Russell of High Point, and Mrs. G. F. Leonard of New Brunswick, N. J.; and one brother, Rev. J. S. Williams, of Asheville.

The funeral services were conducted in Calvary Methodist Protestant Church Saturday afternoon at 2:30, and interment was made in the Flat Rock cemetery, three miles north of Summerfield. The pastor of the church was assisted in the funeral by Rev. W. F. Kennett, Rev. A. G. Dixon, and Rev. B. K. Mason of the Asheboro Street Baptist church.

We have said that he was one of Calvary's very best members. He will be greatly missed by his church as well as by his children and other near relatives. He had been a member of Calvary church from its organization three years ago, coming from Grace church where he previously held his membership. He had also been treasurer of the church since its beginning, and served in this capacity most acceptably. Who will fill his place in the life of the church and in the Master's service? No one! Each of those left has his own place to fill. He filled his place and filled it well. And of him we can with confidence say,

"Servant of God, well done!
Thy glorious warfare's past;
The battle's fought, the race is won
And thou art crowned at last."

Our sympathy and prayers go out for the children and all the relatives who feel so keenly this great loss. His faith together with our faith holds out to us a hope that is most comforting to our hearts in this time of grief, the hope of seeing our loved ones again in the sweet bye and bye.

Phillips

We the committee and members of the quarterly conference of Greensville Circuit, Methodist Protestant church, North Carolina, convened at Ebenezer Methodist Protestant church, Saturday, July 23, 1927, passed the following resolutions in honor and esteem of one of our oldest members, John Phillips, whose faithfulness has no equal. He and his twin brother, James Phillips, sat in quarterly conference for more than forty years without a miss. In grateful rememberence and esteem we humbly bow to the Allwise Providence of a beneficent Father in heaven who decreed that it was enough and called our Brother to a seat with the saints in glory.

We love him and hold sacred in our memory the long and useful service rendered to our Master's Kingdom.

Therefore be it resolved that the quarterly conference of Greensville Circuit shall ever hold in loving memory these faithful men.

Resolved, second, that in this dispensation of Divine Providence we have lost a Christian brother, the wife a true husband, the children a loving father.

Especially, do we extend our deepest sympathy to the wife and children of the one who has bid earth good bye to enter an eternal abode with the saints in heaven.

Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to be recorded on the minutes of our quarterly conference, and a copy to be sent to our Methodist Protestant Herald for publication.

White

Funeral services for Mrs. Henry White were held from Mt. Lebanon church Monday, August 22nd. Mrs. White had been seriously ill for two weeks prior to her death. She united with Mt. Lebanon church many years ago and was regarded by all who knew her, as a godly Christian woman. Her companion, three sons and four daughters immediately survive.

The writer had charge of the final rites, assisted by Rev. Mr. Cox and Rev. Thos. Hodgin.

JUST BEYOND

When a storm is raging and the driving rain
Dashes down in hard, unceasing pour,
Beating in its fury on the window-pane,
While the wind is howling round the door,
What a consolation, when the black clouds hide
Every ray of sunlinght from our view,
That the sun is shining on the other side,
Maybe it will soon break through!

When a gale has broken on an angry sea,
Dashing, lashing, splashing up its spray,
Heavy mists surround and veil in mystery,
Fears of lurking dangers cause dismay,
What an inspiration, when the mists enshroud,
Shutting even sunlight from the view,
Just to think it's shining out beyond the cloud,
Maybe it will soon break through!

When a sea of sorrow surges round the heart,
Dashing waves of trouble o'er the way,
When a veil of sadness seems to hold apart
Joys which might have brightened up the day,
What a help to think, though trials may assail,
Darken and becloud the way, 'tis true,
Still the sun is shining just beyond the veil,
Maybe it will soon break through!

TO MISUNDERSTAND

So easy a thing in the complexities of life,
To be misunderstood, to be misunderstood,
The highest motives of the soul possessed,
Of truth and honor may seem withstood.

And it's just as easy as day by day,
To misunderstand heart's best intent,
It's just so easy to fail to see,
Life's purposes high with courage blent.

But time and God works out the way,
And opens the eyes that men may know,
That out of the divinest order of things,
Truth must live, must speak and grow.

Then give to us, Lord, as choicest of gifts,
The heart of faith to understand.
To understand, with thy guiding heart,
Showing the way thy love hath planned.

Help us to see with eyes of faith,
The shining lights around the way.
To guard and keep us strong and safe,
And bring thy peace from day to day.

Should All Confessions Be Held in Confidence?

This is a nice question in the sense that nice discrimination is necessary in answering it. The first impulse is to answer the question in the affirmative and enforce the answer with the view that the confession is voluntarily given, given in a spirit of penitence and with the desire to learn how to get right with God. If all this could be known to be true of every confession, it would seem that a broad affirmative answer would be correct. It is probably true in the majority of cases that confession of such crimes as murder is prompted by a desire to escape the pangs of a guilty conscience. This is not quite the same as to say that there is a desire to get right with God. Then it is possible for a murderer to confess his crime to a minister or priest as one means of helping to cover his crime. The minister is in a very close place who has received the confession of a murderer. But there is no question that it is wrong for a minister to assure a wrong-doer that his confession would be received confidentially and afterward divulge it. But even then the question remains whether his wrong is in promising not to tell or in telling. It is rash to promise absolutely to keep an unknown communication confidential. It may be one's urgent duty to tell it and one may learn the facts from others besides the one making confession.

Wayne B. Wheeler

The battle against alcohol in its century-long duration has called many different men to positions of leadership. These men have wrought well for a time, and then have fallen a prey to death, and it has seemed that the war would be lost because their places could not be filled. But God raised up other leaders and the fight has gone on victoriously. In recent years the most influential leader of the dry forces so far as the public mind could judge has been Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler. And now he has fallen a victim to disease. Just a few weeks ago the death of his wife and the consequent death of her father was reported. What a shock the report of Mr. Wheeler's death brings. How will the cause get on without him? We do not know, but doubtless other heroic and capable souls will be forthcoming and the battle will go on to final victory.

Mr. Wheeler was born in 1869. He was an Ohio man and was a graduate of Oberlin College. One of his assistants in the office of chief counsel for the Anti-Saloon League is our good brother, Ira Champion, a Methodist Protestant of Alabama.

Kicking Against the Pricks

When the ox feels the sharp point of the goad piercing his leg, he hopes to get rid of it by kicking back, and only drives it deeper into his flesh. It is a hard experience, the result of a foolish effort.

This represents a far wider range of human experience than Paul's. All the generations of men have had individuals who have resented and resisted the proddings of conscience. To Mother Eve Satan said, "Yea, hath God said, Thou shalt not?" Immediately she began to be restless under the limitation of a will other than her own. It matters not whether God says Thou shalt not, or Thou shalt; a protest is aroused in the hearts of the self-willed. When we say men wish to be free, we have stated only part of the truth. Some men wish to do as they please, regardless of the limitations of conscience. If they could only get rid of conscience they would be greatly received. Conscience pricks. Conscience torments. Some men seem to succeed in silencing their own consciences, and then they try to silence the consciences of others. They avoid hearing the deliverances of other men's consciences as far as possible. Then they try to counteract the testimony of other men's consciences. They charge that conscience is an individual affair, that one man's conscience does not bind another. They do not recognize the universal element in conscience, an element that represents the voice of God. Driven from that position they try to take refuge in atheism. They do away with conscience by doing away with God. They meet and loudly vote God out of existence, declare themselves atheists. They form associations with those like-minded with themselves. They try to arouse some boldness of spirit by putting on a bold face. They whistle and shout to keep their courage up. They write magazine articles and books and do their utmost to convince themselves that they have gotten rid of their tormentor.

But their success is like that of the foolish, recalcitrant ox. The prick is only thrust in more deeply and painfully.

The moral law presses down with irresistible force upon every human soul. There is nothing men can do to remove this pressure. We may assert our own puny wills against it; we may violate the prescriptions of that law and flatter ourselves for a time that nothing will come of it. But we realize our mistake in fearful after-experiences. We cannot kill God; we cannot even kill our own sensibilities. Outraged conscience, stunned for awhile, revives and springs to the most vigorous action. It drives the criminal to confession. It takes up against him a terrible accusation. His soul is a troubled sea that casteth up mire and dirt.

Men were not made to do as they please. They were made to do as God pleases. In doing as God pleases men find peace and joy and abiding happiness. When men try to ignore God and throw off the restraints His will would put upon them, they find life hard and harder until it results in the loss of all happiness. What a difference between glad submission to God and rebellion against God. One is Heaven, the other is Hell in the end.

—The secret of moral advance is to transform interest in one's self into interest in the kingdom of God.—B. H. Streeter.

NO SUCH BIBLE COMMENTARY

By Allen H. Godbey, Ph.D.
Professor of Old Testament, Duke University

I am occasionally asked for a good one-volume commentary upon the Old Testament; or an up-to-date Bible dictionary; or a historically adequate "History of Hebrew Religion." A little counter-inquiry of the seekers has usually compelled me to reply that there were no such books, nor could there be soon. For I found my questioners wishing something that fairly summed historical research and its influence upon Old Testament interpretation. From this viewpoint the material furnished by archaeology is too large and is increasing too rapidly to be so briefly and finally summarized. A sketch of some notable "finds" during the past thirty years will make this clearer to the popular reader.

Begin with the Hastings "Dictionary of the Bible" and the Cheyne-Black "Encyclopedia Biblica," published thirty years ago. I bought the Hastings book at once; four volumes quarto; over 36,000 pages. Within three years, I found Old Testament professors in our universities saying that not more than one-third the articles upon Old Testament topics in either work were really satisfactory. There was so much archaeological evidence that had not been seriously considered.

Now consider the additions made since. The University of Pennsylvania had just before recovered more than 30,000 tablets from Nippur (the "Calneh" of the rabbins). These reached from Persian times back to somewhere about 4,000 B. C. At that early time commerce with India was shown by the presence of teak-wood; and some American scholars have concluded that Nippur was founded as early as 10,000 B. C., and that this ancient religious center was equal in breadth and duration of influence to Babylon, Jerusalem, Mecca and Rome rolled into one! Yet this epochal discovery was not in time to be reflected in the "Bible Dictionaries." And there is not a word of Nippur's millenniums or curtural influence in the Old Testament. And only a minor part of these 30,000 tablets have yet been published; and the popular reader has not seen even these. But the scholar finds some originals of stories in Genesis.

Next, take "Shushan the Palace" of the Book of Esther. Of this ancient Elamite capital, and of the region about it, the Old Testament tells us simply nothing. We hear of "Elam" in a few prophet-passages; the reader may look them up, and see how little is told. But the cuneiform literature had already put before us a long struggle between the "Elamites" or "Highlanders" and the inhabitants of the Euphrates —Tigris lowlands. At various times the "Highlanders" had ruled the "Lowlands." Assurbanipal (Greek "Sardanapalus"), the last Assyrian conquest-king, overthrew Susa (Shushan) and records that he brought home the goddess Nana, whom the "Elamites" had carried off 1635 years before (about 2275 B. C.) But the Egyptologist tells us that Egypt shows artifacts of Elamite origin in very early Egyptian times. It is even possible that the original higher cultural impulse in the Nile valley came from an Elamite invasion. And reputable Egyptologists tell us that "Shishak" of 1 King 14:24 is the Egyptian Sheshon-ku, and that this name means "man of Shushan." That is, a Susian or Emamite dynasty is lord of Egypt and dictator of Palestine at the time. It may be true. Whether "Libyan" or "Elamite," our old Bible dictionaries and commentaries do not reflect this dominance of Palestine by a great culture.

But immediately after the appearance of "Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible," the French engineer, archaeologist and scholar, Jacques de Morgan, began the thorough excavation of the "Elamite" capital, Susa. He recovered a language "like no other language on earth," as some scholars have said; and art and culture that was not of Sumerian origin. He found tablets of an older script, or method of writing; earlier than the Sumerian. Little has been made of it so far. For convenience we may call it "Proto-Elamite." But all this, and its proven influence in Mesopotamia is not known to the popular reader, nor reflected in the Old Testament, nor in Bible dictionaries and commentaries.

Again, De Morgan recovered at Susa the famous "Code of Hammurabi" (Amurru-apil) already known to scholars from some tablets of the Sumerian original. An Elamite king, overthrowing the early Babylonian dynasty, had carried away this stele as a war-trophy. A considerable body of literature has resulted; not much of it known to the general reader. The present point is that in the nature of the case this factor in revolutionizing our notions of the ancient orient could not appear in the older Bible dictionaries and commentaries, and cannot be summarized in a few lines of a new "one volume" commentary. The thinking reader needs all of it.

Then three years ago scholars were astonished by discoveries in India. At Mohenjo-daro in the province of Scinde, in the alluvial plain of the Lower Indus, it was found that the old cities of historic India were, as in ancient Mesopotamia, built upon the sites of a different and far older culture. The same early civilization was found 400 miles northeast, in the Punjab, and at points between. Its earlier period belongs to the stone-bronze times. At Mohenjo-daro there proved to be ten ancient cities, one above another. Taking the progress in culture also, we see a period of 2,000 years or more represented by these ten successive cities. And the Aryan invasion that produced Brahmanism, and displaced this older culture, came about 1200 B. C. So we find a highly developed art and script and architecture in India between 3000 and 4000 B. C. Expeditions sent to Nal, in Beluchistan, and into the adjacent seistan, Southeast Persia, have discovered remnants of the same culture. The older art is very like that of the ancient Sumerians of Mesopotamia. The pictograph script seems to use some of the same characters. So, for the present, we are calling it "Indo-Sumerian," or "Indo-Elamite." The oldest strata show the closest resemblance to the Sumerian. Now, the excavations now going on at Kish, in the Euphratean alluvium, have recovered an Indo-Sumerian seal; and the excavations at Mohenjo-daro have recovered a silver coin (?) inscribed in cuneiform characters (of the Hammurabi epoch?). Compare these facts with the evidence of commerce with India 4000 B. C. found at Nippur more than thirty years ago. We have evidence of a fairly homogeneous type of culture from the Lower Euphrates to the Indus regions, several thousand years ago. Who were these people? Did the culture of the lower Euphrates come from the valley of the Indus? Or did it spread from the Euphrates to the Indus? The explorers tell us that the Indo-Sumerian did not build the "temple-towers" of the Euphrates valley, nor massive stone structures like the Egyptian, but that the precision, elegance and comfort of the homes of the private citizens are beyond anything found in Egypt or Mesopotamia of that age. The faces shown resemble the Sumerian in the sloping forehead, prominent noses, shaven faces or heads. Their streets had carefully built sewers of brick, such as the Near East does not show. So the historian finds a new query before him, relative to the age, origin, and originality of the culture of the ancient Euphrates-Tigres lowlands. And no dictionary of the Bible or commentary can yet reflect this "compulsory increase" of our knowledge of the ancient world.

One further illustration. In a previous article I pointed out that the Old Testament told us nothing about the Hittites, but that we now knew something. Egyptian and Assyrian inscriptions had told us of furious struggles for empire with the Hittites. That much got into the "Bible dictionaries" of thirty years ago. But fourteen years later excavations at Boghazkewi ("Boghaz-town") in the great province of "Cappadocia" of Graeco-Roman times, revealed it as a chief city of the great Hittite confederation. Dr. Hugo Winckler recovered there over 11,000 tablets. Some of them were fragments of grammars and dictionaries, in cuneiform characters, giving the Hittite equivalent for Assyrian or Sumerian words. Some were Hittite laws and religious texts, written in cuneiform characters. Some were translations into Hittite language of ancient cuneiform lore. A mistake of theirs gave us the "great Square of Pegasus" in astronomy. The Babylonian constellation of "The Field, E-ku-e, they mistook for the vocative case of their own word e-ku-as, "horse" (the Latin equus.) So "the Field constellation" of the Euphratean region became the "Horse" of the Mediterranean world. It is impossible to do more than hint the main facts here. Only a small proportion of the immense body of inscriptions has been read. Others have been found at other sites. We are just beginning. The University of Chicago sent a reconnoitering expedition last season into "Cappadocia" and finds the whole west of it dotted with ruins of Hittite origin. We have found that the Hittites were a Mongolian people, who had accepted somewhere an Indo-European language and culture, retaining some Mongolian words and peculiarities. Our immediate point is that all this has come to light since our last Bible dictionaries and commentaries. They are out of date. And the results of our new knowledge will never be summed up in a few lines of a one-volume Bible commentary. We will have monographs on special topics.

These cases are but illustrative. It would take an issue of this paper merely to adequately catalogue all that has come to light in the past thirty years. They force upon the historical student an intellectual revolution. It is not a matter of theoretical literary analysis of Old Testament books. It is a matter of tens of thousands of ancient records, undreamed of by commentators a generation or two ago. We need a large popularization, in our religious press, of what can be reliably determined by this in our knowledge, from time to time. We need to remember, as petty minds do not, that our best knowledge is but relatively full any time, and that the fullest information we have this year will be supplemented by larger information next year. A score of important expeditions from America were in the field last season, and the casual reader does not know their results. Some who read this may not have heard of the expeditions.

And one other great need is that of patient and careful young scholars. Many thousand of records recovered still lie unread, and young students who would like to add something to our knowledge of the secular and religious history of the ancient world have a great field open to them. They need not think a Semitic professorship essential to good work in such field. Much scholarly work in various fields has been done by pastors in their "recreation" periods. A brilliant Irish clergyman, Edward Hincks, was one of the four who first desciphered the cuneiform inscriptions. There have been many scholars whose daily "bread and butter" job was not the one of their scholarly achievements. There will be many more.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

WHAT THE WORLD NEEDS, NOW AND ALWAYS

By Rev. Luther K. Long

Disarmament and peace come slowly and with difficulty. Representatives of only three nations sat together in the recent Naval Limitations conferences, and these were not well agreed nor did they make much progress. But bombing-planes, and other air-craft means of destruction, are being developed at such a rate that they will, in all probability, render battleships and cruisers of little consequence in another world war.

This old world is still suffering from wounds and bruises, from hatreds and jealousies—the accompaniments and consequences of the World War. Civilization is still torn and weakened by division and strife—the whole head is sick and the whole heart faint.

Additional war and blood-shed will not cure the world's ills. Large doles of food and clothing have temporarily met the pressing necessities of distressed populations. Great gifts and loans of money have aided improverished nations to rehabilitate their war-desolated areas—while their own revenues have been largely devoted to maintaining and strengthening their military establishments. None of these agencies alone, nor all of them together, can guarantee the development of a real international brotherhood—the thing for which we pray.

What the world needs is a multitude of strong, gentle, friendly hands inspired by the compassionate heart of God to work for it, to discipline it, to be laid in tenderness upon its aching head, and to bind up and apply healing ointment to its grievous wounds.

There are many men and women in all the nations who possess helping, healing hands and the sort of hearts that fittingly go with such hands. These good people are discovering each other and are gradualy getting together.

The League of Nations is doing much; though it will never fully meet the expectations of its promoters, and may be superceded by another organization standing definitely for the outlawing of war. The churches of Christ, through the exchange of ministers and lecturers of the different nations—as well as by means of the constant teaching of their people to observe whatsoever the Master has commanded them—are doing valuable service. Educational institutions, because of the mingling of students and teachers without regard to inter-national boundaries, are an increasing power for good. These, and other inter-national organizations and agencies for the promotion of acquaintance and friendship, are uniting the hearts and hands of people of good will everywhere and directing them in the service of mankind.

By such means as these is this old world of ours becoming a new world. In increasing measure righteousness, peace, and good fellowship are dwelling here.

PLEASURE GUIDED BY CONSECRATION

"Now in all seriousness, we've never known a spiritual person to be a dancer, nor want to dance. We've never known a dancer to be a soul-winner, nor have any salutary influence over the unsaved"—quoted from Brother Dosier's article on "Supervising the Dance." Would that there were more preachers unafraid to hit sin in the face! People are afraid to touch such unpopular subjects, for when they come out in a fully consecrated life they are fanatics, of course. Twenty-five years ago, dancing and card playing were considered by Christian people as some of the outstanding sins and those of us reared in orthodox Methodist homes were so taught, but I remember a visitor threw this statement in regard to card playing at my mother: "Oh, I would not be so backwoodsy, cards are made of the same thing the Bible is made of, and they help you to remember the Sunday school lesson," I would never go to this person for spiritual help, but the backwoodsy idea continued and there has never been a game of cards nor a dance in Ed Harris' home and notwithstanding this tragedy (?) one of our leading ministers said, "Brother Harris, I believe you have the happiest home I ever saw." Excuse a bit of personal matters.

I have long ago decided that there is no good in saying, "Don't do this and that," but teach peope to enthrone the Holy Spirit in the heart and see the results. "We've never known a spiritual person to be a dancer, nor want to dance" —I remember once in speaking of a "spiritual person" a lady who did active church work asked me what I meant, and she had dances and card parties in her home! Another church worker asked, "What do you mean by a Christian experience?" People are just starving for what God has for them and as Mr. Dosier says, they are blind. I really think a lack of Bible study causes these things. The Spirit interprets scripture to the willing mind and heart and the promises are to those who "abide in the Word." Since I have been teaching a class of forty-five women in a Methodist Episcopal Sunday school in Raleigh, I see how negligent people are to Bible reading, and when I quote, "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me," trying to show that such a heart can only say, "Lord, have mercy upon me a sinner," they look upon it as foreign language and I have to say "It is Bible teaching." When we come to real results in prayer, it goes back to "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you" and yet, the average intelligent (?) class of ladies knows little about these real experiences, but judging by the knee dresses, the lip-stick and paint and the reports in the society columns, they are well versed on things which tend to kill spirituality. The quotation at the beginning, to my mind, is entirely true—of course those who make such statements are "cranks" in this day. You know there is a persecution for righteousness' sake.

I believe there are many who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior, dancing the modern dance, and those who are under His blood will not be eternally punished for what they do or don't do, but I do know there is a real spiritual experience that they can never reach until they give up outstanding worldliness, and the preacher who does not come out in clean-cut denunciation of such cannot help me. I have great respect for the ministry but I am tired of sinners talking about Mr. So and So's questionable life, "and he is a preacher." Personally, it does not shake my faith, for "I know whom I have believed" and I'm never going to turn back.

Paul tells of babes in Christ. I once saw a cartoon in the Sunday School Times of an old man with long gray whiskers riding in a baby carriage with a milk bottle in his hand, still a babe when he could have been feeding upon meat, thereby developing a strong body through victory in Christ. I see a great difference in the nominal card playing, dancing Christian and the one fully surrendered and living the victorious life. Which is the happier? There is no happiness like the witness of the Spirit and the comfort of having a Friend, personal Friend as an abiding Companion—"And He walks with me and He talks with me and He tells me I am His own."

After all, our church leaders in general are not feeding the flock in order that deep spirituality may exist and the "modern dance" and present day evils vanish. Many well meaning people are doing the best they can with the light they have. We don't always have a "Thus saith the Lord" sermon and Sunday school lesson to inspire thirsty souls to search the scriptures, and they go off to the swimming pool almost nude (swimming is indeed wholesome peasure, but an article in today's paper tells of swimmers going entirely nude) and to the many questionable amusements because there is an innate desire for pleasure, when if they could taste of it in the light of God's word His kingdom would be advanced and His coming would draw near and sin would vanish. May that day hasten!

Well, Brother Dosier, of course people who think this way are "off the track" and backwoodsy, but "I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." I wish to sanction the splendid article in the last Herald on our schools and colleges. I know that evolution that teaches "We know that all plant and animal life comes from bacteria" (as I heard "with mine own ears" here at the A. & E. College) and modernism are contradictory to what our great Methodist church was founded upon and such things bring us back again to a real lack of feeding upon the Word, with a willing and prayerful heart. "Study to show thysef approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth." HATTIE HARRIS PERKINS.

A New Wonder of Antiquity

Many wonderful things have been reported to us from the ancient world, proving to us an advanced state of knowledge among the ancients, but we believe this will be new to many. There has been a world's poultry congress recently in Canada, and among the exhibits was an incubator of a type used in Egypt nearly 6,000 years ago. The American Poultry Journal has this to say about it:

"A full sized model of the type of incubators used 4,000 years before Christ was on exhibit at the Egyptian booth. This was one of the most interesting exhibits and attracted hundreds of people. This incubator is 9x16 feet and 12 feet high. It holds 6,000 eggs of which 70 to 75 per cent will hatch. One bushel basket of straw is the only fuel required for one hatch. The total cost of hatching 6,000 eggs is $2.10 and the chicks sell for $2.25 per 100. One man devotes his entire time to such an incubator, often spending as much as 15 hours a day in it, changing the eggs around and helping the chicks out of the shell. As soon as the eggs pip, the attendant helps the chicks out."

We can still learn much from the people of long ago.

NOTICE TO PASTORS

Return postal cards for Delegates' Credentials will probably be in your hands before this appears in print. If you do not receive a card it will be because I do not have your correct address. Please write me and I will send you another.

Let me urge you to return the cards promptly for the following very obvious reasons: 1. So the President can make out his committee lists; 2. So the Secretary can make up the Conference Roll; 3. So the Entertainment Committee of the Conference Church can get assignments for homes; 4. So you will have discharged your duty, and carried out the Election Law. (See Minutes 1926, page 119).

I have to write some of the brethren three and four times to get their delegates' names. Some wait, I suspect, because they are not sure the delegate-elect will go. The fourth quarterly conference will elect the alternate. You are to certify the delegate-elect.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

India—Vacation

The necessary vacation period for our missionaries in India comes in the second quarter of the year including largely the months of April and May. This vacation is necessary because of the extremely hot weather prevailing during these months in Dhulia. The mountain sections for our missionaries must be sought during this hot period. But despite the short time in which to work during the quarter the reports show that worth-while results have been accomplished.

Evangelism

At a meeting of all the workers of the Evangelistic Department of the Men's work the number of villages in each section to be visited in daily preaching tours was determined; the possibility of opening up three new sections where preachers are needed was discussed; a retreat for the native pastors to be held sometime during the rainy season was considered, with definite plans for same to be formed later; plans for a monthly meeting, at which time reports would be received, problems discussed, and possibly a study course inaugurated, were laid; and there was a discussion of some arrangement whereby the financial problem of the department might be settled without having to cut down our activities.

It will be seen, at once, that all of the suggested plans are in the direction of advance. It is interesting to know how the last named was accomplished. Let Mr. Cassen himself tell us. "A most important result of this meeting was the response the men made to the appeal for a solution of our financial difficulties. I had had great hopes that the Union Board would see fit to grant the new budget," (which was an increase over last year's budget and, because of lack of funds, could not be granted) "but when the decision came, something had to be done. The men came to the meeting with the request that their salaries be raised but they went away with what actually amounted to a cut. I placed all the figures before them, showing them the amount of money received, and the amount being expended at the present time. When we had figured it all up we were about forty-four rupees (about $16.00) short. I suggested that all of the workers pay into the Department one-tenth of their salaries and that I would make up the difference, to bring the sum up to forty-four rupees. After consideration, they agreed to pay tithes to the work. The tithes of the workers amount to about twenty-eight rupees per month and we contribute seventeen rupees, which brings the amount up to forty-five rupees per month." This shows a mighty fine spirit and the willingness of both the native workers and our missionaries to do the big and Christlike things to make the work go. This ought to be a great incentive for us to get back of the work and place more of our tithes into this great enterprise.

During the quarter 10,642 people were reached with the gospel message. What the results of this gospel message upon so large a number of people will be no one can estimate for God's Word will not return unto him void. The seed has been sown and the harvest, in due season, will be garnered with large fruitage.

In Vinchur, one of our most promising fields, Mr. and Mrs. Hiwale have recently been stationed and excellent work is expected from them. The work at Khed has shown a marked improvement during the quarter. The workers at Arvi report that there are six or seven persons ready for baptism. The reports says, "It looks as if we are getting a start toward our Christian communities over the district. We are greatly in need of trained workers and we are trying to fill the need.

In my next article I have some good news concerning the school work in India.

SAYING GOOD-BYE TO GOD

In the charge made against Job before Jehovah in which Satan said, "Put forth thy hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will renounce thee forever," the Hebrew word translated "renounce" means saying "good-bye." The sneer of the Accuser is that Job when he has to say good-bye to his property will also say good-bye to God. There are many ways in which we may do this same thing.

Under the Seduction of a Worldly Life

Of all the multitudes that practically part company with God, comparatively few are decisively influenced either by intellectual theories or by hard circumstances. The subtle seductions of worldly desires and a worldly life are more powerful. The money-making spirit, the ambition for place and social distinction and pleasure, the determination to get on in the world and possess and enjoy its good things, deeply permeate all the motives and disposition and come to rule the life. As these lower cravings and aims grow dominant and masterful they crowd out the higher visions of life and leave the spirit to starve. In such a worldly atmosphere the soul withers and God is not welcome. The spirit sinks into the flesh, the next world fades from view, and life is lost in the thought of what we shall eat and drink and wherewithal shall we be clothed. When we are absorbed in such pursuits and passions we have no interest in God, the very thought of Him may become distasteful and repellent to us, and, however we may outwardly retain our traditional belief and even go to church, we have really said good-bye to God and gone out from His presence.

The Return to God

But can man say farewell to God and leave Him never to return? It is possible but hard for him to do so; and he will find sooner or later that he cannot get along without Him. Our intellectual theories that dismiss a personal God run into logical difficulties greater than those they are trying to escape and we often return to Him, though it may be under a changed conception or name. The agnostic talks to us of an Unknowable Power and forthwith begins to disclose a vast amount of knowledge that makes this Unknowable Power not greatly different from a knowable God.

Hardships do not always or usually drive men away from God, but often draw them closer to Him. Job did not bid good-bye to God under his sore distress, as Satan said he would, but clung to Him with the masterful and sublime faith which declared, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." "Thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress," cried David, his faith growing stronger in his trouble, his gain increasing with his loss. Paul counted his loss for gain, and the martyrs did not lose but won more faith in the flames. Distress drives us to God, because then we feel our need of Him most deeply and fall in our dependence and childlike trust into His everlasting Arm and nestle close to His loving Heart.

We cannot finally bid good-bye to God, because in Him we live and move and have our being. "O God, thou hast made us for thyself, and we cannot rest until we rest in thee." The father must have the child, and the child the father, and this deep and tender and indestructible bond of affinity binds us to God. The Father will never say good-bye to us, and we can never say good-bye to Him without finding ourselves children crying in the night. God has planted eternity in our heart, making us in His own image, and we gravitate to Him and depend on Him as the needle to its pole, as the planet on the sun. If we have ever said good-bye to God in thought or under the pressure of hard circumstances or the influence of a worldly life, we should realize the true nature and consequences of our choice and act and return to our Father, who will welcome and restore us to His loving kindness, which is better than life.—Presbyterian Banner.

THE DIVINE PRESENCE IN THE WORLD

The most comforting truth of all is found in the assurance that the Christ is still abroad in this world, and that the testimony of his divine achievements is still the most convincing evidence of his mission as the world's Saviour. Yea, Jesus is still the miracle-worker! The physical miracles of long ago have given way to greater spiritual wonders. If we are still carnal and political in our views of the kingdom of God, like the old Jews; if we still require signs and symbols; if we want a Messiah for nothing more than to break down visible prison-walls, like John the Baptist—then to us the age of miracles is indeed forever past. The Master is not here to heal outwardly, in answer to every human cry, nor is he silencing troubled waters with audible voice. But is not human intercourse all the more perfect since the world has substituted the wireless telegraph for the ancient messenger? The Saviour is all the more truly present today than ever before; present in the pervading and determining influence of his omnipotent love; present in the person of the Holy Spirit; and he is therefore doing greater miracles than even in his earthly ministry.

What healings, what transformations he has wrought in this world since first he began to go about doing good! The greatest miracle of all is the miracle of regeneration; the miracle which gives to man the new heart out of which to send forth the springs of new life. And the regenerate heart, let us remember, is the essential preparation for the testimony of achievement in our own province of Christian duty. "Not every one that sayeth unto me 'Lord, Lord'; but he that doeth the will of my Father!" That is the final standard of efficiency! That is the testimony of achievement!—Methodist Recorder.

—Let us cultivate charity in judging. Let us seek to draw out latent good in others rather than to discover hidden evil.—William George Jordan.

CHRISTIAN MYSTICISM

(From an address by Bishop Francis J. McConnell of Pittsburgh, Pa., delivered before the World Conference on Faith and Order, at Lausanne, Switzerland, August 4, 1927.)

Christian mysticism at its best appears to be that keen awareness of divine realities which comes out of persistent doing of the divine will—it is the awareness of the practiced soul. Just as the training of any faculty brings at last to that faculty a directness of perception and of execution which seems altogether mysterious to an uninstructed onlooker, so constant exercise of the whole life in righteousness brings an awareness of spiritual values, keener than eyesight, swifter than formal reasoning, and more instantaneous than deliberate resolution. Obedience leads to spiritual adjustment, and out of the adjustment arise those moral insights which are the test of Christianity—and obedience is possible to all men.

We are not quite through with mysticism, however. The mystics have perhaps too often and too readily assumed that what they call the direct gaze upon God, or direct communion with God, is the essential. If mysticism is communion in friendship, we may well ask whether communion is at its noblest in such direct gaze. Does not friendship, as we know it, come to its finest as each party to the friendship loses himself in a cause to which both are devoted? What is better, to look directly at God, or at the objects to which God is devoted? If we could but learn the object of the divine thought, the sure road to friendship would necessarily be the contemplation of that object. Now, the Christ-revelation leaves us in no doubt as to the object of divine contemplation and effort, namely, a race of men, an organized humanity, redeemed into likeness to Christ. If by some ineffable transport of emotion we could be swept up into a vision of all things in God, the surest testimony that we had actually been with God would be that we had not only seen God more clearly, but had seen the object of His thought and love more clearly. In the friendships which mean most, each party to the friendship finds the other most completely in losing himself in the purpose to which that other is giving himself. So that there is a world of significance for friendship with the divine in the organic bond which links together in Jesus' word the second commandment with the first as "like unto the first." In service for men we attain to the vision of God. We see God by looking in the direction in which God fixes His gaze. We meet Him at the far end of His sweep of vision. The door of service is open to all men.—New York Christian Advocate.

CHRIST THE HEART AND CENTER OF THE SERMON

All genuine evangelical preachers have the Christ—to offer to the people. Francis of Assisi carolled His message through the Italy of his day; he did not preach an elaborate theology, or demand pilgrimages and long penances; he had Someone whom he could offer to the broken-hearted and to the lost. The same is true of Luther—for justification by faith means, Christ is here with all His saving and healing grace—accept, take, receive Him. This was the message of all the great leaders of the evangelical revival—of John Nelson, of Whitfield, of John Newton. This theme is the very heart and center of his message, at Olney, and at Saint Mary Woolnoth, he offered Christ to the people.

The only hope for a conquering evangelicalism is a new awareness of Jesus, a vivid apprehension of His love and saving grace. In many ways we are better trained than our fathers, the blessings of education are close at hand for us all; but the heart of the gospel is not in the refinements of the schools, but in the response of the heart to the love of Jesus. The artist has something to offer—for he dreams and paints—and he fixes his dream forever on the canvas, he offers to us beauty. The musician listens to the heavenly harmonies and writes down the "score" of his music—and offers to us song. The poet waits and ponders, catches fire, and offers to us—

> "Magic casements opening on the foam
> Of Perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn."

He bids us lean through these casements, and gaze—then he offers to us vision. No one is fulfilling life truly unless he has something to offer. The mother offers love, the teacher knowledge, the true evangelical preacher offers—"grace" and Christ.

It is by this way that new and great triumphs will be won. But we can only preach thus when we thrill with joy because of our living experience of Christ's presence, when our hearts are strangely warmed, and when we can, out of full hearts, realize that our experience is—

> Thou, O Christ, art all I want,
> More than all in Thee I find.

FAITH AND SERVICE

"The popular impression that nothing important can happen in human life without the human will being at the bottom of it is an illusion as complete as the old view that the universe revolved about our planet."

So says a professor of social science. Christian Work, commenting on his utterance, says that "the newer humanism which reduces religion to sociology and loses the transcendent in the immanent God is folly."

This is true and timely. Social service is the fruit of the tree of life. Apart from the tree it may keep its qualities for a little time. Many zealous reformers are buoyed up by the faith and instruction of their fathers and mothers. They are running on the fuel of past generations.

So long as the religion of the Bible has its hold on men they will show their faith by their works; but when they give up their faith and substitute humanistic reforms for regeneration, their works will dwindle to the vanishing point.

There is no contrast between faith and service. The Church has always sought human betterment. Converted men and women have been the backbone of every social reform. Heathenism is not concerned as to the rights and comfort or happiness of mankind, and the attempt to contrast faith and humanistic reform is a reversion to heathenism.—Herald and Presbyter.

THINGS SEEN

A little girl in an orphanage received a present from me one day. I wrote her a letter and sent her some money, two pounds (ten dollars) for her bank account. When I next saw her I said, "I have put two pounds into your banking account and if you have any small sums of money you can put them in too." She said, "Oh," in the most unconcerned way. I could see that she was not at all appreciative. A little later I thought I would make her another visit. This time I brought her a little needle case worth about half a dollar. She went into raptures about it. "Oh, what a lovely needle case! and all those colored silks!" She was pleased with the half dollar's worth that she could touch, but she was not pleased with the ten dollars' worth of which she could not see. That is just like us. We are ever so pleased with what we can touch and handle, and those things are not anything in comparison with what we cannot see but have to take by faith. God is offering you the gift of everlasting life and the Lord Jesus.—Howard Carter.

LITTLE "WILL TRY"

Little Jane was sitting on the floor, playing with her blocks.

"Jane," said Mother, "It is time for supper. Pick up your blocks, and put them in your play-box."

"I tan't," said little Jane.

"Oh, yes you can," said Mother. "You are getting to be a big girl now. You can pick up your blocks just as easily as anything."

But Jane shook her curly head and said, "No, Muvver, I tan't."

"Then, come help Mother pick up the blocks," said Mother. "See if you can pick up more than Mother does."

Jane picked up the blocks as fast as ever she could.

"There, you see you can pick up your blocks," said Mother.

"No, I tan't, all by myself," said Jane.

After supper, Daddy said, "I wonder if there's any little girl around here who can get Daddy's slippers for him."

Jane looked up from her picture-book and said, "I tan't, Daddy."

"Oh, yes, you can," said Daddy. "Suppose you try."

"No, Daddy, I tan't," said Jane.

Big sister Helen said, "I'll get your slippers, Daddy."

"All right," said Daddy, "for little Jane can't."

"That's a good name for her," said Mother, "Little Jane Can't."

"Oh, no," said Daddy. "That's not a good name; that's a bad name. I shouldn't want my name to be Little Jane Can't."

"Yes, that is my name," said little Jane, " 'cause I tan't do fings."

"All right," said Mother. "We will call you Little Jane Can't."

The next day little Jane and Mother went to see dear Grandmother. After Grandmother had kissed little Jane and Mother, she said, "Jane, please close the door for Grandmother."

"I tan't," said Jane.

"You can't?" asked Grandmother.

"No, I tan't," said little Jane.

Mother said, "You see, Grandmother, this is Little Jane Can't who has come to see you today."

"Oh," said Grandmother. "I thought it was my dear little Jane."

"I am your dear little Jane," said Jane, and she ran to Grandmother.

"If you are my dear little Jane," said Grandmother, "you are not going to be Little Jane Can't. Now, run and close the door for Grandmother, and be her dear little Jane again."

"But I tan't, Grandmuvver. Don't you see I tan't?" said Jane.

"Could you close the door if someone would help you, Jane?" asked Grandmother.

"Of tourse I tould," said Jane. "You help me, Grandmuvver."

"No," said Grandmother, "I know a better way," and she took little Jane up on her lap.

"There is a little fairy who stays around all the time, waiting to help little girls do things their mothers and daddies and grandmothers ask them to do."

"Where is the faiwy?" asked Jane, as she looked all around. "I don't see him."

"You can't see this little fairy," said Grandmother, "but he will come to help you if you call him."

"What's his name?" asked Jane.

"His name's Will Try," said Grandmother, "and here is the way you have to call him every time. You must shut your eyes, and say:

"Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I can do it if I try."

Jane shut her eyes tight, and said:

"Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I tan do it if I twy."

"That is right," said Grandmother. "Now I wonder if you can close that door."

Jane jumped down off Grandmother's lap, and ran to the door, and shut her eyes, and said:

"Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I tan do it if I twy."

And she gave the door a big push, and, bang, it went shut.

"I did it! I did it!" cried Jane, as she ran back to Grandmother. "Will Twy and I did it, Grandmuvver, didn't we?"

"Of course you did," said Grandmother, and "Will Try and you can do it every time, if you don't forget to ask him."

"I won't fordet," said Jane.

When Mother and Jane went home from Grandmother's, Jane took her blocks out of her play-box, and played with them until Mother said, "Jane, there comes Daddy. Pick up your blocks and get ready for supper."

"I tan't," said Jane. "Oh, I fordot," and she shut her eyes and said:

"Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I tan do it if I twy."

And she picked up her blocks as fast as ever she could.

After supper, Daddy said, "I wonder if little Jane Can't is going to get Daddy's slippers for him tonight."

"My name's not little Jane Tan't," said Jane.

"It isn't?" said Daddy. "What is it, then?"

"I'll show you fwat my name is," said Jane, and she shut her eyes and said:

"Me-o, me-o, me-o my,
I tan do it if I twy."

And away she ran, and came back in a minute with one of Daddy's slippers in each hand.

"Well, well, well!" said Daddy. "I should say your name isn't little Jane Can't. Why, your name's little Jane Try, isn't it?"

"Uh-huh," said Jane, "my name's little Jane Twy, and my little faiwy's name is little Will Twy."

"You must be little brother and sister Try," said Daddy. "That's a fine family."—Selected.

THE BEAR THAT RAN AWAY

"Oh! It's getting so dark, Ted! I wish we were home!"

"Well, there's nothing here to hurt us. But let's hurry, Sue, and we'll get home in time for supper."

"I'm too tired to hurry. Oh, Ted, I wish we hadn't fastened our sled to Mr. Smith's bobsled. It seems hours since we untied the rope and started to walk back home."

"We'll take this short cut through the woods. I wish I could pull you on the sled, but there's too much brush.

"I'm so tired, Ted, that I'll just have to rest."

"It will soon be really dark and we ought to keep on. But if you're so tired, lie down on the sled and I'll cover you with my sweater."

After a few moments, Ted was shivering with cold and said, "Can't you go on now? I'll leave the sled here for I can't pull it through the brush. I'll get it tomorrow."

Again they started, but found it hard going on account of the thick underbrush. After a time, in the growing darkness, Ted stumbled against something, and was surprised to find it was the sled. He knew, then, that they were lost, and had been walking in a circle, as people often do when lost in a forest. He did not want to frightened Sue still further, so he said: "I think we'd better stay right here and rest. Some one will come and get us before long."

"Stay here! In these dark woods!" wailed Sue.

"Don't cry! I know we're not far from home, but I can't see the path. You lie down again, and I'll cover you up warm."

Sue was so tired that in a few moments she was asleep. Ted wished he had not coaxed her to try a ride behind Farmer Smith's bobsled. No one at home had seen them start, so would not know where to search for them.

The wood was full of noises, astir with life. "Just squirrels and rabbits!" Ted told himself. It grew colder, and he jumped up and down and clapped his hands to warm them.

As the moon shone dimly among the trees, Ted snuggling close to Sue, felt himself going to sleep. Then he heard a crackling of bushes, and in a cleared space a few yards away, he saw a great shaggy animal with a swaying, hanging head. "A bear!" he thought, and his heart beat wildly. In great fear, he gave a shout that startled the still woods. Instantly the bear rose on his hind legs and moved around as if he were dancing, but soon dropped to all fours and shuffled quickly away among the trees. Sue had not wakened at Ted's shout.

After a time, in spite of his fear, Ted fell asleep and did not waken until the shouts of searchers roused him. His first words were: "I saw a bear, dad! But he didn't see us."

"A bear! You were dreaming. There's been no bear in these woods for fifty years."

"I wasn't dreaming!" Ted insisted.

After leaving the woods, they met several strange men, and one asked: "Have you seen a bear about here? A trained one escaped from his keeper in Brent, and we've seen his tracks leading this way."

"Dad! Did you hear?"

"Yes, Ted, it must have been a real bear, not a dream one."

"And a trained one! When I shouted, he must have thought he was ordered to dance. But, anyway, I'm glad he didn't find us. Would you have liked his company, Sue, if you had wakened to see him dance?"—Selected.

THE JOY OF SERVICE

For the things which need to be borne, for the great, courageous things which need to be done, our souls need that glorious spirit which will not suffer any experience to pass until all the fullness of its meaning has been learned, and all the width of its opportunity made use of. "Life," said Dr. Grenfell, "is to me very beautiful. Life is a thousand times worth while." He wrote this while the little hospital ship upon which he went on his far errands of mercy lay in the shadow of the terrific cliffs of Labrador. He wrote it with facts of suffering and poverty vivid in his knowledge—desperate battling of fisher fleets with the sea, hunger and cold and shipwreck on that forbidding coast, and always the ominous prospect of want and starvation in the winter.—Walter Russell Bowie.

WHO WAS THE COWARD?

I was sitting in the second story of the house, with the windows open, when I heard shouts of children from beneath me.

"Oh, yes, so we will! Come on, now! Here is William Hall! Come on, William! We are going to have a ride on the road. Come, go with us!"

"Yes, if mother is willing. I will run and ask her," replied William.

"Oh, oh! So you must run and ask your ma! Great baby, run along and ask your ma! Aren't you ashamed? I didn't ask my mother." "Nor I;" "Nor I," added half a dozen voices.

"Be a man, William," cried the first voice. "Come along with us, if you don't want to be called a coward as long as you live. Don't you see we're all waiting?"

I leaned forward to catch a view of the children, and saw Will standing with one foot advanced, and his hand firmly clenched, in the midst of the group. His flushed brow, flashing eye, compressed lip, and changing cheek, all told how the word "coward" was rankling in his breast.

"Will he prove himself indeed one by yielding to them?" thought I. It was with breathless interest I listened for his answer; for I feared that the evil principle within his heart was stronger than the good. But no—"I will not go without I ask my mother," said the noble boy, his voice trembling with emotion, "and I'm no coward, either. I promised her I would not go from the house without permission, and I should be a base coward if I were to tell her a wicked lie."

There was something in his resolute tone. It was the power of a strong soul over the weak; and his companions all at once quietly yielded him the just tribute of respect.—Lily of the Valley.

THE QUEST

Be this day thy radiant goal,
Found in love's chief intent;
To claim some kindred soul
As friend—so mould its bent.

Then multiply the quest:
All flesh as spirit see:
Cleanse sense with motive blest —
Love men exultantly.

But why this task so bold?
Why trust that honor lifts?
Or think that virtues hold—
And take fresh wounds for gifts?

Real worth, faith-child, make sure;
For spirit's leap despoils
Though passions subtly lure—
Look! conquered flesh recoils.

Full trust is true restraint;
My soul in thine, sense-free:
Love masters all complaint—
Friendship's eternity!

Give all myself—love's goal—
To feed the spirit's flame!
Till flesh, as templed soul,
Shall praise His Holy Name.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Second M. P. Church, Charlotte.—We had a good day Sunday; Brother Furr delivered two fine sermons.

The Christian Endeavorers gave a wienie roast Thursday evening, September 1. Had a nice time and it was attended by a large crowd.

Our tent meeting will begin the second Sunday of September, on our new lot, corner of Plaza and Hickory Grove road.

We have put on a building campaign in our church and we wish to ask the special attention of the people at large. We have a fine location for a Second M. P. church in Charlotte. But, friends, you realize we must have help, as our membership is not so very large. Anything you feel like giving will be greatly appreciated by the church, as we are very anxious to complete this church, because it is very badly needed. Anything that you wish to give can be sent toMrs. Myrtle Brown, the secretary, Charlotte, N. C., Route 8, or G. W. Stegall, the treasurer, Charlotte, N. C., Route 9, Box 173.

You are cordially invited to attend our tent meeting. REPORTER.

Anderson.—The pastor has visited each church once since the close of the revivals and the work is going very well. The attendance is off somewhat, which is very usual in the rural churches. We are going to be able to go to the Annual Conference with the best report that this pastor has ever been privileged to carry. I am pleased very much with the work in many ways, yet it has not been what it could, nor what we had hoped for. We are sure our Annual Conference Budget will be paid in full and are yet unable to say just what others, but are counting on more than just the A. C. B. in full. These are encouraging facts and we are indeed glad that we feel confident of other things that will be beneficial to the Kingdom progress.

I am writing this report at 7:45; I suspect while a good many preachers that preached twice yesterday, attended Sunday school and took a part in the Christian Endeavor are still in bed. However after doing that and traveling from Easley, S. C., to Greenville I have had the privilege of something that no other pastor has ever had.

Today marks a time in the history of many of us that we are proud of. At six o'clock this a.m. two of our young ladies boarded the train for High Point College. Miss Emma Lee Poole of Greenville, S. C., and Miss Fanny Net Freeman, of Easley, S. C., both members of Fairview church. They will enter the Freshman class at our College and both are promising young people. We wish for them success and happiness as they continue their studies. We are proud of the fact that they are going to High Point for several reasons. It was the request of the Annual Conference that each charge send at least two students this fall. They are the first to go to our college from Anderson charge. They are both fine young ladies and faithful workers in their church. Miss Poole is president of the W. H. M. S. and Miss Freeman is a teacher in the Sunday school. But best of all, they are consecrated Christians. For these and many other reasons their pastor is proud of them.

On the second and third Sundays Rev. A. Lee Leonard of Greenville, S. C., will fill the appointments for the writer. I will be on a vacation and rest upon the advice of a physician during the remainder of September and will be at my home in Orange county, N. C. Pray that the rest may prove valuable and that I may be back on the field soon.

With best wishes to the Herald and its many friends. M. IVEY CRUTCHFIELD.

Jerusalem.—Our regular services were held the second and third Sunday mornings in August. The pastor met the appointment on the second Sunday and the usual number of people were present for the service.

We appreciate the kindness of Rev. C. M. Davis, of Lexington, formerly a member of South Lexington church and licensed preacher in our church, now serving as pastor of a Baptist congregation, who preached at Jerusalem the third Sunday morning. The pastor was away on his vacation at that time.

Our annual revival meeting will begin next Sunday morning and continue for several nights, probably through Friday night of the week following next Sunday. Rev. M. C. Henderson, of Denton, who is pastor of Denton, Piney Grove, Canaan and Cid churches, will arrive in time for the Sunday night service and preach during the meeting. The services will be held each night beginning at 7:30 o'clock. We are trusting that we may have a good meeting.

This writer had the privilege of visiting our Concord church last Sunday morning. It was my first visit to that church and I was impressed with the fine spirit of the members by their friendly greeting. We were privileged to hear a splendid discourse by Brother Hendry, the pastor, on the significance of the Lord's Supper. A large number, nearly all persons present, participated in the communion service. Rev. Lawrence C. Little, general secretary of our Board of Young People's work for the entire denomination, was present and assisted in the service. The Concord church is progressing splendidly on their building project, and already the Sunday school building is in course of construction, being one-fourth done. The need of a new church building was apparent to this writer, as their auditorium is not large enough. Brother Hendry seems to have the work going well and the people seem to love and admire him. C. B. WAY, Pastor.

South Lexington.—The work here has been moving along fairly well since our last report. The attendance in Sunday school has been about the same for the month of August. Last Sunday there were 132 present. There was no preaching service Sunday morning and this fact may account for the absence of some. Brother Ridge, the pastor, was at Mt. Carmel at the morning service.

There was a large congregation at the service last Sunday night. It was much larger than usual. Brother Ridge delivered a good sermon on the subject, "The Christian's Race," There were four other preachers in the service, these being Rev. J. L. Love, formerly of Concord, who is now living in Lexington, Will Brinkley, of the Holiness church, C. L. Hedrick, of the South Lexington church, and the writer.

On the second Sunday night in this month Rev. J. L. Love preached in the pastor's place, although the pastor was present. Brother Love recently located in Lexington, coming here from Burlington where he resided for some time. He was licensed to preach by the Concord church while living there. He has been attending the services at South Lexington church since locating in Lexington.

The Lord's Supper will be observed at the morning service next Sunday.

A number of the members of the women's class of the Sunday school, together with their husbands and the teacher of the class, enjoyed a picnic supper at the home of Brother C. L. Hedrick in the Mt. Carmel community last Saturday afternoon. It was the annual picnic affair for the women's class of which Brother W. C. Gibson is the teacher.

The pastor will preach at both the morning and evening services next Sunday.

C. B. WAY, Reporter.

Saxapahaw Charge.—A large congregation was present at Concord last Sunday morning for the preaching service. Brother J. T. Woody, the choir leader at this church, has raised almost enough money to purchase 75 new song books. They will be ordered in a few days. The Concord Christian Endeavor society carried out a very interesting and helpful program Sunday night consisting of recitations, readings, and short talks.

The revival meeting at Orange Chapel was a success. Rev. H. F. Surratt, the engaged help, delivered some very inspiring and convincing sermons. There were about ten conversions and reclamations. This church has just purchased a new communion set.

Brother J. J. Crawford seems to be improving slowly. He is still in Watt's hospital, Durham.

Dr. R. G. McPherson has returned from Johns Hopkins hospital, Baltimore, where he took treatment. He is regaining his health rapidly.

Brother H. G. Paris of Salem church, will represent Saxapahaw charge at our next Annual Conference. H. L. ISLEY.

High Point.—High Point College has been the scene of great bustle and activity since Monday, the day for registration of new students. Today (Tuesday) the upper classmen or the old students are registering in large numbers. Approximately 300 students are expected for the opening Wednesday, which marks the beginning of the fourth annual session. All members of the Faculty are in their places ready for work. Messrs. Lindley and Kennett, Misses Idol, Mary Young, and Mabel Williams, took special work in Columbia University, New York, during the summer. Clifford R. Hinshaw, A. M., (University N. C.), is the new Professor of Education, and he and family are domiciled in the Garrett home on West College Drive. Mr. Stanley Pugh A. B. (Finlay College) is the new Instructor in Commercial Branches, and Miss Mary Todd, A.B. (Central College) is the Professor of Expression and Physical Education. Mrs. C. L. Whitaker is at her post again after spending the vacation in Greensboro, Gastonia and Lexington with relatives. Miss Paulecte Rogers of Burlington is the new Bursar.

The congregation was delighted to have an opportunity to hear Rev. J. Clyde Auman, returned missionary from Japan, who has been visiting relatives in High Point and vicinity. He spoke last Wednesday evening at prayer meeting, and told of his work on the foreign field in a most interesting manner. He has served for six years in Japan, and has been President of Nagaya College, which has 800 students. He is very conversant in the language and sang several Japanese songs for us. He and Mrs. Auman and baby will spend a year at home on furlough.

The Sunday school enjoyed its annual picnic and outing last Thursday at Riter's Lake. A large crowd attended, the picnic supper was unusually abundant and appetizing, and the swimming fine. Many thanks are due the efficient Committee which arranged all details; Messrs. J. H. Pritchard, J. W. Hinkle, D. A. Neese, Mesdames J. A. Gray and H. A. Moffitt.

At the 11 o'clock service last Sunday morning Rev. P. E. Lindley delivered a splendid message on "Familiar Failures." Mrs. C. R. Hinshaw, wife of the new Profesor of Education in the College delighted the audience with a lovely vocal solo, "O How Lovely are Thy Dwellings." She possesses a beautiful soprano voice of great volume and sweetness and her enunciation is unusually clear.

The congregation looks forward with much pleasure to hearing her often during the winter. At the evening service which was conducted by Rev. E. Lester Ballard, an interesting feature was the vocal Solo "Zion," rendered by young C. L. Gray, Jr. His voice gives promise of much beauty and strength, he being only fifteen years of age.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies held their monthly business session on Monday afternoon in the home of Mrs. J. Hobart Allred on Sunset Drive with the respective Presidents, Mrs. E. L. Ballard and Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, in the chair after an absence of a few weeks. Mrs. P. E. Lindley was elected Treasurer of the Foreign Society to serve in place of Mrs. H. A. Garrett, resigned on account of removal from the city. We regret exceedingly to lose Mrs. Garrett, who has made a most faithful and efficient officer. It was decided to ask Mrs. R. M. Andrews to give a summary of the Mission Study Book, "A Straight Way Toward Tomorrow" at a meeting in the near future. Circle Chairmen in the Foreign Society will remain as before; Mrs. L. J. Diffee, Mrs. H. A. Moffitt, Mrs. John H. Walker, and Miss Mary Young.

The Topic for Senior Christian Endeavor Society Monday evening was led by Miss Blanche York on "Use and Absence of the Tongue."

A program of special interest is being prepared for the mid-week prayer service on Wednesday evening, and Mr. Ballard urges every one who can possibly do so to be in attendance.

The Sunday school Workers' Council will meet Tuesday evening, and some matters of importance are to be given attention at this time.

Rev. George Shurtz of Morgantown, W. Va., is spending today (Tuesday) in High Point as a guest of Mr. C. C. Robbins. He is on his way to Norfolk, Va., where he sails for Paris, with members of the American Legion, and will be absent seven weeks.

Mrs. L. R. Johnston and little daughter, Rebecca Holt, are guests of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Wicker at Elon College.

Mrs. H. S. Meredith and sons left last Friday for their home in Tampa, Fla., after spending the summer with Mrs. W. P. Pickett and other relatives here.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest L. Auman and children and Mrs. A. M. Rankin have returned from a trip to Asheville and points of interest in the mountains of Western North Carolina.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Robbins and family are at home again after spending two weeks at Paradise Point.

Mrs. R. B. Murphy of Norfolk, who was formerly a resident of High Point and a member of our church, has been the guest of Mrs. H. A. Moffitt and Mrs. J. C. Welch, Sr. Many old friends were pleased to greet her again.

Judge Lewis E. Teague and Brooks Reitzel have returned from a trip to Washington, D. C., where they attended a Fraternity Reunion.

Misses Lucille Reynolds and Lottie Miller of Misenheimer have returned home after a visit to Misses Irene and Inez Reynolds.

We are greatly pleased to see Mrs. W. L. Kivett at services again after an absence of several weeks caused by illness.

Denton Church.—Our special meeting closed the second Sunday in August. The third Sunday in August at night Rev. Joel B. Trogdon of Flat Rock came from Canaan with our pastor and preached. On last Sunday good Pastor Henderson filled his appointment here morning and night with two good sermons. We are always glad when our pastor and family can all be with us. They always have something good to say.

Our pastor added three new members to church, they being Helen Crawford, Elane Hill, Mrs. J. D. Cranford with a letter from Mont Elbe.

Our Sunday school is still living; those not coming don't know what they are missing. We are looking for all our Sunday school members back when the meetings are all over. REPORTER.

Mt. Hermon, Mt. Hermon Charge.—The special meeting at Mt. Hermon resulted in 39 conversions and reclamations—the most of them young people. Rev. N. G. Bethea was the pulpit help. His sermons were good, simple and practical. His explanations to the penitents were very clear and simple so that the youngest child could understand. On Wednesday afternoon a service was held for children, they sat in a body, about 100 of them. This was the most impressive service during the meeting. Mr. Bethea had helped in a meeting about 23 years ago, so he was welcomed by many friends.

The Sunday school is progresing nicely, though some faces are still missed frequently

September 1st an angel came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Nicholson and bore away to a home on high the spirit of their daughter Addie. She had been afflicted about four years, being confined to her bed several months, yet she bore her afflictions with the patience that only a Christian can have. Addie professed faith when young and remained faithful to the last. Before her health failed she was prominent in the activities of her church, serving as organist for a number of years, and anything else her hand found to do, though she was of a quiet unassuming disposition. Rev. J. A. Burgess, a former pastor, assisted by her present pastor, Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, and a near neighbor, Rev. H. L. Isley, conducted the funeral service. More than a church full of people were present to pay their last respects. The floral offerings were many and beautiful, more than could be placed on the mound which covered her earthly tabernacle.

At the service Sunday, September 4th, twelve children were received into the church. The pastor there preached on mountain top experiences, very helpful to converts. A large crowd partook of the communion, many of them children.

September 10, refreshments, ice cream and cake, will be sold on the lawn at the church from six to eight o'clock.

At eight o'clock the Junior Christian Endeavor society will present a pageant, Clinic of a Christian Endeavor Specialist. Following this, the Woman's Home Missionary auxiliary will give Missionary Arithmetic. A silver offering will be taken.

MRS. GEORGE M. ISLEY.

Shiloh.—The little congregation of Shiloh church, just five miles out from Lenoir, was delighted to have Dr. A. G. Dixon and brother to visit us and the Connelly Springs charge, September 3rd and 4th. We were in the midst of our revival meeting at Shiloh and Brother Dixon preached an able revival sermon at our evening service. The visit and sermon will be long remembered by us. We do so much wish these brethren could visit us often. They know how to make us country folk feel that they are one of us, and have our spiritual welfare at heart.

Chapel Hill, Davidson Circuit.—Our prayer meeting has been rained out the last two Sunday nights. We are looking forward to our camp meeting. We invite all of our former pastors back the third Sunday in September to the camp meeting and any one else that will come.

Mrs. Lily Surratt is ill. We ask Christians to pray that she may be restored to health if it is the Lord's will. She is one of our best neighbors. LIZZIE CRANFORD.

Mecklenburg Charge.—Nineteen years ago I left my old home at Matthews, N. C., and went to Burlington to begin my pastoral work. As was reported from Zoar church I helped Rev. W. F. Totten in the meeting there beginning the fifth Sunday in July. It had been twenty years since I preached in that church. It was a real pleasure to be in that church and community to help in the meeting and to see many friends of years ago. On the way to Zoar I stopped at Stallings church and in the parsonage there. While I was on Creswell charge Mrs. Totten who was then Miss Callie Tarkenton was a faithful member and worker at Rehoboth church on that charge. Years ago Brother Totten was pastor on Mecklenburg charge where I first knew him. While I was pastor at Lexington and Yadkin College he was teaching at the latter place. It was delightful to be with these good folks again. The fourth Sunday in August I went to assist Brother Totten in the meeting at Beulah church where I was licensed to preach twenty-one years ago. We had a good meeting and a pleasant time. On Sunday afternoon I preached at Antioch church and Camp-ground. One special feature of the Beulah meeting was that pastor Totten baptized twenty-four converts one day during the meeting. Rev. W. M. Pike helped in the Stallings and Antioch meetings and I heard many expressions of appreciations for his good sermons.

Last year and year before being dry and this year wet the cotton crops and prices have not been satisfactory. Cotton is higher now, but the crop will be short in that section of the state. Consequently the financial condition of the section is not as prosperous as at some other times. All considered everything is moving on very agreeably and successfully. J. H. ABERNETHY.

Efland, Orange Charge.—We are still at work. Brother Williams brings to us inspiring sermons, the kind that hit hard and stick.

Our Ladies' Aid, W. H. M. S., and the Children's Missionary societies combined gave a lawn party at the church Saturday night, the third. This was quite a success. The proceeds realized were around $75.

Our Sunday school register showed up good Sunday. There were 99 present. Let's try the harder to go over the hundred mark now that we came so near it once. There is no good reason why we shouldn't have at least 125 every Sunday. We have the people allright if we could only get them wound up and started.

Best wishes to all Herald readers.

Gibsonville.—The last two weeks have been good weeks for our Gibsonville work. Rev. J. E. Pritchard was with us one week, preaching plain, practical, helpful sermons with force to good effect. The meeting reached its first climax on Sunday morning when a group of boys and girls came forward in response to Brother Pritchard's invitation and expressed themselves for Christ.. In the follow-up work during the following week, I asked one of the younger of the group—eight years of age—what it meant. Without any prompting or suggestion from any one, he answered very promptly: "Giving your life to God."

I can hardly see that a theologian or any one can improve on that answer. He might elaborate it but I think he could not improve it. This follow-up work gave me some very interesting and in one or perhaps two instances, really startling observations. The home holds largely the destiny of the young life that grows up in the home. Nothing new in this, to be sure, but it is interesting, and may be startling, is in some instances tragic. I am about to conclude that the greatest tragedies in life are not those when life is dashed out in an automobile wreck or some such thing, but when tender religious life beginning to grow beautifully under the influence of the Gospel in Sunday school and church is dashed out by a death blow from the home.

The second climax of the meeting was on Sunday night, the last service, when the large audience sat in silence impressed to live better lives.

The third climax was on Sunday morning one week after the close of the meeting when six young people came forwarded and united with the church.

There were gratifying observations and experiences during the meeting. One was when a matured woman with no urging came forward and gave her life to God. Another was when a young girl in the rear of the church arose and walked quietly forward and rededicated her life to God, that she may be sure she is living a Christian life.

Orange Charge.—Rev. T. F. McCulloch preached at Hebron and Chestnut Ridge the fourth Sunday in August while the pastor was taking a little vacation in South Carolina. His sermons were enjoyed by the people. We are always glad to have Brother McCulloch come this way.

Part of the road to Chestnut Ridge has been sanded so that cars can get to the church now without so much trouble.

The revival meeting is to begin at Chestnut Ridge fourth Sunday in September. Rev. Edw. Suits is the engaged pulpit help.

The work seems to be going fairly well. Finances are considerably behind.

Four of our young people entered High Point College Monday as follows: Misses May and Gladys Snipes from Union Grove shurch, Clarence Jones from Hebron, and B. Currie Williams from Efland. We hope each of these will have a succesful year in College.

B. M. WILLIAMS.

Henderson.—The W. H. and F. M. Societies met at the home of Mrs. I. W. Boyd, Monday afternoon, August 22nd, with Mrs. Tom Hight assistant hostess. The meeting was presided over by the president, Mrs. L. R. Gooch. The devotionals were conducted by Mrs. Gooch who used "The Secret" as the subject from "The Rose Jar." Miss Alice Falkner, program leader for the afternoon, gave a most interesting talk from the study book, "Young Islam on Trek." This was followed by a short discussion of interesting news, from The Missionary Record, by Mrs. Clyde L. Finch. Special prayer was then offered by Mrs. S. R. Harris for our missionaries and other work mentioned in the prayer calendar. The calling of the roll, reading of the minutes and treasurer's report was then given. Several committees were appointed by the president. The Question Box was given by Mrs. S. R. Harris. after which Rev. R. A. Hunter closed the meeting with prayer. Delicious refreshments were then served by the hostesses.

The Junior choir gave a beautiful selection yesterday morning at Sunday school, which was greatly enjoyed. They are doing splendid work under the leadership of Mrs. H. A. Jordan. A special effort is to be made this week among all Sunday school members and teachers, in getting all members present next Sunday for Rally Day. Holy Communion services were held at the eleven o'clock hour yesterday and a good sermon, as usual, was preached by our pastor, Rev. R. A. Hunter. Our revival meeting will begin the fourth Sunday in September. The pulpit helper has not been announced yet.

On last Friday afternoon at five o'clock the funeral of Mrs. Macon Stone was held at the church here. She died Thursday night at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Renn, after several weeks of illness. Although in bad health for over a year she continued happy in her Christian faith and her loyal trust in Him never ceased. Many friends extend to the grieved ones their deepest sympathy and love.

All members of the Sunday school were very sorry to learn of the illness of Mrs. J. M. Baity, who was taken to Richmond, Va., yesterday for treatment. May God bless her and comfort her, and also grant her a speedy recovery.

We were made sorry yet once more, when we learned that the family of Mr. H. B. Falkner, is moving to Danville, Va., this week.

Cid, Denton Charge.—Rev. M. C. Henderson accompanied by wife and three lovely children filled his appointment at Cid Sunday and delivered a noble sermon. His messages keep improving. We were glad to have Mrs. Bessie Hedrick to act as organist. We were glad to have Mrs. George Jones, of Thomasville, and Mrs. C. F. McAvery, accompanied by Mrs. W. L. Hanner of Lexington to worship with us Sunday; also Rev. Avery Wooddell's presence was very helpful in the work.

We have paid $10.00 on the Annual Budget at Cid. Pastor's salary coming on very well.

Our Sunday school has been off some owing to so many special meetings and Children's Days around.

The cottage prayer services are still going on. Had a good one at Mr. Milton Hughes' Saturday night. It goes to Mr. "Mont" Hughes next Saturday night.

Miss Lizzie Harris of Moore county, a daughter of Mr. Will Harris, is visiting her uncle, Mr. Hager Harris, this week.

Mr. Barrett Harris and sister, Miss Loula, accompanied by Miss Pearl Harris their first cousin of Moore county, entered High Point College this a.m.

Mrs. Alice Gallimore, widow of the late O. A. Gallimore, was buried at Jerusalem the fourth Sunday last, at 4 p.m. She had pneumonia. She had lived the last five years with her daughter, Mrs. Belle Gorden. She was 84 years old. In her last days she was a member of the Lutheran church. An unusually large number of friends and relatives attended the services. She leaves three daughters and four sons and many relatives and friends to mourn her loss. She was a good woman. The writer has known her for over forty years. Her husband was a faithful member of Cid church. She always loved to attend all denominations. She will be remembered by many of our ministers. She always said she loved to come to Cid. She left a good influence for her children.

Moriah Church.—We have ended a week of a successful meeting and I feel that much good was done, and the church was revived very much. Brother Carmichael preached splendid sermons and they were enjoyed by a good many people. On Sunday morning and night the doors of the church were opened for the reception of members and thirteen united with the church; four came by statement and the others by confession. Pray that He will continue to bless us and that those unsaved will soon accept Him.

The pianist of Calvary church, Miss Vivian Sullivan, played for us during the meeting, a purse of $10.25 was given her as a token of appreciation.

We also enjoyed having the Greensboro young men's quartet and the Glenwood quartet with us. Every one enjoyed the singing and they are welcome any time they wish to come back.

The auxiliaries of the church meet with Mrs. John Moore on Thursday, September 8, at 3 o'clock.

We are sorry to learn that Mrs. C. T. Moser is a patient at the Clinic hospital. We hope for her a speedy recover.

On Friday night, September 2, the death angel knocked at the door of Mr. J. S. Ingold and took away his beloved wife to dwell in that beautiful home prepared for her, and on Monday, September 5, Mrs. Jackson departed this life and has gone to dwell with her Master. May the Father's blessings rest upon the bereaved ones. REPORTER.

A VISIT TO OUR KANNAPOLIS CHURCH

The writer enjoyed a visit to our new church at Kannapolis last Sunday, being accompanied by his family and Brother Phonse Bean and family of the South Lexington church. We arrived in time for the Sunday school which began at three o'clock. Brother Henderson, a brother of our Denton pastor, is superintendent of the Sunday school. There are five classes in the Sunday school. Fifty-eight persons were present.

The preaching service followed immediately after the Sunday school. Rev. G. H. Hendry, of Concord, who has been directing the work there, was present but did not preach. He called on the writer to speak to the congregation. We were glad of the opportunity of meeting with the good people who compose the new work in Kannapolis. We were informed that the church has a membership of about thirty. There is a field for a great work to be done there.

A tabernacle (a one-room wooden structure) was erected at a cost of about $300 which will be used until a church building can be erected. It was learned that the total amount invested in the property is about $3,000. The members recently put on a campaign to raise $500 to meet their present needs and secured about $200.

Brother D. A. McLauren, of Concord, is assisting very much in the establishment of the Kannapolis church. He was present last Sunday.

Brother Hendry is preaching for the new church on Sunday afternoons and other pastors are also preaching there on invitation. Rev. M. C. Henderson, of Denton, preached there the fourth Sunday night in August. The church at Kannapolis will be presented to the Annual Conference in Asheboro for admittance into the conference and probably a pastor will be assigned to the work for next year. C. B. WAY.

TOURING EXPERIENCES

Motoring from Baltimore on August the second by way of Washington, Richmond, Danville, reaching North Carolina near Reidsville, marked part of the most delightful trip of my entire life. After spending five days at Elon College, Greensboro and Siler City, we left that part of the state for King's Mountain, upper Cleveland, Chimney Rock, Hendersonville and Asheville. Leaving Asheville for home we crossed the Black Mountains passing through Marion, Morganton, Lenoir, Blowing Rock, Happy Valley, Boone, and over the Mountains on the Damascus Road through Eastern Tennessee, reaching the Lee Highway at Abingdon, Va., fifteen miles east of Bristol, Tennessee. We followed this famous and popular highway later merging with the Jackson-Lee Highway for approximately four hundred miles passing through the following noted spots located in this section of Virginia: Marion, Wytheville, Roanoke, Natural Bridge, Lexington, Staunton, New Market, Winchester, Harper's Ferry, W. Va., Frederick, Md., coming into Baltimore from the west on the second day of September. This famous National Highway passing through the Shenandoah Valley passes over the Natural Bridge, and is one of the most used of any bridge. We crossed it without knowing it. High on the rock under the bridge is plainly carved the initials "G. W." which is pointed out as the actual work of George Washington. We saw it.

We made the entire trip, covering nearly two thousand miles, in a Ford without a single flat tire, or any other mishaps of any consequences. Surely the Ford should be named "Elizabeth" rather than "a Lizzie" and styled "a Chariot" rather than "a Flivver." We endeavored to see what we could as we passed the many points of interest, which were many as suggested by the above general outline. Through the courtesy of Dr. and Mrs. Amick, we picniced one day on the battlefield of Guilford Court House. This is the best kept battlefield it has been my privilege to visit. We visited the battlefield of King's Mountain, which is both naturally and historically interesting. Another place of surpassing beauty is Lake Lure in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains, just below the Bottomless Pools and the famous natural freak Chimney Rock. In the wild mountains a dam has been built one hundred and ten feet high, covering fifteen hundred acres with water. Places that were once almost impassable gorges and hollows are now bays and harbors, where may be seen numerous row, sail, motor and speed boats. The tourist can enjoy the bracing mountain air and the luxuries of the ocean at the same time and place here. The scenery around Blowing Rork and Boone baffles all descriptions. My wife remarked that "God must have loved mountains, or he would not have made so many."

The name Shenandoah, meaning "The daughter of the Stars," was given to the section of the country lying between the Blue Ridge on the east and the Alleghenies on the west,—Staunton, the birth place of Woodrow Wilson on the South and Harpers Ferry on the north, where John Brown erected his Fort and is buried. This valley is really longer as it extends from Bristol, Tenn., to Harrisburg, Pa. The Shenandoah Valley is rich in historic interest for all Americans, as the frontier of the C[illegible] which experienced the horrors of the Indian Massacres; as the battleground of the French and Indian War; as the point from which Daniel Morgan conducted operations against the British in the Revolution and later as the scene of Stonewall Jackson's Valley Campaign and Sheridan's ride. Apart from the natural beauty on the surface, which won the title—The daughter of the stars, and the historic interest to all Americans, this famous Shenandoah Valley seems to be honey-combed with subterranean caverns, which are lined with millions of stalactite and stalagmite formations, which no artist has been able to copy nor poet describe. The town of New Market seems the center of these subterranean caverns. The following have been explored, lighted and made accessible to the public, namely, Luray, Shenandoah, Endless, Grottoes, and Massanutten. I have gone through the first two. It takes from one to two hours with a guide to go through either.

While in the borders of North Carolina, it was my privilege to meet the following preachers in the North Carolina Conference namely: Revs. W. D. Reed, S. W. Taylor, Dr. T. M. Johnson, Dr. J. F. McCulloch, L. W. Gerringer, E. G. Lowdermilk, W. F. Asheburn, J. D. Williams, W. F. Kennett, H. C. Carmichael, F. L. Gibbs, N. G. Bethea, L. S. Helms, J. D. Morris, J. M. Morgan, G. H. Hendry, E. A. Bingham and C. W. Bates. It was indeed a delight to fellowship with these brethren and especially to speak to Brother Gerringer's good people, in their beautiful church on the first Sunday morning in August, and like old times to be back at Siler City that evening with Brother Gibbs and his good people. It was a rare treat to have the opportunity to assist Brother Morris in his special meeting at Moriah on Clevenland Circuit, and to see the number of grown people seeking salvation at the altar. It was in this old church, in just such a meeting, during the pastorate of Rev. J. H. Moton, that thirty-one years ago I first erperienced "saving grace."

"Through many dangers, toils and snares,
I have already come;
'Tis grace hath brought me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home."

A CASUAL REPORT

Sunday, at three o'clock the children from the M. P. Home, under the care of Dr. Allman and his wife served in Oak Grove church. Their manner showed the good of thorough training.

Dr. Allman made a deliberate statement about the nature of things, about the necessity of a safe support of the "Home." Also he asked the Sunday school superintendent to speak. He made some remarks, or rather, he made, for us, a good talk. Also, he called on this "casual" to speak.

Suddenly the private reminder was about a little girl who was asked to define nervousness. The teacher aid, "Mary, what is nervousness?" The answer was, "It is feeling in a hurry all over." The children being well trained were not the least excited, but served in and all throughout same as "clock work."

However, when this "scribe" had "excuse" to say a favorite speech there was a reminder of "little Mary," but we recited (and excited), a favorite poem, about "The Little Lad" that furnished the loaves and fishes, as we see, by reference to John 6:9.

On "our part" the training has been rather to the plowing "side of life," and not so much to exercises that belong to the things that came off at Oak Grove, Sunday evening.

The exercises were on when I got in, and soon after I got quiet I "exchanged glances" with one of the little "Home" girls, and soon one more. Later, after we got out in the grove, I inquired why it was that I so strangely corresponded with two of the band by "eye sight," and, at once learned that they "2" helped "us" pick up Bonum apples in my orchard 12 months ago. No wonder it has been said that "Human life is many-sided." Brother Allman made "reference" to the apple "consideration" in his addres Sunday, and from it I take some more "liberty" in this preamble.

Twelve months ago, Brother Lowdermilk, who was then superintendent of the Home, and Brother Dixon, who was and is the farmer, on the Home plantation, were up one day, after apples, with two cars and five or six of the boys and girls. We loaded their cars with apples—and, of course, the young people were active in picking up apples. The training for Sunday service is a "fair sample" for the other industries.

The institutions in the Children's Home are right on the line of industry and economy. The boys all learn how to farm. The girls all learn about doing such work as belongs to the "home life." There is no waste about the system. The "waste" is at our end of the line, on our side of life. I "suspect" that we, who try to respect the interests of the Children's Home "pay more" for our dogs, and our "play things" than we contribute to the support of "our Children's Home." Near 40 years ago, one of our state legislators, a farmer, after serving, said that if a man went to Raleigh and legislated against "dogs," he was certain to not serve again as a state legislator.

I have a cousin, a preacher, whose grandfather was a twin brother to my grandfather. His grandfather was named Christian; mine was named John. My grandfather said that his brother Christian was the oldest man. The boys will not send my cousin to the legislature, since he spoke to the school in favor of letting the cigarette alone.

Once I went with Prof. "I" to the school at King. He told the girls how well they could do by letting the chewing gum alone. They will be sure to not send him to the legislature.

The children at the Home are being brought up without these two prejudices—as named. Our people, by economizing, could support three times as many children as are now at the Home. My speech, the poem, Sunday tried to speak for the "economy" needed.

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth." W. F. GRABS.

P. S. Later on, when the schools open, if I happen to get in reach of your school, and you allow me to tell stories, and recite poems, I will try to be deliberate.

I have a poem on English grammar that is right on the line of "education."

The school authorities give good safe reference to my efforts in the school room. I take rather greater pleasure in going to school now, and memorising poems than I did when at the age of 12 years. I "date" from February 17, 1848. We date Dan, the horse that I plowed, Saturday and today at the age of "24" up to last March. W. F. G.

THE ESKIMO DOG'S TAIL

Nature, as usual, knew her business when she devised a tail for the Eskimo dog. It is not feathered like that of a collie or setter, but evenly furred all around, so that when this dog of the frozen North curls up to sleep, the warm voluminous tail can be used as a covering for the nose and feet—the only parts that are not thickly furred.

It is certainly cruel to rob any dog of his tail, but it must be particularly so with Eskimo dogs. Yet this has been done many times by drivers of dog teams, the reason being that, when one dog is hitched close behind another, the tail of the one in front becomes heavy with ice, the frozen moisture from the rear dog's breath.

The practice of docking by drivers is now being discontinued, though. They found that the absence of a tail caused the dog to sleep so poorly that he was unfitted for work. Other methods of hitching the dogs to the sled are now displacing the tandem style, and when these are used docking is unnecessary.

On some specimens of the Eskimo dog, the tail hair is so long that the tail looks much like a plume, and this is greatly accentuated when the animal carries his tail curled over his back, as he usually does.

To those who know the Eskimo dog, the carriage of his tail is a reliable indicator of the animal's physical condition. The tighter the tail is curled on his back, the better the dog feels—the greater his strength, endurance, and morale. If it droops and is carried below the level of the back, the dog is either out of condition or, as is sometimes the case on far North exploration trips, suffering from malnutrition due to lack of sufficient food.

As a matter of fact, relaxation of the tail may have a similar significance in any dog, of any breed, and we who have the welfare of our pets truly at heart should remember this.

DOG FINDS BOY LOST THREE DAYS

The newspapers of Washington, both in news columns and in editorials, had much to say a few weeks ago about the rescue of a Seattle Boy Scout, lost in the Cascade wilderness, by a German police dog. It seems the seventeen-year-old lad started out alone on a fishing trip, with only a couple of sandwiches and his tackle. He did not return at night, and late the next day a searching party was sent out. Early on the third day a deputy sheriff took "Arnold von Winkelried," a Doberman Pinscher, and told him to take up the trail. For three hours the dog coursed through the undergrowth, usually out of sight of his master, but finally appeared with a gray cloth cap in his mouth. Following the lead of the dog, the sheriff came upon the form of the boy, too exhausted to rise. The officer gave first aid and succeeded in reaching his automobile with the boy.

"It wasn't until the second day that I realized I was lost," said Kelsey. "I cooked a few trout I had caught, killed a grouse with a rock and cooked it, and ate berries. The last day seems like a dream. I was lying beside the stump in the morning. I forget what time it was—I was past caring, I guess—when I heard a noise in the bushes and saw something black moving toward me. I was frightened.

"'It's a bear,' I thought. 'How am I going to meet it?' Next thing I knew old Arnold was licking my face and grabbing for my cap. I petted the dog a moment, but he was anxious to be away, and I allowed him to go with my cap. I knew that help wasn't very far off.'"

A HINDU BOY'S COMPOSITION ON THE HORSE

In Sherwood Eddy's book, "India Awakening," the following composition, written by a Bombay high-school student, is given. Beginners in English naturally make quite as delightful blunders as our missionaries made when first conversing in unknown tongues.

"The horse is a very noble quadruped, but when he is angry he will not do so. He is ridden on the spinal cord by the bridle, and sadly the driver places his foots on the stirrups and divides his lower limbs across the saddle, and drives his animal to the meadow. He has a long mouth, and his head is attached to his trunk by a long protuberance called the neck. He has four legs; two are in the front side, and two afterward. These are the weapons on which he runs and also defends himself by extending those in the rear in a parallel direction toward his foe. But this he does only when in a vexations mood. His food is generally grasses and grains. He has power to run as fast as he could. Also there are horses of short sizes. They do the same as the others are generally doing. They have got tail, but not so long as the cow and other such like animals."

THE MOTHER AND HER LAMB

The tender solicitude of the animal mother for her young is beautifully illustrated by the following story, told by Mr. D. H. Pitts, a farmer near Scottsville, Virginia:

On a bright afternoon in February Mr. Pitts walked out to spend some time watching his flock of sheep and young lambs. Most of the flock were lying in a group in the balmy sunshine on a hillside; but one ewe was lying, with her lamb, across the ravine on the opposite slope. Presently a dog came running up the ravine. The mother jumped to her feet and watched with apparent anxiety until the dog passed out of sight. Then, feeling that her young was in danger—and who will say she didn't feel the proximity of danger—she went to her lamb and pushing it with her foot and nose, she wakened it and started on a run for the sheep barn, where she remained the rest of the day with her babe in security.

Mr. Pitts says he had never, in his many years of sheep-raising, witnessed a similar occurrence in his flock.

PLANT BLACK CHERRY TREES

Those sensible people who would attract birds to their lawns and gardens must realize that to do so they must have in those lawns and gardens food and shelter for the birds. A garden will furnish bugs for food, but trees make the best shelter. Why not, in planting trees, plant varieties that will be not only shelter, but, in season, free lunch counters for the birds? Such a tree is the black cherry.

On the back line of our lot a black cherry grows, a spreading, full-topped tree about twenty-five feet in height, though neither tall nor old for its kind. When its fruit is ripe, scarcely for a minute during daylight is it deserted by birds. It is patronized by nearly all of the larger species that make their homes in this vicinity.

I have seen in the tree during the ripe cherry season, robins, red-headed woodpeckers brown thrashes, catbirds, English sparrows, cardinals, flickers, chewinks, and mocking-birds. There were doubtless others there that I did not observe.

It can be seen readily that if it is desired to attract many kinds of birds, the black cherry is an excellent tree to plant. In addition to this, black cherries are long-lived trees, growing to good size with delicate green foliage and slender twigs, which give good shade and add to the beauty of the grounds.—Our Dumb Animals.

OMNIPOTENCE

O Thou, who in the molding of the rosebud
Doth fashion purity in form sublime,
Who in the gracefulness of rippling waters
Doth whisper of thy tenderness sublime,
Make me to know thee, Giver of the sunshine,
Fashion me as thou hast made the rose,
Teach me thy tenderness in all its beauty
And let my daily walk thy love disclose.

SAILORMEN AND ANIMALS

A Lighthouse tender on the Pacific coast recently reported to the Marine Journal a strange encounter with a deer. A boat was about to dock when the skipper noticed a buck swimming in the water among a number of logs. The poor creature was try his best to get clear of the timber, but he was caught between two large logs, and every time he moved they rolled and trapped him again.

The tender hauled him aboard, for they were near a dog-infested town and the buck was so tired it was feared he might be killed. The game warden was summoned, and the buck was loaded aboard his car and carried well out into the woods.

This incident certainly shows the versatility of the sailor when he can help out wild animals. It is just another evidence of the love for animals that all sailormen worthy of the name have always had in abundance.—The Lookout.

PETER PUT-TO-BED

Oh, who is Peter Put-to-Bed? At twilight every night he swings the fragrant garden gate and puts the bees to flight; the little birds half gone to sleep soft twitter far and near: "It's just old Peter Put-to-Bed; old Peterkin is here."

He wears a rumply lilac gown and has a beard of gray; his slippers flop with every step in such a sleepy way; he's often known to stop and yawn and nearly shut his eyes before he stoops to fold to sleep the weary butterflies.

He strokes the perky pansy heads and bids the froggies sing down deep beneath the lily pads and quite forget to wink. He strokes the wing of Bobolink and tucks away her head. But Peter's quite too wise to try to put the owl to bed.

Old Peter's in the garden now; I hear the grasses blow as, slippered soft, he trails his robe where bells and lilies grow. I must be putting down my book and going up the stair; he has a way of looking up to see if I am there.—Miriam Clark Potter, in The Youth's Companion.

—We were permitted to attend the meeting at Moriah one afternoon. Brother Carmichael did the preaching and was supported by a choir of singers, with Miss Vivian Sullivan of Calvary church as organist. There was also present a band of small boys and girls who sang nicely and enthusiastically a number of songs, Brother Carmichael leading. Brother Carmichael's sermon was of good length, interesting and impressive throughout. Rev. C. H. Whitaker who happened to be passing dropped in during the hour and concluded the service with an earnest prayer and benediction.

—Calvary Sunday school enjoyed a picnic at Friendly Lake last Saturday afternoon. This is an artificial lake about two miles from the Guilford County Home. There is a tract of 85 acres with a lake for swimming and boat-riding. There is also an artesian well with pure cold water pumped by electrical power. This is a quiet place for rest and it is expected that it will come to be a regular resort for people seeking rest.

NOTES AND SUNDRIES

—Miss Ethel Richardson of Los Angeles, assistant superintendent of state public instruction in California, was recently awarded $1000 and a gold medal offered by the Harmon Foundation of New York, through the Survey Magazine, "to the individual responsible in 1926 for the most distinctive contribution to the social, civic, or industrial welfare of the United States." Miss Richardson was selected for the award as the person chiefly responsible for the success of California's undertaking in adult education, which is said to be the largest project of its kind on this side of the Atlantic.

—Twenty of the largest motion-picture producing units in the world have unanimously adopted a resolution pledging themselves to omit all profanity from future motion-pictures. The producers who compose the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Incorporated, which is under the direction of Will H. Hays, have also pledged themselves to omit all profanity and ridicule of the clergy, all ridicule of religion, all sneers at the Constitution of the United States and the prohibition amendment, and to eliminate any and all salacious bill-board advertising in their publicity programs.

—A gratifying increase in attendance is reported from High Point College. We do not know whether all available dormitory space has been taken or not, but we presume arrangement can be made for all who wish to attend. From the reports the attendance has reached about to the three hundred mark.

—As a woman came ashore from a boat at Calcutta she carried a basket in which were observed a cat and six kittens. The sight was so pleasing that a customs officer reached out his hand to pet them. As they were strangely unresponsive he examined more closely. They were merely cat skins stuffed with thousands of dollars worth of opium.

—After more than one hundred years of publication as a weekly periodical, The Youth's Companion will now appear as a monthly, the September number being the first issue under the new arrangement.

—Secretary of Labor Davis has inaugurated a movement to drive out of this country undesirable aliens who have been smuggled across the border. Leading manufacturers will be asked to co-operate in discovering such undesirables.

—Brazil has passed a drastic law against Communism. The measure makes strikes illegal.

—The latest report of the earthquake in Kansu Province, China, on May 23, is that 50,000 persons were killed. A great number are now suffering from starvation.

—A 1,400-pound leatherback sea turtle, eight feet long, was the prize recently landed by Henry Bordzik of Beach Haven, New Jersey. Being a rare specimen, the New York City Aquarium at once arranged to purchase it, paying $2,000.

VOLUME XXXIII. GREENSBORO, N. C., SEPTEMBER 15, 1927 NUMBER 44

It Is the Common Lot

I believe it would help us to bear our sicknesses and our sufferings if we knew how many people are suffering similarly and even more painfully. Physicians of course are familiar with suffering people, but most of us know little of the world's suffering until we ourselves fall victims to it. A tour through a hospital is a revelation to us. We had no idea there were so many sick people in our part of the world. Or if we talk with our neighbors and hear them tell of the ailments suffered by members of their families we will be surprised again. We had been accustomed to think of these suffering ones as persons of abounding health. We know only our own sufferings by direct experience and it is easy for us to imagine that nobody else suffers as we do. It would be a comfort to us to know that somebody else has suffered as we are suffering and has survived.

We should know that suffering is the common lot of humanity. Job, about the oldest book we have, declares that man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward. Yet, says the writer, affliction cometh not forth of the dust; trouble does not spring out of the ground. The modern scientist may try to make men believe that our troubles have an origin in disease germs or in some violence done to the organs of the body, but this does not preclude the explanation of the author of that ancient book. He says it is the Almighty that maketh sore and that bindeth up. God is the God of all the microbes. They do His will. Happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty. Sickness as well as health is in God's program for us. God loves us when we are sick as truly as He does when we are well. It would help us greatly in affliction if we would believe that God in our affliction is seeking to do us some spiritual good. It would help us more if we would join with Paul in believing that our light, transient afflictions work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Instead of taking our sickness as evidence that God has forgotten us or even turned against us, we may find joy in believing that our sickness is evidence of God's special care for us.

We know that much of our suffering is due to errors in some of our conduct, that our pains are warnings against the course of conduct that would work injury to our bodies. Pain is a monitor often. Our nerves are endowed with the power to make us suffer in order that we may save ourselves from destruction. And are not our purely spiritual pains often an indication to us that we should amend some of our ways? Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and He loves all mankind, and He chasteneth all. Suffering is the common lot by divine appointment.

—Rev. H. L. Powell and family are in great grief. One day last week a little daughter, aged ten or twelve or thereabout, was accidentally shot and died as a result. It is really no worse to die by accident than by disease, but the suddenness and unexpectedness of it make it seem worse. Brother Powell and family will have the tender sympathy of many friends.

A Preacher in Search of a Parish

In the course of the years we have received a number of letters from ministers at a distance, inquiring about conditions in North Carolina and the opportunities for ministerial service here, but never received one quite like the following:

"I write to ask for information about pastoral opportunities in your state. I hear North Carolina highly spoken of by people who have passed through as tourists. I am pastor of a church here in ———, but my charge is not to my liking. I am a natural orator and have trained myself by a course in elocution, and when I get up to speak I expect people to listen. But I have some in my congregation here who go to sleep on me almost every Sunday. I would like to serve a congregation that could appreciate my efforts. I expect all the members to attend regularly and stay awake at least while I am preaching. I do not preach long sermons, but I try to make up with spice and pep what is lacking in length. It goes without saying that I expect to be paid for my services. I want a church whose members are in the habit of paying and who can be relied on to meet all expectations. Then I want a church whose members are all harmonious with each other. I cannot afford to have my peace of mind destroyed by strife among my people. Of course I want an educated people. The uneducated could not understand my preaching. As to the place of worship, I would expect that to be commodious and handsome. I would expect the congregation to grow rapidly under my preaching, and the house should be of such size as to make this possible. If you can point me to an opening suited to my tastes and abilities, I will thank you."

If this preacher gets to Heaven, he may find there a congregation of people such as he is looking for, but we do not believe he will find it on earth.

Lindbergh Did It—Why Can't I?

Lindbergh made a great flight and received great applause: why can't I do likewise?

There are several reasons, my son. In the first place, you are not Lindbergh. You haven't Lindbergh's qualifications for the task. You have not been trained by years of experience. You may not have Lindbergh's natural ability. Then Lindbergh was the first of the series, and there can be no other first. You may be the first to make a non-stop flight from Jamestown to Burlington, but not from New York to Paris.

There are greater distances than from New York to Paris, and you may try to cover one of them just to surpass Lindbergh in distance traveled at one sitting, but you would have to stay awake; how do you know that you could do it? Your engine would have to keep on working; how do you know that it would do it? You would have to find your way through mist and fog and ocean storms; how do you know that you would do it? If your physical powers failed, if your mechanism failed, if tornadoes caught you in their grasp, what would become of you?

You may sacrifice your life in trying to do like Lindbergh, but you cannot be another Lindbergh.

SAGE ADVICE FROM DR. CADMAN—AND OTHER WORDS MORE OR LESS WISE

By Rev. Luther K. Long

Nothing is so important in interpreting the Bible as sanity of mind and heart. If a person once gets under the domination of an erratic, irrational set of principles of interpretation he is not only prevented from reaching the truth that is in the Bible he is also liable to have his whole mental equipment disturbed and rendered unreliable. No department of thought and life but is likely to feel the effects of false or unbalanced religious views.

Dr. S. Parks Cadman is doing a great service by answering questions in the leading dailies throughout the country. A letter from a distressed young woman, and the answer to it, are well-worth serious consideration. It may be that the answer applies to the situation of other people who are in no danger from this particular bit of delusion:

"My fiance," writes the questioner, "is a great student of prophecy. He is at present engaged in calculating the end of the world according to the Book of Revelation. He says that the end seems to be near, and has suggested putting off our marriage, as we may be "caught up with the 144,000 who will ascend into Paradise. He sleeps badly, and I myself dream about the seven golden candlesticks. I often feel distressed. What must I do?"

Dr. Cadman goes to the root of the matter in his discerning answer: He says:

"Get back to a normal state of mind, and tell your fiance that he should devote his arithmetic to figuring out his future home with you on earth instead of undertaking God's business in Heaven. I am not surprised that you are distressed or that he sleeps badly. He would sleep better if he used his waking hours for saner occupations.

"His symptons indicate a fear of marriage which he endeavors to justify by alleging the nearness of the world's collapse. Your symptoms are equally significant. Why trouble about the seven golden candlesticks or any other celestial utensils? They will not illuminate your present condition, nor furnish the apartment you should occupy as a happy bride.

"To be frank, all the signs of your somewhat dismal courtship show that both of you, if you continue in your present frame of mind, are in for a rough passage should you embark on matrimony's rather stormy seas. Figure-maniacs of the pietistic sort are not as a rule congenial mates for sensible people. Accept my sympathy and reflect that a diseased brain, however subtly disguised by religious zeal, can be a bigger hindrance to successful wedded life than a diseased body."

It may be well in this connection to reproduce a bit of writing which was sent from a rectory in Michigan to the Detroit Free Press. It is illustrative of how some people make of the Bible a futile, idiotic book. Here is the communication:

"May I offer the following thoughts to my brother ministers? My firm conviction is that the years spoken of by Habaakuk (3rd chap., 2nd verse) center around the years A. D. 1914-1926. If I am right the midst (or middle) of 'The Years' would be 1920, the year Great Britain began her mandatory work in the Holy Land.

"If 1914-1926 covers the period spoken of, then we ought to look for the fulfillment of Joel's prophecy (3rd chap., 14th verse) 'Multitudes, multitudes in the Valley of Decision: for the Day of the Lord is near in the Valley of decision.'

"In plain, everyday speech, I believe God is calling on all men, everywhere to come to a definite decision to stand-square for the Holy Bible's account of the creation and the fall."

Some one has testified to receiving a wonderful blessing from the discovery of the fact that the word "Abba" spells the same thing backward as it does forward. Some one else has suggested that such people might try the same plan on the word "star."

A good friend of mine has written some discriminating words concerning false views of the Bible. Here are some of the things he says:

"The tragedies that have come out from a false interpretation of the Bible are many and terrible. Most of the troubles and heresies and divisions that have rent the church through the ages have sprung from a false idea of the Book. Today the world has the spectacle of scores of eccentric sects, big and little, rallying around a false interpretation of Scripture, wasting their own God-given powers in fruitless controversy and bringing confusion and embarrassment and sometimes shame upon the whole Christian church.

"The notion that the Bible is a cross-word puzzle accounts for most of the strange sects of these and other days. They are born of an extreme literalistic view of the Scripture and cradled in the mysteries that a false view has written into them. We hear much of 'tearing the Bible to pieces' but the Book has suffered ten times more from its supposed friends who persist in writing all sorts of things in between the lines, and in extracting mysterious miscellany there from as the magician brings rabbits out of a silk hat.

"A lot of hocus pocus stuff has clung to the Bible as barnacles attach themselves to a ship. Some persons have lacked the good sense to see that the Bible is not a puzzle but was intended to be read and understood and followed by intelligent people. The Bible has suffered a good deal from its friends, much more than from its enemies."

In my boyhood home was a copy of the New Testament and the Psalms—a convenient volume in large, clear type. The finger prints of my father and mother constituted a fine commentary on this Book. From this commentary I learned what were the most valuable portions for practical use. The volume opened naturally to the Psalms, to the Gospel of John, to First Corinthians. The Shepherd Psalm and others, the 14th chapter of John and others, the 13th chapter of Frst Corinthians and other passages were well thumbed and soiled, and some leaves became loose. These parents of mine were plain, sensible Christians. They had no hobbies. Their spiritual hunger and thirst were normal, and they knew what was good for them. That is the best foundation for a wise interpretation of Scripture. Scholarship, added to this, will help in the solution of difficult problems.

THE MOST POPULAR AMENDMENT

It is a fact that the Eighteenth Amendment to the constitution has received by far more overwhelming support from the people than any other amendment. It was submitted by a vote of more than two-thirds of the House of Representatives and of the Senate of the United States. The total vote in favor of ratification in the state senates was 86 per cent dry and in the state houses of representatives was 80 per cent dry. The first ten amendments to the Constitution were ratified by only ten of the thirteen states. Four states did not ratify the Twelfth Amendment, five states did not ratify the Thirteenth; four did not ratify the Fourteenth; six did not ratify the Fifteenth. The Sixteenth Amendment failed to receive the approval of six states, while the Seventeenth lacked the support of twelve, as did the Nineteenth. The Eighteenth, however, received the approval of 46 of the 48 states and of one house in each of the two remaining states. Forty-seven of the forty-eight states have at some time had concurrent laws of enforcement.

—If we talk long enough about the failure of the church our children may at last believe us; and then we shall no doubt wonder why they have no use for the church.—C. E. World.

ENTHUSIASM FOR JESUS

Max I. Reich

The Christian faith, according to its own account of its history, claims to have originated in enthusiasm for Jesus. The synoptic Gospels give us the story. They relate in simple words how faith in Jesus first awoke in the hearts of men. They did not arrive at it through study. It was spontaneous, enthusiastic leaping forward of heart confidence to a Person. It was an experience, a spiritual emotion. The instincts of broken, puzzled, lost and despairing men and women turned to Jesus as a dove to its mate. Theology apart, the Gospels present us with the gracious figure of One who as He moved about in Galilee and Judea somehow inspired withered and weary hearts with faith in His Person, with a confidence that laughed at the impossible. They brought Him (they felt that they could) an affection that has certainly never been felt for anyone else, either before or since in the history of mankind. In this new feeling for Jesus they brought their sick and obsessed to Him, as well as their heart hunger and world-weariness. Ask them to give an account of this enthusiasm? Who is this Jesus to inspire such feeling? I doubt whether their answers would have satisfied our theologians. But in the presence of Jesus everything was different. Sadness, sin, sickness vanished before his face, as bats and owls before the rising sun. They experienced with Him an exhilaration and spiritual elevation that lifted them out of want into the region of satisfied desire. Jesus Himself declared that He was able thus to meet their need—spiritual or physical—because of their faith. "Thy faith hath saved thee," He told the woman whom He had recovered to purity and spiritual health. "Thy faith hath made thee whole," He said to another woman whose touch had liberated the divine virtue in Him for the healing of her malady.

It was not that a new creed had come into the world, or a new philosophy, or new ethics merely. The faith of the earliest disciples was, reduced to its simplest elements, heart-attachment to a Person—confidence in His ability. Gradually they were led on to know Him. Their intercourse with Him was a succession of surprises. They went from light to light. Their faith was not an "article" but an experience. It was a fire kindled by Jesus in their hearts. It had opened the door into a new world for them, in the light of which their old world was no longer the same. They were as the children of the bride-chamber. Poor, lowly, ignorant—the most of them were peasants and fishermen, tax-gatherers and excommunicate, women whose sin had outclassed them—but now they were in the very kingdom of heaven. Let them define their faith? They had something deeper than definitions. They did—some of them—confess Him to be the Christ, the Son of the living God. But their confession had its roots in their experience. The creed did not produce the experience, but the experience the creed. Faith and enthusiasm for Jesus were synonyms to them.

And this "faith" was the genesis of Christianity in the world.

But this faith received a rude shock. Each one of the four recorders dwells on the collapse of the disciples in the presence of the crucifixion. To them it appeared as a terrible tragedy. It quite extinguished their enthusiasm. It left them a dispirited and disappointed band.

But a marvelous thing happened. Their enthusiasm burst forth again in a luster and intensity greater than before. What had taken place? Something tremendous must have transpired to have effected such a change in the feelings of the disciples. How shall we explain it? We have their own word for it—they have sealed it with their martyr blood—their Lord had come back to them: He was risen again; the grave was robbed of its prey; they had seen Him. He had spoken to them, breathed on them, given them "many infallible proofs" of His victory over death—the Magdalene, the two on the way to Emmaus, Simon Peter, the eleven, Thomas, the seven on the lake of Galilee, five hundred brethren at once—all unite their testimony: "The Lord is risen indeed."

Would a subjective vision, a fancied apparition due to an hysterical state of mind have produced such an effect? Was their resurrection faith based on a ghost story? Were they deceived if not exactly deceivers? These questions have been asked and answered over and over again during the last nineteen centuries. One thing we do know—their faith, their enthusiasm for Jesus, more than reasserted itself. If the greatest test, the crucifixion of their Master, could not annihilate it, if it succeeded in rising superior to this contradiction, what other terrors were there in the heights or in the depths, in things present or things to come, that their faith could not conquer? The darkest night of sorrow had changed into the morning of unclouded joy. The Bridegroom had come back to them, and their joy no man should take away again.

And thus, if what they had first found in Jesus had kindled their faith, the resurrection of Jesus rekindled it, and gave them an enthusiasm and a message which had in it a principle whereby they were able to overcome both the allurements and the terrors of the world.

Hitherto they had kept their discovery a secret, but ten days after the final disappearance of their Lord into the invisible world, their enthusiasm burst forth in an all-devouring flame. It could no longer be contained. They were set on fire by it and Jerusalem came together to see them burn, thousands of the spectators themseves catching the heaven-born flame. The Holy Ghost had come, Christ's spiritual parousia had taken the place of His former outward presence. Their very characters underwent a marked transformation. The Christ who had before lived and worked and spoken before them, now lived and worked and spoke within them and through them.

And this explains the intensified enthusiasm of the post-pentecostal days.

And it was no mere flash in the pan. Long after, when the first experiences with Jesus in Galilee, the rapture afterwards of His resurrection, and the subsequent pentecostal effusion, had become a sacred memory, the enthusiasm which these three stages of experience had kindled burned on with undimmed brightness and undiminished intensity. Christianity did not prove a nine days' wonder. The apostles declared that they had not really lost Jesus. They had not to look back upon the history of the past to realize something of His reality. Not only on the throne of the universe was He but with them, in Jerusalem, Samaria, and the regions beyond, He walked as truly and blessedly, yea more so, as in those far-off idyllic Galilean days.

Wonderful enough they succeeded in imparting their enthusiasm to multitudes who had not seen what they said had been beheld by their eyes, nor heard the music of that voice which had become to them the guiding voice of the Good Shepherd. The disciples of the second generation were brought into the same faith. They were by no means an inferior order of Christians. They could be written to in language such as this: "Whom having not seen ye love, in whom though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." The spiritual presence of the Christ had the same effect as the outward, yea, was more effectual because of its inwardness. It burned to white heat in the Jew, Saul of Tarsus, and made him a vessel to carry Christ about, the apostle of the indwelling Christ, as the first apostles had been eye-witnesses of His humiliation and resurrection. The revelation of the Son within him was as vivid to him as the revelation granted to the first apostles on the mount of transfiguration. And he succeeded in making Gentiles see in his Lord the wisdom and power of God, to whom the story of Jesus would otherwise have appeared only as the utter failure of a Jewish artisan to be a successful religious reformer. He was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ in Ephesus which worshipped the image of Diana; in Athens, the centre of learning; in Corinth known for its licentiousness.

He carried into the welter of the Roman empire, sick of its inventions, mad upon its lusts, drunk with its military pride, the precious secret in his own heart. Beneath the garb of poverty, that blessed Christ-intoxicated man traveled about sharing with others his secret—how to find rest, holiness, victory, eternal life, the knowledge of God, righteousness, peace, and joy, liberty and heavenly dignity as sons of God, in that Christ who could kindle in their hearts that same enthusiastic faith which He had produced in those who turned to Him with their diseases and sorrows in the days of His flesh. What must the Christ have been to that man who poured out his heart in such glowing descriptions of His glories—human and divine! And what must He have become to that Gentile company to whom those outpourings were addressed, unknown and unseen as He was in the flesh!

The secret of a world-overcoming faith today lies in the fact that we have more than a tradition of the origin of that faith, more than a history of its rise. We have more than a recorded Jesus, the echoes of whose sayings have come down to us through the corridors of time. We need the record; we are more than grateful for its preservation. We have no fear what the most exacting criticism may make of it. Whatever new discovery may yet leap to light, that record never shall be shamed. We feel that it has given for all time a portraiture of our Saviour and Lord which we can gaze on with adoring faith and love. But that which makes us understand the enthusiasm for Jesus which its pages speak about, and which was the historical start of that beneficent river of life and love which, in greater and greater volume, is pouring itself over the continents, is that the self-same faith has been kindled in our own hearts from the self-same Furnace of Divine love incarnate whom we confess before the visible and invisible world as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

We need neither go back into history, nor climb the heavenly stairs, to get in contact with Him. He communicates directly by His Spirit with the soul of man. The voice within is the echo of His call. He is the inspiration of every right desire, of every longing after purity, of every unselfish thought and deed. We have His Presence in our modern world. He can heal its disorders, solve its questions, direct its strivings after a nobler life and a worthier social order in which there is a fair opportunity for every man. Every ray of true light in any man anywhere, whatever his creed, color or taste, is an emanation from the eternal Christ, the Light of the world.—Pennsbury Leaflet No. Three.

—We must remember that one man's freedom cannot rest on another man's slavery; that one man's wealth cannot rest on another man's woe, and that it is the same with nations as with men, unless they live with good will towards one another, with consideration for one another's needs and desires and hopes, they will always be in peril and must always anticipate and prepare for some great settlement of dues, that will strain every resource they have.—Edward Sanford Martin.

"My own amateurish opinion is that prohibition has contributed incalculably to enabling a vast number of families to improve their living conditions and to make at least some progress towards financial independence. The testimony of employers is along the same lines."—Mr. B. C. Forbes, financial writer of the Philadelphia Enquirer.

MUSINGS AT NAZARETH

By Hazel E. Foster

As I stood on one of the hills on which the city of Nazareth is spread, I exclaimed, "How could anything bad have come out of Nazareth?"

For I seemed to be in the very temple of God, even the clean, pungent air suggesting holy incense. The entire dome of heaven was visible, set on noble pillars of sacred-storied mountains. The sun was setting behind Mt. Carmel, and the golden path of light, half seen, half imagined, across the bit of the Great Sea that was just discernible, seemed like a glimpse between the drawn veils that curtain the holy of holies. The sun was painting that temple dome in the hues of heaven, deep reds, soft greens, saffron, pale yellows, bright orange, colors coming out in strong relief, melting into fresh ones, merging into a gentle rose glow that transfigured every mountain and the valley below, and suffused the atmosphere with a hallowed light. As the sun at length slipped behind the mountain, I thought of the ancient high priest gone behind the curtains into the very presence of God.

"The heavens declare the glory of God,
And the firmament showeth his handiwork."

How often must Jesus have repeated this psalm as He watched such sunsets in this very place! I wondered whether it sometimes reminded Him of His memorable boyhood visit to the temple at Jerusalem. As I gazed about, I began to try, as far as I was able, to see things as I felt He must have seen them, along with His playfellows, later His workfellows, oftentimes alone.

Everywhere about one, Scripture was inscribed. The quiet valley at the foot of the town opens into the Plain of Jezreel or Esdraelon, that fertile, lovely plain that has ever been the vital spot of Palestine in war with foreign enemies, as even Napoleon and General Allenby have experienced in modern days. There Deborah and Barak more than a thousand years before Jesus had their never-to-be-forgotten triumph when the Heaven-sent deluge tore off the enemies' chariot-wheels in mud. Defending its entrance into the heart of the land, Saul and his sons lost their lives on the slopes of Gilboa; and at Megiddo, the key to the plain, King Josiah was slain by Pharaoh-neco of Egypt.

Mt. Carmel abounded in Bible lore, especially in stories of Elijah, the lone prophet who won his bloody victory, single-handed, over the priests of Baal. The woman of Shunem had lived a little to the south of Nazareth, and the witch of Endor behind a near-by mountain. Bible associations seemed endless.

Lovely Safed, the city set on a hill, can be seen from Nazareth. Majestic Tabor I saw in full view, and it reminded me most forcefully of the one hundred and twenty-first psalm. Perhaps it is the mount of transfiguration. I feel certain, at least, that it is one of the places to which Jesus was often drawn for nights of prayer.

"How could Jesus," I thought, "have grown other than holy in this holy place?" But again I remembered Nathanael's startling query, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?"

That night I slept in the mission hospital on the hillside. The doctor and the nurses were very busy. There were critical cases to which they might be called in the night. A young Arab had come all the way from Transjordania in an almost dying condition, but riding a donkey all the distance. He fought to live, for he had two sisters to provide for. How quickly would Jesus have healed him long ago! But next morning, after the staff, probationers, and employees, along with the guest, had had prayers together, and I had seen the hospital wards, the rest went back to a new day of toil, and I went off to visit the reputed site of the old synagogue of Nazareth.

How often Jesus must have gone into that synagogue, wherever it may have been, he and His father and four brothers on the main floor, His mother and sisters in the gallery. Then the day when the quiet, simple Carpenter came back to His town a famous prophet. How curious His acquaintances were to see whether He really could do the wonders reported of Him from other towns! The president of the synagogue invited Him to read from the roll and speak. He had a mighty text. Would they had let Him preach from it.

Because he anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor;
"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me,
He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives
And recovering of sight to the blind;"

and a few minutes later the Sabbath congregation had become a frenzied mob driving Him before them to cast Him off the brow of one of their hillsides to kill Him. No, the beauty of nature and God's law did not make other Nazarenes holy.

Thus had Jesus passed out of the little, familiar community, unable to heal their sick or give sight to their blind, because they would not trust Him. I wondered whether He had not had in mind old neighbors whom He had eagerly counted on healing ever since that power had come upon Him, and whether it was not a keen disappointment to Him that He could not cure those He knew best and had pitied through years of helplessness. And I also wondered how these townsfolk of His felt, when quite within their sight Jesus raised the dead son of the widow at Nain, which I could easily see nestled on an opposite hillside.

And then I realized that even today Jesus is offering His home town another chance, through the mission hospital, which in His name offers healing, sight, and a gospel for the poor. Many were being helped through it. Yet even now some of the old unbelief prevails. I saw that morning a two-year-old baby in its hospital crib, feeling so pitifully and helplessly about in stark blindness.

"Too late," said the nurse sadly; "the poor father cried when we told him so; but he had tried all sorts of quack treatments first, and came here only when he had nowhere else to go."

No wonder the father wept! There is no future, as he well knows, in that land for a blind baby but lifelong beggary. And sight a short time before could have been sure.

In another bed lay a young man who had trusted to treatment by untrained healers, who had bound his broken leg so tightly that tortures unspeakable had followed for days, while they insisted the pain was necessary to the cure. Finally in despair he came to the hospital. There they saved his life, but had to amputate the limb already putrefying. A terrible handicap in a country of fierce economic struggle, it was still more terrible to a Moslem who had been taught that the missing member would be missing still in Paradise.

So even yet in Nazareth as elsewhere there are those He cannot heal because of their unbelief. But, as the doctor or the nurse speaks a message of His love to those they are making well and strong again and to those on whom they can do only a less "mighty work" physically, and especially when the blind evangelist goes from bed to bed, and tells how the Nazarene has a gospel for the poor and blind that can make such as she and they useful and happy, Jesus is being called back again even to Nazareth to work His mightiest work of all, redemption.—*C. HIGH POINT COLLEGE AND THE CONFERENCE ASSESSMENT

Brethren of the ministry and of the laity, our High Point College stands in great need of the small assessment laid upon each charge for running expenses.

Several charges have paid in full, several others have paid part, but some have not yet paid anything. This is a most earnest plea to both pastors and laymen to rally to this good cause and send the amount assessed your charge real soon to Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C., and he will send at once to the college. Let us pay that one assessment 100 per cent this year.

Negro Bootblack Financed Students

Recently there died in Cleveland, O., "unhonored and unsung," a man named Joe Lucas. Many people, daily, saw Joe, but few knew his name or anything about him, and, seemingly, none cared to know.

He was a negro and conducted a shoe-shining stand in a large downtown store. He kept at his work, steadily, twenty-six years and never took a vacation. There is little romance in that fact. But Joe had a reason for not taking a rest.

He had special use for the money he earned. Working with him were ten colored boys. All of them were attending high school, college or night school, and Joe saw to it that their tuition was paid. He did not need the ten boys in his work, but the ten boys needed the money for their education, and so they were given work.

They represented only a small number of the colored boys who had received their education through Joe. For a quarter of a century he had been helping boys through school. Joe himself was educated and would have been fairly "well off" if his earnings had not been dispensed so prodigally. At one time Booker T. Washington tried to hire him as private secretary. But Joe felt that he would be of more use to the colored people of Cleveland. So he spent his days shining shoes until he was carried to his grave a few weeks ago "unhonored and unsung."—Our Colored Missions.

The above clipping shows a great soul. If a thousand people in the North Carolina conference will do that well by the college, and thus by our own boys and girls, great progress will follow.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. Dixon.

THE FRUITLESS FIG-TREE

"Come out into the garden, and I will explain a perplexing parable to you," said a friend to me in the American colony in Jerusalem one spring morning.

Standing beside me beneath a large fig-tree, he pointed to the heavy crop of young figs not larger than the ordinary cranberry. Then, moving the branches aside, he showed me five fine figs, ripe and ready to eat.

"A fig-tree," he exclaimed, "puts out a first crop of figs very early in the spring, even before the leaves burst from the buds. Nearly all of this first crop of figs fall off; then the second crop sets. It was not the time for the regular crop of figs when Jesus turned aside to see whether there were any figs on the tree by the wayside, but it was time for a few of the first crop of figs. These were what He was looking for. It was a parable of the chosen people. Jesus was looking for the first fruit. He cursed the barren tree presenting a vivid picture of the nation so spiritually barren that it was even then plotting the crucifixion of its Saviour and friend."

My friend, who had lived many years in the land where the Bible was written, taught me a lesson which I never had found in the writings of the scholars wise in their philosophies but utterly ignorant in regard to the land in which the Book was written.—C. E. World.

INDIA

Our Educational Work

Most excellent reports are coming to us from our school work in India. Mr. Minnis reports for the Boy's school that it is about to outgrow its buildings. This year we have the largest number on roll since the school was organized. Fine prospects for a splendid year. Every teacher is on his toes. Already the mission has notified us that our school quarters in India will have to be enlarged to accommodate the scholars. Where the funds are coming from we do not know but let us all hope, pray and act when such time comes that the necessary funds may be found so that the good work may go forward. Encouraging is it to know the standing of our school in India. Let me quote form a letter from Mr. Minnis: "During the past two years, while our receipts have remained the same, the school has been forced to grow. Last year our total enrollment was only sixty-six boys, while this year we have one hundred boys on the roll. It is true that a number of these boys are day students but for these we must supply books and equipment. Possibly we could have prevented the school from growing but it is a rule that all the children in the mission are to be sent to school as soon as they come old enough. In this way we have received several new boys. I am proud to say that we have several outside boys (two Hindu and ten Mohammedan) because our schol is doing as good if not better work than the best schols in the city. This year we have boys who formerly went to the first school in Dhulia. We also have some trom other missions as we have better trained teachers than they can find in many other schools and our boys stand very high in the government examinations. As a matter of fact, it is said that we have the first school in the whole of West Khandesh, which is saying more than a little. There were about four hundred boys who came to Dhulia for the government final examinations. Out of this number less than one hundred boys passed but seventy-five per cent of ours passed."

Such reports are most gratifying and ought to be an incentive for willing, ready and generous support for such splendid work.

The work among the girls is equally gratifying. There are now seventy-one girls enrolled in our school in the girls' compound receiving just as good training as the boys. And both the boys and girls brought thus constanty under Christian influence and training. In both schools are held regular religious services.

Some Special Financial Needs

Like the work at home so in India there are always the needs for special over and above the regular needs. May I mention three that, it seems to me, ought to bring immediate response.

First, scholarships for five boys to pay their way through High School for one year. These scholarships come at $50.00 per year. What a privilege to have fifty of our dollars to work in the education of a boy in India to grow into manhood under Christian environment and training and then to give his life in the uplift of India! Who will take these scholarships?

Second, there are two boys in a Teacher's Training College. Half of their expenses are being met by relatives. $30.00 is needed for each boy to give him this Teacher's Training course. Will not some one send the $60.00 or some two the $30.00 each?

Third, "All the boys living in the school receive everything from your hands. As they are our boys we feel it only right to try to give them a small gift at Christmas time. It is also a rule to give each teacher about two dollars and each laborer about one dollar at that time. In this land a little goes a long way but we really need that little. So will you please in some way try to send us fifty or sixty dollars for Christmas at the Boys' Schol?" I have quoted from a letter from Mr. Minnis. Certainy a word to the wise is sufficient. I am praying and expectantly awaiting the arrival of these dollars. The opportunity is yours, the joy is theirs, the glory is the heavenly Father's. Who will be the first respond?

SAMPLES AND ORDERS

The sample copies of the Rally Day service have been sent to nearly three thousand Methodist Protestant pastors and church leaders. With the samples have gone order cards. When these are filled out and returned the package is made up and sent out immediately. On September 7th the number of orders received totaled 164 which is twice the number ever before received this early in the fall. It is an encouraging indication of interest and desire to support the work the Board of Education is trying to do.

No special date is set for the Rally Day service. The last Sunday in September and the first two Sundays in October are the days usually chosen, with the largest number coming to second Sunday in October. The day most convenient for the local church should be selected. But always plenty of time ought to be allowed for adequate preparation.

The Board is naturally interested in the offerings. Our goal this year is $25,000 which means the average offering by the local church must be increased at least fifty per cent. An increasing number of our churches are raising their full educational quota on Rally Day. If more would do this it would greatly strengthen our usefulness. Our resources must be much greater if we are to function effectively in the interests of Christian education.

If the order from your charge has not been forwarded will you not see that it is sent at once? Send them to Board of Education, Frank W. Stephenson, Executive Secretary, 613 W. Diamond Street, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pa.

TO ALL WORKERS WITH YOUNG PEOPLE

Dear Leader of Youth:

I want to call your attention to the new Program for Youth that has been issued by the Board of Young People's Work in connection with the International Council of Religious Education. This program, "The Christian Quest—Youth and Jesus' Way of Life," is, in my opinion, the finest material we have yet had for leaders in young people's work.

The material was prepared by the Committee on Religious Education for Youth and approved by the International Council for experimental use. I am so convinced of its value that I have secured 500 copies with the imprint of our Board. I want as many of our leaders as possible to secure the program, make a careful study of it, and use it in their own work with youth.

The following materials are now ready: A loose-leaf "Leader's Manual" for all the materials that will be issued; and the following five booklets:

1. "Qualities of Effective Leadership"—Pointing out the qualities which are needed for leadership and particularly the ways in which leaders who desire to enlarge their work may find means for growth and development.

2. "How a Leader Proceeds With a Group"—Helps to answer the question, "Where shall we begin and how shall we carry on effectively?"

3. "How to Study Individual Growth"—Aids to an understanding of the individual boy or girl by means of a very splendid evaluation chart. As the needs of the individual are understood, the needs of the entire group become more evident, and program building becomes a question of deciding what the group needs most.

4. "How a Leader Uses Organization"—A study of the various plans of organization possible with a group of young people. The leader may then use the plan of organization that will enable the group to carry on the program most effectively.

5. "Program Suggestions for Group Leaders"—An answer to the need for suggestions as to things that may be done by the group. The following subjects are dealt with: Athletics, Camping, Church Life, Collections, Community Life, First Aid, Club Life, Handicraft, Health Education, Hobbies, Music, Nature Study, Reading, School, Sex Education, Thrift, Vocational Guidance, Work, and World Friendship.

All of these five booklets may be secured from our office for 60 cents, postpaid. The loose-leaf binder is a very attractive one that will not only hold the five booklets but has room for other material you may wish to add later. The price of the binder is 50 cents. The binder and the five booklets may be secured for $1.10, postpaid.

I want to urge every conscientious leader of young people to secure this material. A careful study and practice of the methods and principles suggested cannot fail to improve the work of any leader and increase his efficiency with his group.

As I have stated, we have only 500 copies with the imprint of our Board. I want to urge you, if you wish to have copies of this edition, to order at once. I am sure that you have other teachers and leaders in your church and community who, also, would like to have this material.

Trusting that we may have your order, I am

Yours in His service,

LAWRENCE LITTLE, Executive Secretary.

GLEANINGS FROM RALLY DAY LETTERS

Rev. J. C. Coons is an energetic Indiana pastor. In a recent letter he says, "We are planning for the most elaborate Rally Day the Elwood Church has ever put on. We are striving for a record attendance. We are panning for a church program in the morning following the Sunday School and a Children's Rally Day program in the evening. In the morning service we will call the roll of the church and are getting out a special letter to send to every member asking them to be present to answer to their name. I have also prepared a loyalty chart to which I will ask every member to subscribe and we will close with a great consecration service."

Miss Bettie Ridgway, of Mississippi, writes, "Last week I wrote for Rally Day material. Since then I have seen a sample copy and think it so splendid I am going to ask for additional numbers of the little book entitled 'Training for Service.' These are so full of helpful information that I should like to have enough to provide each family in our church with one."

Mrs. J. F. McKnight, of Indiana, writes, "Do not fail to send copies of 'Jehovah-jireh.' It is wonderful and we want to present it."

Mrs. C. J. Gorham, of Michigan, "Please send extra copies of the pageant. I think it will be fine."

Mrs. Emma P. Shepherd, Tehuacana, Texas, "We had such fine success with our envelopes for Children's Day we wish to try the same method for Rally Day. Even our Home Department and Cradle Roll sent in their envelopes with something in them."

Mr. C. A. Dunkerley, Beaver Falls, Pa., "The reason for ordering extra copies is that we wish to give one to each person on Rally Day, as our dear Mr. Knott was loved by all."

These are some of the evidences of the greetings the Rally Day program material is receiving this year. To September 1st we had received more orders than ever before as early in the fall. There are encouraging evidences that a determined effort will be made to increase the offerings the full 50 per cent suggested by the Board of Education. We have increasing reason to expect the best Rally Day services and offerings in the history of the church.

TO THE SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE N. C. CONFERENCE

As a member of the Board of Education of the General Conference I am appealing to you to observe in your Sunday school, Rally Day. This day is being used by the Sunday schools and churches throughout our denomination for the purpose of getting the folks back to Sunday school after the Summer months and to secure an offering for the work of Education in the Methodist Protestant Church. Our Board is interested in all our Colleges and our Seminary and would like to do for each of them far more than we are able to do. If the General Conference Budget were raised in full by all our Conferences then the Board could do much more than what it is doing. Our own High Point College is to get $5000.00 from our Board this year provided of course, that there is enough raised. By holding Rally Day and by taking an offering for Education you help your own local church, you help the Board to meet its obligations and you help our own institutions. If one Sunday does not suit you, then select another. If the program sent out by our Board cannot be used, then make a program of your own. But by all means take an offering and send it to our Conference Treasurer, Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C., and say it is for the Board of Education.

THE DOUBLE BURDEN OF THE CHINESE WOMAN

It is the opinion of Madame Sun Yat-sen, widow of the founder of the modern Nationalist movement in China, that the women of China bear the double burden of liberating their country and themselves. Everywhere where women and men are suffering from oppression it is the women who are suffering most.

"In addition to the oppressions of economical exploitation which makes the problem of keeping alive a perilous gamble, women in most lands suffer from other bondages. They are deprived of political rights. Social laws discriminate against them. Women, partly by laws, but oftener by custom, are kept in a narrow rut of small duties and forced to lead restricted, starved lives.

"It is not easy to be a woman, and perhaps it is harder to be a woman in China than in any other place in the world. Our economic oppressions have been greater. We have been completely disqualified politically. Education has been reserved almost entirely for the men. Socially our life has been more circumscribed, more bound by customs that have been designed to make a free life the unique heritage of men and an unfree life the heritage of women, than has been the life of women in perhaps any Western land."

It is not easy to be a leader of Chinese women today. In addition to national and economic obstacles, a leader of women is attacked personally by those who think that a woman's life should be spent either in the drawing room or in the kitchen of the house of her lord and master. The Young Women's Christian Association, in daily contact with leaders of women, has long been impressed with the qualities of courage, faith and patience evidenced by the women of China in an effort to better the condition of the women of that vast land. Particularly is courage required when they elect to accept Christ in opposition to the wishes and tradition of relatives and friends. A secretary for the Association says in a recent letter from Shanghai: "The full story of what Chinese Christians have borne in the way of suffering as well as responsibility in these times will not be known for some time to come, perhaps never fully known, but it will be an encouraging tale amid much that is discouraging when it is told."

Continuing: "A luncheon given by the joint committee of Shanghai Women's Organizations proved interesting, because of the international nature of the gathering. I sat between a Dutch lady and an American, with a Chinese and a Japanese beyond that. The occasion was the visit of a Harvard professor of International Law who spoke on the possibilities of international co-operation in government. I began to realize there as never before what a laboratory Shanghai could be for international experimenting, and I wondered whether out of all the chaos and distress of the present some real advance in international understanding may come."

TOBACCO OPPOSED TO MENTAL AMBITIONS

Will H. Brown

All over the country tobacco is proving itself an enemy of mental ambitions. The Bulletin of the Bureau of Education states, after an extensive survey, that out of every 1,000 boys who enter the fifth grade in schools of the United States, only twenty-three graduate from colleges or universities. The other 977 drop out somewhere along the line. Of the 1,000 only 634 enter the eighth grade, and only 342 start in high school. Of the latter, only 139 graduate from high school. Of these only 72 enter any higher institution of learning. A mere handful, figuratively speaking, remain to the finish—23.

Dr. D. H. Kress, of the Washington, D. C., Sanitarium and Hospital, commenting upon the above figures, says: "I recognize there are many causes for this, but the chief, outstanding cause is unquestionably the prevalent use of cigarettes."

He says the boy smoker often drops behind in his classes, and eventually drops out of school, adding: "This explains in part why in the eighth grade in our American schools it is not uncommon to find twice as many girls as boys, and in business colleges three young women to every young man in attendance."

Believing that pupils in school should have the right example, Mayor Bauer, of Lynn, Mass., has asked the school board of that city to discharge any teacher who uses tobacco. He considers it an "immortal practice."

Peter B. Kyne, well known author, says: "I do not now smoke while writing. I find it cuts down my production by fifty per cent."

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION

In the quiet and unobtrusive campaign waged by science to stamp out disease and better man's chance to live out his allotted span of life no other single agency plays a part which is comparable to that of the Rockfeller Foundation. It stands ready to offer its assistance wherever a true need is shown to exist.

The annual report of the Foundation made public by its president, Dr. George E. Vincent, shows that last year it spent the astounding sum of $9,741,474 in promoting world health. Following the admirable policy of co-operating with government agencies, universities, and other institutions, it gave aid to fourteen medical schools in ten countries; it furthered the development of public health training in fifteen institutions in twelve countries and in ten field stations in the United States and Europe; it gave funds to rural health services in 244 counties in the United States and to thirty-four districts in twelve other countries; it provided fellowships for 889 men and women from forty-eight countries; and it paid the travelling expenses of sixty-nine officials on health-study visits.

In addition to these specific grants the Foundation co-operated with the government of Brazil in fighting yellow fever and hookworm; aided various British health undertakings from London to Sydney and Hongkong; worked with France on an anti-tuberculosis campaign; conducted yellow fever surveys on the Gold Coast; aided in the fight against malaria throughout the world; and gave important funds for research in this country.

Its record stands unchallenged. In the progress which has been made in freeing the world of the terrors of plague and epidemic we can see the reward, which is all that the Rockfeller Foundation asks for its wise generosity.—C. E. World.

HAVE YOU A PRAYER LIST?

By Rev. Bourner Allen, D. D.

One who reads the letters of Paul is often struck with the fact that he frequently tells his friends he is praying for them. It is a habit and a confidence which more of us might adopt and practise. Our mission boards issue calendars with the lists of the missionaries in different fields, and ask the people in the churches to pray for them. It broadens our outlook and challenges our interest. I can remember the thrill which has come to me when some good friend has said, "I'm praying for you." Who does not know the influence of a mother's prayers?

An aged minister now retired told a friend of mine the other day that since his retirement he had been thinking what possible work he could yet do for the Master. The outcome has been that he began praying for several Sunday schools and churches. Last winter he had a mental prayer list of two hundred and fifty. He could recall the faces of the people for whom he prayed. The list now includes more than three hundred. Inasmuch as prayer is labor, there is no one who is shut in or aged, or unable to speak readily, or who has a narrow circle of friends, but can have a prayer list as wide as the world, and so lay hold of the promises of God.

"Making mention of thee in my prayers!" How the heart of Philemon must have thrilled when Paul wrote that message to him! How deep must have been his purpose to respond to such fellowship and trust! How much encouragement have we ourselves brought to others after this fashion?—C. E. World.

—Until we stop producing so much for war and begin to produce more for peace there can be no peace, no real prosperity. Workmen all around the world are marching and countermarching endlessly, producing nothing, wasting much; other armies are toiling ceaselessly at prodigious tasks —building battleships, guns, forts, and heaping up vast stores to be wasted and destroyed. Until they are demobilized they must be carried on the backs, supported out of the savings, of those engaged in useful industry. Then, too, past and half-forgotten wars still hold the world in mortmain; this century is still paying the war bills of long-dead kings and statesmen.—Saturday Evening Post.

OUR STORY PAGE

THE MENDED VASE

Jose awoke early and looked at the rising sun. It seemed as happy as the boy, for it was smiling on the waters of the canal. Jose hurried to dress in his best white trousers and blouse and flung a colored scarf over one shoulder. Then he called to his sister, Juana, who was still asleep.

When Juana finally came from the house in her white cotton dress and bright shawl she seemed to be the only one in all nature that did not smile. "I don't want to go to the city," she complained while they were eating their breakfast of baked meal cakes. "I want to stay at home and finish the lace that I am making."

"Oh, but today we are to take the pottery to the American senor."

Still Juana did not smile. She plodded along slowly in her bare feet, helping Jose to put their father's clay pottery in the flat-bottomed boat. The last time that they had been to the city market with pottery to sell they had met the American. He had been sauntering along among the people seated on the ground under huge umbrellas, for that was the way they sold their wares. And there he had found the children with their father's clay vases and dishes. The American was very rich and was making a collection of all manner of pottery. He told the children that the next time they came to the city they must bring the pottery to his home, for he wanted first chance to buy their best dishes.

There were so many boats on the canal this morning that they traveled side by side. Juana was still cross as they floated toward the city. So she was not careful as she helped with the boat. Suddenly bump! crash! the children's boat jammed into a lower boat on its way to market.

When the boats were again separated, Jose explained: "Oh, the pottery! What if it is broken?" He unwrapped the pieces, and one by one found them unharmed. Then he came to the last piece. It was the finest of all—the one that the American would be sure to want. It was a big vase for flowers and had a woman's face on one side. Slowly Jose's fingers moved over it. The bottom was all right, the middle wasn't cracked, the head was there. But, oh, the face was spoiled, for the lips had been broken!

"Oh, what will we do?" both of the children asked at once.

It was some time before Jose spoke. "I have some clay here in the boat that I was to take to the senor. He wanted to examine it to see what the dishes were made from. I will try to mend the lips," he said.

"But it won't get dry and harden so soon," Juana declared.

"No, but it is the best I can do," Jose replied. Finally they came to the senor's home and showed him the clay dishes. "I don't care much for these," he said when he had looked at the pieces. "Haven't you any more?"

"I have one more," Jose answered. "It was the nicest of all. But the lips got broken and I tried to mend it."

"Let me see it," the senor demanded.

The boy brought it. "Please, senor," he explained, "I couldn't get the lips right. They were straight before, and I couldn't get them just right."

The American looked at the vase. "I will buy this one," he said.

"You will buy it?" the children asked in bewilderment.

"Yes," the American answered. "Don't you see what you have done, boy?" he asked. "You have mended it with a smile. A smile will mend a quarrel, will mend a broken heart, will mend more things than all the clay in the world."

So that day which had started to be spoiled was mended, too.—Christian Observer.

MRS. INGALLS' WATCH-DOG

Mrs. Ingalls lived in Burma, but one day when she was visiting in America, she saw a dog in a store window. He was a fine fellow to look at and she wanted him, so she said to the man who was with her: "I wish I could take that dog back to Burma with me."

"But why?" asked the man, and when Mrs. Ingalls told him he nodded, and would you believe it? he could not get the dog out of his mind; so several months later you are to picture this same gentleman walking down the same street to buy this same dog to be sent to this same Mrs. Ingalls. No doubt she was tremendously surprised and delighted when she unpacked him, for I quite neglected to say that he was not a lively dog like yours—he hadn't a bone or a hair in or on his entire body! For he was made of bronze. The most sensible kind of a dog to have, some people think. Certainly Mrs. Ingalls felt that way about it as she set her new dog out on her lawn. His bronze tail was up in the air exactly as if he had been stopped in the middle of wagging it, his head was realistically cocked, his feet looked exactly as if they could run and leap and paw and scratch. But he did none of these things. He simple stood there. Quite motionless. Quite barkless. And yet the commotion he caused!

Swarms of brown people from the village thronged on that missionary's lawn.

"Why has the white mamma put this dog on her lawn?" was everybody's question, exactly as Mrs. Ingalls had hoped. So she came outdoors to explain:

"You see, I am alone a great deal, and I need a watch-dog to safeguard me, and take care of me in the night."

"Watch-dog?" the people exclaimed, pityingly. "But this dog can't bark!" "This dog can't see!" "This dog can't bite!" "He can't warn you of burglars!" "He's simply no good at all; don't put your trust in him, teacher, or something will surely harm you. He can't drive anything away. He's only bronze."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Ingalls, surprised. "I can't understand your saying this about my dog. I really can't. For how about your idols? They are only bronze and wood and stone, yet you trust them to take care of you. They can't see any better than my watch-dog. They can't hear. They can't move. And yet you think they watch over you. O my dear friends and neighbors, how many, many times I have told you that the Lord God is the one true God who made heaven and earth and each of us. How often I have begged you to put away your useless, helpless idols and turn to Him."

The people went home. They thought it all over. They had to pass Mrs. Ingalls' watch-dog a dozen times a week, and although he was so silent he preached at them. "As a watch-dog I'm as useless as your foolish gods!" the dog seemed to say. And it made a tremendous impression on them. They couldn't forget it. For they knew perfectly well that if Mrs. Ingalls was not safe with her dog then they were not safe with their idols.—Selected.

THE LITTLE GIRL AND THE UMBRELLA

In a time of great drought, a prayer meeting had been appointed in a country schoolhouse. One little girl going to that meeting carried with her a large umbrella.

"What do you want your umbrella for?" asked a wise old neighbor. "There is not a cloud in the sky."

The little girl looked up simply and asked modestly, "But are we not going to pray for rain?"

During the meeting a pelting rain came down, and that little girl was the only one who got home dry.—Selected.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Littleton Circuit.—We began our special meeting second Sunday in August at Hawkins Chapel with Rev. A. D. Shelton as our pulpit help. Brother Shelton did good preaching at every service and we had a great revival in the church with three to join the church. Our people were highly pleased with Brother Shelton's preaching and fell greatly in love him.

The third Sunday in August we were at Weaver's Chapel with Rev. G. W. Holmes to do our preaching. Brother Holmes' messages were good and very spiritual. We had a good meeting with eight to join the church. Brother Holmes endeared himself to our people and they will be glad to have him come again.

The first Sunday in September we were at Corinth church. Brother Shelton was with us again and in his usual way presented the truth with much earnestness and power. The church here was greatly helped and one joined the church. We had all-day services with dinner on the ground. Congregations were good after Monday. Many expressed themselves saying they were enjoying the services and we believe they did, for they kept on coming until the last.

This ends our meetings for this year. We have greatly enjoyed all of our meetings and we have been much helped ourselves in these meetings. J. B. O'BRIANT.

Mebane.—It has been some time since we have reported but we hope no one has taken that as an evidence that we have been idle all the while. Our work is going along nicely. The congregations have held up well during the warm weather. The pastor and family have been well supplied with fruits, vegetables, and many other tokens of kindness.

We are now enjoying a two weeks' vacation which we feel the need of very much. We have been in the regular work for 26 years and this is the second vacation we have had during that time. We haven't words to express our appreciation of this kindness.

On September 8th the church and community was made sad by the death of William Anderson Terrell, one of the aged citizens of this section. He would have been 79 years old had he lived till September 10th. The large congregation present at his funeral was an evidence of the high esteem in which he was held. He leaves nine children to mourn their loss. Our hearts go out in sympathy for his noble sons and daughters. May the Lord comfort and keep them. The funeral was held in Mebane M. P. church by the pastor, assisted by Rev. T. M. Johnson, Rev. B. M Williams, and Rev. Mr. Fleming, a pastor of Hawfield Presbyterian church. EDW. SUITS.

Asheboro.—For the past several weeks we have been moving along about as usual. The fourth Sunday in August while the writer was assisting Dr. Johnson in a meeting at Gibsonville, Rev. W. F. Kennett filled the appointment here at eleven o'clock and Brother Robert Lloyd preached at the evening hour. Both of these brethren made good impressions upon the congregation. Brother Kennett is well known here, having lived in Asheboro while serving Richland Circuit. The people are always glad for him to return. Brother Lloyd is one of our own members, being a bookkeeper in an office here. The people are always pleased to hear him.

We are now beginning to think in terms of the approaching Annual Conference. On Thursday evening of this week there will be a meeting of the members of the church for the purpose of naming committees to take care of the Conference.

Our Rally Day service will be held on the fourth Sunday morning of this month. In the hope of keeping the entire Sunday school for the morning service, we will have a short session of the Sunday school, then at ten-thirty all will go into the church auditorium where a service one hour long will be held, closing at 11:30. We have set as our financial goal for the day $100.00.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society's picnic this year was held in the social room of the church. The society from Why Not and a few from Randleman were present. The address of the afternoon was delivered by Rev. J. Clyde Auman who is at home on furlough from Japan and who is a native of Randolph county. Our people were delighted to have him with us. After the address the bountiful supper was spread and all had a good time together. J. E. PRITCHARD.

Dulin's, Mocksville Charge.—Our revival meeting began the first Sunday in September and came to a close Friday night. Our pastor, Rev. J. T. Sisk, held the services Sunday and Brother Short of Concord came Sunday night and took charge of the services. Brother Short preached forceful and soul-stirring sermons. And there were six converts. The meeting wasn't near what we had prayed and hoped for. But it didn't look as the Gospel had any effect on some of the unsaved. Brother Short preached almost direct to unsaved and tried to help them to see where they were, but they didn't heed.

We appreciated his coming back and will be glad to have him come this way again. We want to thank the Bethel and Union Chapel people for coming from time to time and helping with the singing. We were indeed glad to have these folks worship with us. I don't guess I will report any more soon. I am leaving for college tomorrow. If I don't, I wish to say we appreciate Brother Sisk's work and for staying with us four years. I feel that he has done splendid work for this church and also all the churches. As I have stated before I thought that if we could keep him four years this church would be a leading church.

The door of the church will be open next Sunday and the Lord's Supper administered.

Best wishes to Herald and its readers.

LEONA HENDRIX, Reporter.

West Forsyth Circuit.—Closed a successful meeting last night, September 11th. Ten members added. There were between 15 and 20 conversions and reclamations. One elderly man now living in Iowa was at home on a visit for the first time in 18 years yielded himself to the Master and left next day for his far distant home in the west.

C. H. WHITAKER, Pastor.

Friendship, Mt. Hermon Charge.—The Woman's Home Missionary Society held its regular monthly business meeting at the home of the president, Mrs. D. I. Offman, on Route 7. The meeting was presided over by the president. The roll was called, minutes read and approved, and the treasurer's report was given. Several committees were appointed by the president.

The society pledged another scholarship fund to High Point College. The treasurer was instructed to send the deficit for the furnishing of a room to the College for this year.

We are very greatly pleased to have Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett move into our community and still more pleased to learn that they are going to unite with our church. We welcome them.

Several of our young people entered High Point College as follows: Misses Irene Patterson, and Hollie Loy and Mr. Kenneth Holt, also Miss Vista Garrett who has just moved into our community. We hope for them a successful year in college.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society presented "Son John" at Friendship School House September 3. The play was enjoyed by all present. The proceeds realized from the play amounted to about twenty dollars. Those taking part in the play were as follows: Misses Margaret and Louise Homewood, Madge, Gladys and Grace Murray, Irene and Mae Patterson, Clarice Holt and Callie Isley; Dr. H. M. Patterson, Dean and French Patterson, Kenneth Holt, Clifton Sharpe, and Norman Johnson.

Our pastor, Rev. Mr. Carroll, has delivered to us some fine and inspiring sermons during the year.

Miss Louise Homewood was the leader on Sunday evening for a very interesting meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society.

Our Sunday school attendance is very good.

CALLIE E. ISLEY, Reporter.

Jerusalem.—Our revival meeting began last Sunday morning with a sermon by Rev. M. Ivey Crutchfield, of Greenville, S. C., the former pastor of Jerusalem church. Brother Crutchfield discussed the theme, "God's Plan for a Revival." Much favorable comment was heard concerning the sermon. At the close of the sermon a number of people responded to a proposition to pray and work for the revival.

At the night service Rev. M. C. Henderson, of Denton, preached his first sermon which was a very able discourse on the cleansing of Naaman, the leper. When the invitation was given to the unsaved a number of young men came forward asking the Christian people to pray for them.

The meeting is starting with considerable interest shown on the part of both the Christians and the unsaved. Both services were well attended last Sunday. The meeting will probably continue through all this week, services being held only at night, beginning at 7:30 o'clock. Brother Henderson will preach each night.

We were glad to have a large number of visitors at the services last Sunday. Among the visitors at the night service were two members of our new church at Kannapolis. They were Brothers Henderson and McCommons. They traveled over forty miles to the service, which shows a keen interest in religious work. We were also glad to have Rev.

C. O. Leonard, of the Cid church, present at both services last Sunday and appreciated his assistance in the services.

C. B. WAY, Pastor.

Davidson Charge.—Our special meeting began at Liberty church the third Sunday in August. Rev. T. F. McCulloch preached to us at the eleven o'clock service. Brother McCulloch is a former pastor of this charge and he is greatly admired by these people. His message was well received.

Rev. J. W. Frank preached to us at the two o'clock service. Brother Frank is a returned missionary from Japan. A member of M. E. church, South. He is a native of Davidson county, a brother of W. A. Frank and Mrs. B. K. Taylor of Handy.

His many friends will be glad to know that he is in good health and happy in the work of the kingdom across the seas.

Rev. B. M. Williams came to us on Sunday evening and did the preaching through the meeting that closed on Thursday evening. His sermons were inspiring and helpful to all, and the people greatly appreciate the splendid service he rendered. There were eight professions during the meeting and one joined the church.

Our special meeting began at Pleasant Grove on the fourth Sunday in August. Rev. T. E. Pierce came to us for the first service and did all the preaching through the meeting that came to a close Friday night.

Brother Pierce seemed to be at his best and the large congregations that greeted him at 'most every service heard the Word gladly. It was a good meeting. The church was greatly revived. Fifteen professed faith in Christ and six united with the church.

On the first Sunday in September we began our meeting at Lineberry church. Rev. E. A. Bingham was present for the eleven o'clock service. He preached a splendid sermon. After the service Brother Bingham drove back to one of his churches to conduct a funeral.

Rev. J. W. Frank preached to us at the afternoon and night service. He preached two good sermons and labored with us faithfully all during the meeting.

Brother Bingham came back Sunday night and did the preaching until the close, Friday night.

His preaching was entirely satisfactory, and his stay among us was pleasant. Eleven professed faith in Christ, and twenty-two have united with the church.

Ten came from other churches, twelve were baptized and joined the church for the first time. It might be interesting to know that fifteen of this number are adults.

This has been a good meeting in many different ways.

On next Sunday, the 18th, we will be engaged in the camp meeting at Chapel Hill. Rev. J. M. Morgan will be the preacher in charge, and I hope that preachers who read this and can, will come to the meeting. If you can't come pray for us.

C. E. RIDGE, Pastor.

Harmony Church, Yarborough.—We began our special meeting at Harmony on Thursday morning, August 25th, with Brother Ashburn doing the preaching. We had good congregations and good services during the entire meeting. Brother Ashburn was at his best here also, and if anything did better preaching than while with us at Yarborough. We have never listened to finer, plainer, gospel messages than he brought to us here and many asked for prayer; one night there were two fine young ladies reclaimed. Brother Ashburn had to leave us on Thursday morning early, and the congregation asked your humble servant the pastor to carry on the meeting for a couple of days longer, which I very reluctantly consented to do. So I preached for them on Thursday morning, and evening and Friday morning and evening; Thursday night ten came and fifty or more came for a prayer; Friday night we closed and baptized and received into the church five fine young people, three girls and two fine boys. Brother Ashburn's preaching paved the way for me to do this, and we were delighted with the success of the meeting at the church at Harmony. We made up a purse of $16.00 at Harmony, and at Yarborough we made up a purse of $20.25, both of which were presented to Brother Ashburn for his services.

Brother M. Ivey Crutchfield was with us for one day and night and he very kindly consented to preach for us one time at Harmony, and he gave us a splendid sermon which was enjoyed by all who heard it; the pastor heard a number of people commenting on the fine sermon by Brother Crutchfield. We were glad to have both of these brethren with us and enjoyed their stay very much, and we hope that they may come again very soon.

The time is getting very short until the Annual Conference, and we are hoping that we may be able to go down to the conference with a good report, with all claims paid in full.

We are planning to hold our rally day service some time during the month of October, and trust and pray that we may have a real good service at both churches on the work.

E. G. COWAN, Pastor.

Burlington.—Mary Sue, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. T. Stafford, was laid to rest at Moore's Chapel last Wednesday. She was permitted to stay with these fond parents only eight days, but long enough to entwine herself tenderly and strongly about their hearts. We sympathize with them deeply in their sorrow. There will be much to comfort them. God will be gracious and heaven will be nearer.

Mrs. Stafford has been seriously ill, and Mr. Stafford has been sick for a month. Both are better now, and we trust their recovery may soon be complete. S. W. TAYLOR.

Lexington, State Street.—We are much pleased with the increase in Sunday school attendance since vacation days are over and folks are "settled" back home again.

Brother Bethea goes to Harmony on the Halifax circuit next Friday to hold revival services. Brother Clyde Auman will preach for us next Sunday and Dr. Hardie the following Sunday.

The C. E. Union of the city enjoyed a novel outing Wednesday night of last week. An Indian trail was marked out to a spring about two miles from town, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Lanier being the "squaw" and "chief" who preceded and left marks by which the other "Indians" found their tent near the spring where supper was cooked and much enjoyed by all the hungry Indians after their long tramp. The regular C. E. service was held at the tent.

A Junior C. E. society was organized last Sunday afternoon with a good enrollment.

A Rally Day program is soon to be prepared by the Sunday school to be given some time soon. The date has not been definitely fixed yet.

Graham Church.—At our third quarterly conference Brother J. L. Amick was elected delegate to the Annual Conference. Our special meeting will embrace the first Sunday in October with Rev. J. Clyde Auman as pulpit help, and Brother Gilbert Amick as choir leader.

My people gave me a vacation of two weeks during the month of August which I appreciated very much. Sometime ago I had Brother Phil Dixon to make me a suit of clothes; when I went to pay for them he said, "O forget that." I didn't want to forget it, but I thanked him for his kindness. For some time the doctor didn't think it best for me to drive a car, but about month ago he decided I was able to drive, but I didn't have a car, so Miss Blanche Fuller got busy among some of the church folks, and they gave me a check for two hundred and fifty dollars toward buying a car, and my children gave me fifty dollars apiece, making one hundred and fifty more. I thank each and every one for their gift. We are right much behind with our budget but we are going to put forth a special effort to try to get it before Conference.

D. R. WILLIAMS.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Circuit.—Our pastor, Rev. M. I. Crutchfield, is away taking a rest on the advice of a physician. We are praying that he will be restored to health and be back among us soon. Mr. Crutchfield has done much good work down here this year of which we are proud.

Rev. Lee Leonard of Greenville filled the pastor's appointments here yesterday. Both messages were real helpful. The C. E. Society met at 7:30 Sunday evening with Miss Kate Compton as leader. The subject, "How Shall I Spend God's Portion of My Money?" was discussed in a very helpful manner. We are expecting to hold our Rally Day service in the near future.

One of our members, Miss Jessie Belle Smith, was married September 4th to Mr. Dee Pike of Duncan. We wish them much happiness in life. REPORTER.

Yarborough Chapel, Yarborough Charge.—Our special meeting began here on Sunday morning, August 14th, the pastor doing the preaching until Wednesday, when Brother W. F. Ashburn came to us and did the preaching until the next Tuesday night. Brother Ashburn was at his best and did some splendid preaching, but the attendance was not what we had hoped for; the interest was very good, but visible results were not what we had hoped and prayed for. But you can never judge a revival meeting by the visible results. I am sure that the church, and church members in general were greatly revived and helped by Brother Ashburn's fine preaching. We were so glad to have him with us and enjoyed so much the fine Christian fellowship and association with him in the home; hope he comes this way again soon. It was a pleasure indeed to be with him, to have him in the home, and to listen to his splendid gospel messages. We were all greatly benefited by his fine preaching and his short stay with us.

E. G. COWAN, Pastor.

Hope, Chatham Charge.—Our pastor filled his appointment Sunday. The attendance was good and Brother Isley preached a good sermon from the theme, "Lost Opportunities." The text was "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved."

Sunday school attendance was good and we are planning a rally day service for the second Sunday in October. As that will be our last appointment before conference meets, we are hoping for a large crowd and a good time then.

We are anxious that our pastor may be able to carry a good report to conference from this charge. KARA ANDREW, Reporter.

Richland Circuit, Brower Chapel Church.—Our revival meeting began the fourth Sunday in August and continued for 10 days. Our pastor did all the preaching except three sermons. Rev. A. G. Dixon was with us on Sunday, of the beginning of the meeting and delivered two wonderful sermons.

Our pastor, Rev. Love, did some wonderful preaching. The results were good; thirty-two conversions. Quite a number will be added to the church. The church was greatly revived. To God be all the glory.

MRS. M. C. HENLEY.

THE CALMETTE VACCINE AGAINST TUBERCULOSIS

Dr. A. Calmette of the Pasteur Institute in France has developed a vaccine which he thinks will immunize infants against tuberculosis. His vaccine consists of an emulsion of live tubercle bacilli of very low virulence grown upon a culture-medium of oxbile mixed with glycerine. Calmette claims that through repeated cultures over a long period of time he has developed a race of tubercle bacilli which have lost all of their original power to produce tuberculosis, but which have the property of stimulating the body cells of infants to form anti-bodies or fighting elements which protect them against tuberculosis.

Calmette began using his vaccine in infants in 1921. Since that time he and a number of other physicians in Europe have used the vaccine in several thousand children. He claims that their results show that the vaccine will protect infants against tuberculosis in 99 per cent of cases for a period of three years or longer.

While authorities generally recognize Dr. Calmette as one of the foremost workers in tuberculosis they are somewhat doubtful as to the value of his vaccine. Research workers in this country are not entirely satisfied that the vaccine is entirely harmless. It is given in three doses at 48-hour intervals, each dose containing four hundred million live tubercle bacilli. The Research Committee of the National Tuberculosis Association which is giving more intense scientile study to the subject of tuberculosis than any other organization of the world, is greatly interested in the Calmette vaccine, but before they are willing to recommend it for infants they are going to try it out on animals, both to test its value as an immunizing agent against tuberculosis and to make sure that it will not have any harmful effects. This Research Committee will give the vaccine an absolutely fair trial, and if it is found to be of value, they will be sure to lend it their endorsement.

At present the only known way to protect infants and children against tuberculous infection is to make sure that they do not come in contact with tubercle bacilli. For details of the necessary precautions to secure such protection write the Extension Department, Sanatorium, N. C.—By P. P. McCain, M. D., Superintendent State Sanatorium for Treatment of Tuberculosis.

SMOKELESS BREATHING AIR

I'm just a boy, not very high
But I would know the reason why
A dog or cat of pedigree
Should have advantage over me.
I saw a sign not long ago,
Just at the door of a dog show:
"Don't smoke in here, for don't you see
These dogs and cats of pedigree
Are injured by the poisoned stuff
You get in cigarettes and snuff,
Cigars and pipes and all of that,
So with your poison, now please 'scat!'"
For if it hurts a dog, you see,
I'd like to know what about me?
They tell me it will kill a cat,
And I'm more precious far than that.
Now, I don't like the nasty smell;
When smoke gets thick I don't feel well.
If you must smoke, sir, please be fair
And give US smokeless breathing air.

—Maude M. Aldrich.

UPPER OR LOWER

A man had just informed the Pullman agent that he wanted a Pullman berth.

"Upper or lower?" asked the agent.

"What's the difference?" asked the man.

"A difference of fifty cents in this case," replied the agent. "The lower is higher than the upper. The higher price is for the lower. If you want it lower, you'll have to go higher. We sell the upper lower than the lower. In other words, the higher is lower. Most people don't like the upper, although it is lower on account of being higher. When you occupy an upper you have to get up to go to bed and get down when you get up. You can have the lower if you pay higher. The upper is lower than the lower because it is higher. If you are willing to go higher, it will be lower."

"Thank you," said the man; "I think I will stay at home."—From "Wise and Otherwise" file of R. L. McKellar, F. F. T. M., Louisville, Ky.

FASHIONABLE MASCULINITY

He: "Who is that handsome boy with the cropped head " She: "That's my cousin Betty." "And the blonde man with the monocle?" "That's my younger sister Lu." Laughing, but embarrassed, "So I suppose the other young man in the dinner jacket is your elder sister?" "No, that's my grandmother!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

SIZING IT UP

I see no reason, says a writer in The Methodist Recorder, why the pulpit should escape criticism any more than the press does. Both preachers and editors have very diverse and sometimes queer folk among their hearers and readers, he continued. Yes. Neither preachers nor editors can ever give perfect satisfaction. The same sermon or the same article will have very different effects on different persons. After a discourse by Bishop Creighton the following comments were made:

(1) Clergyman: "I have not heard a sermon like that for twenty-five years."

(2) Lady Jebb: "I have never heard a sermon like that in England."

(3) A Prince: "I don't call that a sermon, but an essay."

(4) A Colonel: "It was too deep for me. I went to sleep."—The Christian Register.

—Each poultry flock in North Carolina should be gone over carefully at least once a year, states Dr. Kaupp. It is a useless waste of money to feed unprofitable birds during the winter months especially when so much of the food has to be purchased or prepared. Any time during the year that a bird becomes unfit for profitable production, that bird should be used on the table or sold. With some reluctance the Scot searched his pockets and at last produced a nickel. "Have ye got change?" he asked, anxiously.

"Sorry," replied his friend. "I'm afraid I haven't."

Mac thought for a minute. "Then ye can just gie me four more knives," he said.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Powell

The hearts of many were made sad last Tuesday afternoon when Frances, the ten-year old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. L. Powell, of Triplet, Va., was accidently shot by her brother (Henry). The accident occured this way: On Monday afternoon, hawks got after chickens; Mrs. Powell told Bryant to get the gun and watch for the hawks. He [illegible] shell in gun and went out but saw no hawk. He came in and laid gun down on floor of front porch and it lay there till Tuesday about 3:10 p.m., when Henry walked out on porch and saw the gun lying there, picked it up and went to take load out and put gun up. He didn't know of anyone on porch but himself. Frances was upstairs asleep but had gotten up, taking her dolls and walked out on porch barefooted and sat down on rocker. The gun fired in extracting shell. Just how it was caused no one will ever know. Frances caught bottom part of load in her eyes and forehead, proving fatal. All was done that could be done. She died Wednesday about 3:30 a.m. in the Roanoke Rapids Hospital. Frances was born July 29, 1917. She was baptized by Rev. J. A. Burgess when only about two months old in their home in Lexington, N. C. She was greatly loved by all her teachers and associates. Her father said he had never heard her speak of any difference with any child she ever associated with. She loved them all and seemed to be loved by all. One of Brother Powell's members said, he never knew a child so generally loved and such a favorite among everyone, that all the little boys and girls seemed to be foolish about Frances. She professed faith in Christ at about eight years old. She had not joined the church as her mother thought her too young. She said to her mother just a few days ago, "Mama, I want to join the church when we have our meeting—I think I am old enough now." God always seemed close to her. She would daily knell and pray to God. She knew papa loved flowers, and from a child if she could get hold of a pretty bower she would take it to papa to wear. If the people who covered her grave with such beautiful flowers could have known how much it meant to a father to cover the grave of one who had from a child selected beautiful flowers for papa to wear.

Brother Powell was more than forty miles from home when the sad news reached him. However, he made the trip home in forty-five minutes. Thereupon learning that Frances had been taken to the Roanoke Rapids Hospital. Dismounted from his car accepted the kind invitation of R. C. Weaver who soon landed him in the Hospital where he remained until the end came.

Surely, no truer people ever lived than his members as demonstrated by the large funeral procession that accompanied them to the burial and those who stayed with the prostrated and stricken mother who was not able to come.

The funeral services were conducted in Flat Rock Methodist Protestant church Thursday afternoon, September 8, at 4 o'clock and interment was made in the Flat Rock cemetery. The writer was assisted in the funeral by Rev. R. A. Hunter of Henderson.

"You have lost a child? No, she is not lost to you who is found in Christ; she is not sent away, but only sent before, like a star which, when going out of sight does not die or vanish, but shines in another hemisphere. She shines in heaven and may light you thitherward."

She leaves to mourn her death a mother, father, three brothers, four sisters and a host of relatives. To the bereaved let me say while she was only a bud plucked from earth to bloom in heaven, our loss is heaven's gain. We should not weep for her like we would for those in whom we have no hope, but rejoice in the thought that we can be with her again, for the Lord said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." May the grace of God sustain the family in the hour of their bereavement and the Holy Spirit fill the vacancy of their hearts.

Nicholson

On September 1, 1927, Miss Addie L. Nicholson passed away. She had been in declining health for a period of over three years and an invalid for several months. During all her illness she was so hopeful, patient and trusted in her Savior for the best. She had been a faithful member of Mt. Hermon M. P. Church since early life. She always took an active part in all church work.

She was a charter member of the Philathea class. She was always glad to serve the class in any way she could. Until a few months ago she expected to be back in the class, as she expected to be well. Owing to the esteem in which she was held in this class be it resolved:

First—While we, as a class, feel her loss keenly, we submit all things to Him who doeth all things for the best.

Second—We realize that our loss is her eternal gain and we shall always cherish her memory. We shall try to live nearer the Savior so that we may be permitted to meet her when we are called to the Beyond.

Third—We wish to express our sympathy to the bereaved father, mother, brother and sisters. While her place is vacant in the home we realize she has gone to that Heavenly Home not made by hands.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes, a copy sent the bereaved family, a copy sent the M. P. Herald and the county papers.

Nicholson

Addie Letitia Nicholson departed this life September 1, 1927, being 36 years, one month and 27 days old.

In early life she accepted Christ and joined Mt. Hermon church. To her church and to her home and community to the day of her death she gave the best that she had and all she had. For several years she suffered much but it was all to the glory of God, for through it all she held on to Christ, and now she has gone to be with him forever. She will be missed but never forgotten.

McPherson

Early Friday morning, September 2, 1927, Mr. James M. McPherson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver and Debbie McPherson, went home to God, aged 78 years, four months and 26 days. He was twice married. First to Miss Lizzie McPherson. To this union were born two children, Mrs. A. L. Foust, now living, and John, who died when quite small. Mrs. McPherson also died and in January, 1879, he was again married to Miss Nancy Clark. To this union were born three sons: Messrs. T. W., R. L., and O. R., and two daughters, Mrs. Caleb McPherson and Mrs. Lawrence McPherson. All are living. He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife, six children, twenty-three grand-children, and seven great-grand-children. Mr. McPherson was one of the oldest members of Bethel church. He was a good man and will be sadly missed both in the church and community, for he was a kind neighbor and had many friends. His father, mother and all his brothers and sister preceded him in death. I am ready and willing to go, he said. There isn't a thing in my way. A glorious death. Oh may we all be able to say—There is nothing between us and God. I have seen him very happy here, but we know that he was happier the day he left behind all suffering and care and went to be with Jesus. We know also that there was rejoicing in the Home-land when he came. We sorrow and are sad with those who sorrow on earth, but in Father's home they rejoice, because another soul is safe at home. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved family, yet we know that they sorrow not as those who have no hope, but can some day, with God's help, meet him, never to part again, in a land so grand and beautiful that in our imagination we can not even conceive of it, for "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

Funeral services were very impressively conducted by Rev. J. A. Burgess, assisted by Rev. G. W. Holmes, and interment was in Bethel cemetery, Sunday, September 4th. A large audience of relatives and friends assembled to pay their last tribute of love. Many beautiful flowers completely covered the mound, but far more beautiful is the home of the soul. As we think of him, let us look above and strive to live close to Jesus, and all meet some day, when God wills.

Who, who would live alway, away from his God,
Away from yon Heaven, that blissful abode,
Where rivers of pleasure flow bright o'er the plains,
And the noon-tide of glory eternally reigns.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Prepare me, dear Savior, for glory, my home.

MRS. J. M. FOUST, A Neighbor.

McPherson

James Marcellus, son of Oliver and Deborah McPherson, departed this life September 2, 1927, aged 78 years, four months and 27 days. He was married to Lizzie McPherson and to this union were born two children, Minnie and John Lonnie. His wife and son preceded him to the glory world.

Then he was married to Nancy Clark and to this union were born five children, T. W., Debbie, Maud, B. L., and O. R., all of whom survive him. He also leaves 27 grand-children and seven great-grand-children.

Brother McPherson was a good man, a kind, loving father, a devoted husband and a loyal citizen. For many years he had been a member of Bethel church. He often expressed the joy he found in serving his Lord and his readiness to meet him. The funeral service was conducted by his pastor assisted by G. W. Holmes, his former pastor, and his body laid to rest in Bethel cemetery.

THE CREATION OF MAN

In Gen. 1:26 it seems that God the Father and God the Son and God the Holy Ghost had a consultation in regard to the making of man which reads as follows:

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth."

Genesis 1:27 reads thus: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."

Genesis 2:7 tells us how man was formed: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

How woman was formed is found in Genesis 2: 21, 22: "And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man."

Genesis 2:20 tells us that Adam named the animals: "And Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field."

Psalms 139:14 tells us that man was fearfully and wonderfully made.

Position man occupies: Psalms 8:5, "For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor."

Man's dominion over the works of God: Psalms 8: 6, 7, 8, "Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beast of the field; The fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas."

To those who would teach and say otherwise than what God has said concerning the creation of man, I would say, Man, how readest thou? I would also refer him to 1 Timothy 6: 20, 21, which says: "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called: which some professing have erred concerning the truth." Remember, reader, regardless of what man may say or think, God has the first and last say concerning the crowning act of creation, the creation of man.

OUR GIFTS

The wise may bring their learning,
The rich may bring their wealth,
And some may bring their greatness,
And some bring strength and health.
We, too, would bring our treasures
To offer to the King;
We have no wealth nor learning—
What shall we children bring?

We'll bring Him hearts that love Him,
We'll bring Him thankful praise,
And young souls meekly striving
To walk in holy ways;
And these shall be the treasures
We offer to the King;
And these are gifts that even
The poorest child may bring.

THE WAY OF LIFE

Blest they who seek while in their youth,
With spirit meek the way of truth,
To them the Sacred Scriptures now display
Christ as the only true and living way;
His precious blood on Calvary was given
To make heirs of bliss in heaven.
And e'er on earth the child of God can trace,
The blessings of his Saviour's grace.
For them He bore His Father's frown;
For them He wore the thorny crown;
Nailed to the cross, endured its pain,
This His life's loss might be their gain,
Then haste to choose that better part,
Nor e'er refuse the Lord thy heart,
Lest He declare, "I know you not,"
And deep despair should be your lot,
Now look to Jesus, who on Calvary died,
And trust on Him who there was crucified.

"BOOZE IS BOOZE"

Let us come home to this fundamental fact, that booze is booze. If booze is sold and consumed, you have booze results. It matters not a snap of the finger whether the man gets his alcohol in a bottle of beer, a glass of wine, or a horn of whiskey; whether it is sold by a license holder, a bootlegger, or a brass-buttoned Government official; whether he drinks it from a golden goblet or sucks it from a bottle; whether it is served to him in a public place, a private home, or a den of vice.—B. H. Spence.

—An Englishman strolled in to a dinner where the majority of guests were Scots. He stood the national program as long as he could' then, at the limit of his endurance, he rose to his feet and said:

"I was born an Englishman, I am proud to be an Englishman, and please God I shall die an Englishman!"

There was dead silence for a few moments, until an old Scot got up and said:

"Man, ha'e ye nae ambeetion?"—Exchange.

—The teacher had been lecturing his class on the instinct displayed by animals and birds. He compared it with that of human beings, to the latter's disadvantage.

Having finished his discourse, he invited his pupils to ask questions bearing on the subject. Percy held up his hand.

"Well, Percy," said the teacher, "what is it you want to know?"

"I want to know, sir," replied Percy, "what makes chickens know how big our egg-cups are?"—Epworth Herald.

TO-MORROW

To-morrow—'tis an idle sound,
Tell me of no such dreary thing—
A new land whither I am bound
After strange wandering.

What care I if bright blossoms there
Unfold, and sunny be the field;
If laded boughs in summer air
Their pulpy fruitage yield.

While deck to-day my pleasant bower
Upon my own loved mountain-side
The azure periwinkle-flower
And violet deep-eyed?

Tell me not of to-morrow—calm
In His great hand I would abide
Who fills my present hour with balm,
And trust, whate'er betide.

ONE IS YOUR MASTER — EVEN CHRIST — AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN.

VOLUME XXXIII. GREENSBORO, N. C., SEPTEMBER 22, 1927 NUMBER 45

Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth

Preaching the gospel is a fine art. It requires not only a clear and close knowledge of the truths of the gospel, but it also requires a knowledge of the different classes of men to whom the gospel is to be presented. The object of preaching is not met by simply preaching the truth, but by preaching it in such a way that it will be received by the particular men to whom it is being offered. The fine art of preaching involves the ability to adapt the presentation of gospel truth to the special needs of those who hear. And there is no limit to the application of this principle until we reach the individual man. The spirit of the true preacher prompts him to follow up his public proclamations of the gospel with personal communication as far as he has opportunity to those who hear. The preacher's task is not completed by his public services. His object is to completely Christianize those who hear, and this may call for a process beyond the public preaching. Every true gospel preacher feels a personal interest in the people who hear him preach and he wishes to know that he has so presented the truth that it has been grasped and is being held with vital interest. No farmer is so interested in the growth of the plants that spring from the seed he has sown as is the true preacher in the effects of the gospel as he has preached it. The preacher wishes that all his hearers were good-ground hearers, and he cherishes the hope that all may become such.

No preacher would willingly make the impression that salvation is a cheap thing. But is that impression not made sometimes by representations that salvation is free, and that it can be had just any time you please? As a matter of fact and as a teaching of Scripture, is there not loss as well as mere hazard in postponing salvation? Is not the life-long Christian better prepared for Heaven and will he not have a better Heaven than the man who puts off his return to God to the closing years of his life? People are doing much crooked thinking about the way of salvation, and it devolves upon preachers of the gospel to set the people straight in their conceptions of the way of life. While we cannot save ourselves but must depend upon Christ for salvation, yet is there not something very considerable that we can do and must do in order to experience the salvation of Christ?

The faith in Christ necessary to salvation is a spiritual act or disposition that requires soul-effort. The coming unto Christ is a spiritual journey that is very long to some who have wandered away. The rest that Christ promises us and gives us is not the rest of idleness, but of service—bearing his light burden and wearing his easy yoke.

To correct all the fallacies in the minds of men regarding Christianity makes large demands upon the preacher's art. His is a service of such supreme importance that he should spare no pains in his preparation for the work both in a general way and also in view of each sermon and the classes of men among the hearers. To lead men walking in the ways of death over into the ways of life—what a truly great work it is. Christ is looking to every one he calls to preach to feed both the lambs and the sheep and to lead the lost into the fold.

Rev. J. H. Stowe's Funeral

Last Monday the death of Rev. J. H. Stowe, which occurred Sunday P. M. at 6 o'clock, was heralded abroad by the daily press. The funeral was announced for 11 o'clock on Tuesday. At the time appointed a large company met in First M. P. Church, High Point, for the funeral service. Among the attendants over 30 Methodist Protestant ministers were counted. Dr. George R. Brown was in charge of the service, being assisted by Rev. P. E. Lindley, pastor of the church, and Dr. A. G. Dixon, president of the Annual Conference. Brother Lindley read in subdued voice appropriate selections of Scripture. Brother Dixon, also in subdued tones, led in prayer. A choir sang suitable songs. Dr. Brown's address was impromptu, but impressed us as being more fitting than a studied effort could have been. He dwelt most on the bright aspects of the case—the present experiences of the departed as he enters into the glory of the redeemed. He pictured his meeting with loved ones gone before and imagined them serving as a convoy to conduct him into the presence of the King of Glory to receive the crown of life. He spoke of the departed as a great and good man, one who knew the Gospel and how to present it to others. Brother Stowe was indeed one of our most thoughtful ministers. He thought deeply and came to see clearly where other minds dwell amid mist and fog. He was 74 years old on last February first. The grave had been prepared on a beautiful hillside in the city cemetery. There he will sleep the sleep from which he will be awakened only by the power of God, the mighty power that made Jesus conqueror of death and the grave. But he will not be forgotten. His virtues and his good deeds impressed themselves on many who will delight to cherish his memory.

Choosing a President

A little more than a year hence the American people will be choosing a president. Already there is much casting about for candidates. Both Republicans and Democrats are much exercised over the matter. Unfortunately many of those disturbed by the situation seem to be more influenced by the question as to who can be elected than by the question who will make the best president. What a pity that we cannot all join in seeking the man who will best serve the country rather than the man who will best serve our party. There should be less talk about the honor involved in the office and more thought about the responsibilities that go with the office.

A little more than a month hence the members of our Annual Conference will be engaged in the selection of a man to serve as president of that body for the coming year. If fitness for service should be the first consideration in a president for the nation, not less should it be so in the choice of a man for the presidency of our conference. The office is not a sinecure, but one demanding much earnest work and much prayer for divine guidance. Dr. Dixon is completing his fifth consecutive year in the office and by the law of the church is not eligible for re-election. A successor must be chosen. There are several brethren who loom into prominence because of

ON RURAL CHURCH CONSOLIDATION

By Rev. R. C. Stubbins

The following is a brief of our address at the Summer Conference. The same was asked to be published in the Methodist Protestant Herald.

The advantage of rural church consolidation is no longer a question. It has been proven in business, education and in the rural church of our own denomination. Those denominations that have so far out-stripped ours in growth and usefulness in the state, have used the community church plan at every point possible. These things are before us and have definitely proven the better plan of rural church procedure.

There are a number of hindrances. One is distrusts—a fear on the part of some that the rural church department would take away their churches. The effect of the rural church movement is not to take away anything, but to give more and better service to the country people. And being of the country and in the country I know this is what we need, and want. Another hindrance is, eleven per cent of the people of our church in the state must travel to church by the horse and buggy method. We feel that if the Christian spirit exist, the eighty-nine per cent could provide a way for the eleven per cent. And on the other hand the charges that use the old method would not be expected to consolidate as soon as the one where cars are used altogether.

Then a large number of our country charges are controlled by the old people who are well meaning but rather fixed in their sentiments and ideas and do not desire a different method. We can understand and appreciate their feelings but hope there are not so many who are not willing to use plans that will appeal to the hearts and minds of the younger generations as well as the old.

The cemetery problem has been settled. Many places in North Carolina and other states where rural churches have died or been moved away the cemeteries have been cared for better than ever before. For they then become community cemeteries with a perpetual interest.

One says: "Visiting is made no easier." Visiting of the old routine order is not so much needed when we can bring the people together more often.

Another writer, "We do not want more services"—There is a danger point in this—the freezing man feels "warm."

"Others would come into the territory we leave," says another. Let them "glean," there is no objection—they may do some good.

Advantages: Better church buildings, better leaders, better music and more and better services from the pastor.

How shall we begin? We believe the volunteer system is the best plan at present. We understand this is what the conference most desires. We need more churches like Pleasant Grove and Moriah to step out and ask for full time pastors. They are doing things worth while. We need also some large circuits to volunteer and ask the conference to help them work out a plan of consolidation. We need pastors to volunteer to challenge these churches and charges in their efforts at better things. The fourth quarterly conference is a good time and we are sure if these decisions or requests are made known to the president before conference some fine adjustments could be made at the Annual Conference for the good of our rural church.

—The future of the League of Nations depends upon the formation of a universal conscience. This can only be created and developed if the scholars, the thinkers, and the writers in all countries maintain close co-operative contact and spread from one country to another the ideas which can ensure peace among the peoples, and if the efforts already made in this direction receive encouragement.—Professor Gilbert Murray.

DEPRAVITY NOT IN THE BODY

Not long since we had the privilege of hearing a series of lectures in which the speaker said that "depravity" was in the body. (Depravity being but another name for sin—not sins, but sin—the sin principle, the "bent to sinning"—inbred, or original, sin.) That sin is located in the body is contrary to both scripture and reason. That sin affects the body we all admit, but that it is located in the body is contrary to common-sense, reason, and the Bible. Sin is a disease of the mind and heart—the man, the Ego—but mainly of the heart, the spiritual nature—of the affections. It is "the heart which is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," not the body. Where does the Bible, or anything else, ever speak of a "wicked" or "deceitful" body? The thing is absurd to the last degree. The body is often used as the instrument of the man to commit sin, but the body itself is no more sinful or depraved, than the pistol or sword by which life is taken. Who ever heard of a depraved, or sinful, sword, pistol, or bludgeon? It's the man, soul, or spirit behind these instruments of death, that is depraved. Everybody knows this. Why not arrest swords, guns, pistols, and clubs, and put them in jail, or hang them for their crimes? This would be just as sensible as to say that depravity is in the body. Why not after the criminal, the man, the mind, the soul, the spirit, has left the body—its tabernacle, or house—arrest the body and punish it for its crimes (?)? An idiot would not be guilty of such an absurdity.

Just as well say that the shot, shells, guns, bayonets, swords, battle-ships—all the instruments of war—are depraved, or sinful, as to say that deparvity is located in the body, just because the soul, or spirit, uses the body as the instrument for the commission of crime.

Jesus in Matt. 15:10-20, and Mark 7: 14-23, makes a clear distinction between spirit and matter, showing that matter cannot defile spirit. Among the things said by Jesus on this occasion was, and is, "There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him"—i.e., matter cannot defile spirit. And further, he said, "From within, out of the heart of man, (not his physical heart) proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, formications, murders, thefts, covetousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness." Mark 7:21-23. This settles it. Jesus says sins come out of the heart, not out of the body. If depravity, or original sin, were located in the body, then Jesus would have said, "Out of the body proceed evil thoughts &c." But this he did not say.

Of course this lecturer taught that we had to get rid of the body to get rid of depravity, or sin. Of course he never referred to any "Thus saith the Lord" to sustain his position. But "science" was frequently referred to. This was quite significant. God's word ignored, forgotten, or wilfully rejected—"teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

Before the Flood it was said of man, "every imagination of the thought of his heart"—not his body—"was only evil continually." Gen. 6:5.

"A heart that deviseth wicked imaginations." Prov. 6:18. Not the body.

"As he thinketh in his heart"—not his body—"so is he." That sin, or depravity, is located in the corporeal body is preposterous! Contrary to reason, common-sense, and the Bible, as has already been shown. "They that are in the flesh cannot please God," can only mean that they who are unregenerate, living the fleshly, carnal life—having the carnal mind which is "enmity against God," otherwise no one can please God in this life, even Jesus himself. Jesus had a corporeal body, but not a "carnal mind"—and he "pleased God" always.

"Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, sedi-tions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." Gal. 5:19-21. The word "flesh" in this quotation cannot mean the corporeal body, but the "body of sin," "the carnal mind," "inbred sin," "original sin," the sin that dwelleth in us." It can only have the same meaning as the word "flesh" in verse 24, where it said that "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." This cannot be literal, but figurative. If literal, then all Christians would have to be literally just to death by crucifixion. This is not the case, and nobody believes it to be literal. So the word "flesh" is not the corporeal body but the body of sin," "the carnal mind," "the old man," that is crucified. And many of these sins which are said to be works of this something called the "Flesh," are not even committed through the instrumentality of the corporeal body, such as "hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strike, heresies, envyings" &c. These are separate and distinct, in every sense, from the body. It is not the body that becomes angry and meditates revenge and murder. It is not the body that is proud, vain, covetous, selfish &c, but the real man, the soul, the spirit, the immortal, immaterial part. Here is where depravity dwells, in the real man. Get the real man, the heart, the soul, the spirit pure, and outward sinning ceases, and this is the only way to stop it. As has already been seen, "out of the heart," not the body, "proceed" sins. Matt. 15:10-20, and Mark 7:14-23. This is the teaching of Jesus, and removes the subject from debatable ground. And why any theological Prof. should teach otherwise is a mystery. The entire Bible is against such absurd teaching, and reason also. If depravity, inbred, or original sin were in the corporeal body, then to have part of the body removed ought to weaken depravity and make one less wicked. But we know that this is not the case. Remove a limb, two limbs, three limbs, yea, all four of the limbs, and depravity continues as before any amputation at all. Why? Because the man, the heart, the spirit, the real Ego remains, and is unchanged. If depravity were located in the body, and not in the heart, as the Bible teaches, then to kill a sinner would be to relieve him of all inclination to do evil, to commit sin. So to relieve the world of depravity—sin—just get up a World War and kill off the whole crowd. This would be about on a par with the peraching of some during the World War that all of the boys who were killed "fighting for their country would be saved." (Yea, this was preached right here, in our town.) To see the absurdity of such preaching, if it were true, it would only be necessary to get up a great war and get all the sinners killed, "fighting for their country," to save them. This would be the greatest method of evangelism ever known! But there is no language that can adequately describe such nonsense and absurdity. "What fools we mortals be!" And to teach that depravity is in the body and not in the heart, or soul, or spirit, is as absurd as to teach that a boy dying in battle for his country woull be savel because of this—dying for his country.

Dictionaries, especially standard ones, as Webster's, are supposed to reflect the consensus of correct opinions, or views, in their definitions. This much from Webster on depravity: "The state of being depraved or corrupt: a vitiated state of moral character; general badness of character; wickedness of mind and heart; absence of religious feeling and principle." There is nothing in the above definitions that takes any cognizance of the body. As to depravity being in the body seems to have never entered the mind of the lexicographer.

Under the head of synonyms, discussing depravity, Webster further says, "Depravity applies only to the mind and heart." But this theological Prof. said depravity is in the body. Christ said it is in the heart, and to this the whole Bible agrees. Depravity is an attitude of the heart, will, and mind—especially the heart. It's "the heart that is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked"—not the body—and this same heart when changed in its attitude toward God, believes unto righteousness." Just as well say that "righteousness" is in the body after regeneration, as to say that depravity dwells in the body before and after regeneration, for in neither case is it true, for both depravity and righteousness are matters of the heart. "The pure in heart shall see God," not the pure in body. The body is affected by sin, weakened and diseased by it, but this condition is not moral or spiritual depravity, or sin.

This same lecturer said that children were "born pure as an angel in spirit." This he did not prove, nor attempt to prove. We will not take time to discuss this, further than to say that the whole Bible teaches the reverse, and especially Christ's statements to Nicodemus that everybody must be "twice born" to "see," or "enter," the kingdom of God. Of course the Prof.'s statement was in harmony with his teaching that "depravity was in the body," but in absolute contradiction to the teaching of Jesus that depravity is in the "heart," necessitating the "second birth" for every one.

It is not our purpose to discuss the necessity of the "second birth" for all, as that which is born of the "flesh" is "flesh," fallen, depraved—not spiritual. This is all so plain that a "fool" ought not to "err therein." And why will men teach absolutely contrary to all this? Teaching their own notions and theories, for "doctrines," instead of teaching the "commandments of God"—the teachings of God. If these things are not heresy, it would be difficult to find any. Is it possible that Methodism is so departed from the "faith of the fathers," of its founders, of its promoters for more than 100 years, that Pelagianism, Socinianism, and just any kind of ism can be taught in our seminaries, if it's popular, without question or protest? Or have we reached a point in our church life in which we no longer have any capable, sound theologions? Nobody capable of detecting grievous error? Or having detected it, lacking in courage to question it or rebuke it? Or do we receive everything from "headquarters," ready-made; "cut and dried," without question, like the Romanist does from Rome?

That depravity is in the body is a pagan notion, forming the foundation for the practice of penance in pagan religious, and in Roman Catholicism,—Rome retaining or adopting it from paganism. And native purity of infants is contrary to the Bible, and has never been received and adopted by the church. There is not a respectable, orthodox church in Christiandom that accepts such rank heresy.

We once served in a community in which "society," style, etiquette, was given first place. If after conforming to these demands of "society" there was any place left for "religion," all right. But the laws of "society" had to be met, religion or no religion. So now it seems that so-called "science" is given first place—evolution, biology, and psychology—the "wisdom of this world" being put first, and the Bible being construed to harmonize with human "sciences" (?), and if any can't be so construed it is eliminated.

Like the colored preacher of other days: "We'll have meetin' at Uncle Jake's next Saturday night if de Lawd is willin'; and if de Lawd is not willin' we'll have it whedder or no."

J. F. Dosier.

The Secret of Service

To one who asked him the secret of his service, Mr. George Muller said: "There was a day when I died, utterly died;" and, as he spoke, he bent lower, until he almost touched the floor, "died to George Muller, his opinions, preferences, tastes and will, died to the world, its approval or censure, died to the approval or blame even of my brethren and friends, and since then I have studied only to show myself approved unto God."

FROM A MISSIONARY

New Britain, Conn.

Dear Friends:

Some of you will be surprised to see a letter from us headed "New Britain," others will have heard that we are back in this country. For most, a few words regarding the happenings of these months may be of interest.

We looked forward to interesting 'doings' in China this year. No one could foresee how things would work out. But the extension of Nationalist power was expected. The unfortunate "Nanking affair" was not expected, and it does not represent the Nationalist Party as a whole. After this incident, the American consul sent a telegram requesting the women and children to withdraw to Tientsin, and ten days later a telegram requesting all Americans to leave Tochow not later than April 9th.

We had time to pack clothing and the few other belongings that we could bring along. There was no urgency about our leaving as far as local conditions were concerned. There was no anti-foreign activity. Only friendliness and regret that the Americans were leaving. The Chinese Christians rose to the occasion in a splendid way, and have taken charge of the work, carrying on schools and hospital and the work of the evangelistic department. The leaving of the Americans was made the occasion of a forward step in the handing over of the administration of all work to the Chinese Christian leaders, and they have shown a splendid spirit in the face of many difficult problems.

After arriving in Tientsin it became increasingly apparent that the uncertainty of the immediate future, the difficulty of giving Jean the care she needs, and other considerations made our return to America advisable; this was authorized by the Medical Committee and by the Mission, and arrangements were made for our sailing from Tientsin on May 1st. We had previously had a cablegram inviting us to return to our supporting church in New Britain in the event of withdrawal from China.

We had a five-day voyage to Japan, and a five-day wait there for the "President Jefferson." We had a smooth voyage across the Pacific. Edward and Allen (together with about 20 other children) got dysentery on the boat, but have now recovered. Jean stood the voyage well. Landing in Seattle on May 23rd, we left for Chicago the same evening. We changed trains in Chicago, went on to Elkhart and Toledo, and there had a few hours with our parents and other relatives.

In Cleveland we saw friends, and we saw my brother and sister in Buffalo. The next morning we were in Springfield, changed trains, and were met at New Britain Junction by a representative of the "Heininger Reception Committee" and the pastor, with three cars to take us to New Britain. It was a hearty welcome we received, and several thrills we had in coming back to this city.

We were taken directly to the large and hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Platt. An ample suite of rooms was assigned to us, a nurse was on hand to take full charge of the children "for at least two weeks," and we were to start right in resting. Though there were numbers of people that wanted to see us and welcome us back to New Britain, they (including the newspaperman) were asked to wait so as to give us a chance to rest. We not only were guests of the Platts for the five days until they left for their summer home on Nantucket, but they then turned over the whole place for us to use until fall, if we wish. So here we are with loads of room in this old colonial mansion, with all the conveniences that such a home affords, and with beauties of lawn and flower-garden. In the packet of mail that was handed to me the morning we arrived was a note which said: "The people of the First Church realize that in starting here anew you are going to be under heavy expense, and as we want you and your wife to be as free from worry as possible, we wish you to accept the enclosed check and to make whatever use of it you think best." And the amount of the check quite astounded us. That is the First Church's way of doing such things. This is in addition to paying the American Board $1500 for the cost of our journey from Tientsen to New Britain.

Such genuine rejoicing at our return, and such warmth of welcome I had hardly anticipated. No one needs to talk to me about these New Englanders being "cold" and "reserved."

My connection with the Church Staff began June 1st, although Mr. Blodgett does not leave until the end of June, at which time I take over in full the work of Minister of Religious Education. There is a six-weeks vacation in the summer, for which our plans are not yet complete.

After quite a little investigation it has finally been arranged to place Jean in the State Tuberculosis Sanitorium at Niantic, Connecticut, right on the shore of the ocean, and known as "The Seaside." It is a small institution at present, and just for children; the atmosphere of the place is very good, and the treatment with all-the-year heliotherapy is just what we want for Jean. We took her "to live with the brownies" (brown from sun-treatment) yesterday; while it is hard to be separated from her after these nineteen months of constant caring for her, yet we feel that it is best for her to be there. We hope in due course to see much improvement, but it is quite certain that it is a matter of years until we can get her back, strong and well. At that time we hope it will be possible for us to return for further service in China.

Some of you have been greatly interested in the work at Techow, and have contributed to special projects there. May I say that the needs and opportunities there are just as great as before,—or greater. I shall be happy to pass on, from time to time, information which I get from my touch with the work at Techow, and to forward for use there any further contributions sent to me at the address given below. Leaving China and the great work there was one of the most difficult experiences we have yet encountered. We earnestly urge continued interest and prayers on behalf of the Chinese church as it plays its important part in the re-making of China in these stirring days.

With greetings and best wishes to all, I am

Very sincerely,

Alfred D. Heininger.

32 Grove Hill, New Britain, Conn.

To Our Methodist Protestant Constituency:

Alfred D. Heininger is a brother of our former missionary to Kalgan, China, Dr. Charles S. Heininger, and a graduate of our own Westminster Theological Seminary. While he was serving under the auspices of the Congregational Church as a missionary to China yet we are all interested in him and will enjoy this splendid letter from his pen, and our prayers shall be with him in his new field of service in our home land.

—There are two classes of people who neglect to read and study the Bible: those who have a superstitious regard for the book such as makes them believe that there is great merit in just owning and treasuring a copy of the sacred book, and those who regard the book as a set of unimportant and unreliable records coming down to us from an age of ignorance.

EDUCATION INTERESTS

This week sees all our colleges and seminary open once more and settling down to the task of training our young people. Word from High Point and Adrian brings the good news of another good increase in enrollment. Both schools anticipate the best year in their history.

A new departure among the colleges and universities of the country is the custom of requiring freshmen to register a week early for the purpose of introducing the new students into college life and work. Western Maryland has been employing this method the last few years and has found it beneficial.

President Ward of Western Maryland is back at his desk once more, much to the delight of all his friends and co-laborers. He is pressing plans to collect the rest of the pledges made two years ago for the endowment and has other plans for the future deelopment of the college.

Since last May the Board of Education has been endeavoring to collect funds for the salary of the new member of the Seminary faculty. Appeals have been made only to graduates of the Seminary. The response has been gratifying although not all needed has been secured.

Last year the Board of Education assisted thirty-three of our seventy ministerial students. How many will need help this year will not be known for several weeks yet. We assisted nineteen through the Student Loan Fund. This year we are limiting the number to twenty and the quota is full.

The response to our Rally Day service so far as the number of orders received is concerned is very gratifying. Nearly three hundred orders had been received by September 19 and the interest of our people in the program seems greater than ever. Naturally we are hoping this interest will be manifested in the fifty per cent increase in the offerings which the Board is asking. Our schools are growing and rendering a finer service to the church as the years go by. That necessitates increased appropriations. The state schools depend upon taxes to maintain them, while the church schools must depend upon the free-will offerings of our people.

The Adrian College campaign for $500,000 is now under way in Illinois. The quota is $30,000. President Rueckert, and former President F. J. Baylis are giving the campaign unqualified support. This is most gratifying and spells success.

The second Sunday in October is the day when many of our churches hold their Rally Day service, although each church is at liberty to choose the day that best suits their convenience. If programs are ordered early it gives plenty of time to make preparation which in turn means a better service. Send in your order to

CHURCH-MEMBERS BECOME MORMONS

The Utah Gospel Mission is authority for the statement that Mormonism "of both kinds" is making about 10,000 converts a year, and that "nearly every one was once a nominal member of some Christian church." Of course the bulk of the converts are of the humbler classes, often really wishing to do the right thing, and even real though greatly misinformed Christians. Meanwhile, and largely by just such means, Mormonism is doubling every twenty-five years, instead of being about "dead," as people often think. It has kept about 2,200 emissaries at work for many years, and they get three or four converts each per year, besides doing greater evil in sowing false doctrines and distrust of the Bible, the ministry, and the church.—The Missionary Review of the World.

DEATHS IN OUR PREACHERS' HOMES

Mrs. D. I. Garner

On Sunday, September 4th, Mrs. D. I. Garner, wife of Rev. D. I. Garner, pastor of Why Not Circuit, was buried at Haw River. Mrs. Garner had been in very bad health for several years and her going home was a happy release from a very frail body. Brother Garner and his son will have the sympathy of all of us. An obituary committee has been appointed.

Frances Powell

Last week's Herald carried an account of the tragic death of Frances, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. L. Powell. She was a beautiful child in every way, one of the most attractive little characters we have ever known. She was loved and appreciated by all who knew her. They have our deepest sympathy.

Rev. J. H. Stowe

On yesterday, Tuesday, all that was mortal of Rev. J. H. Stowe was laid to rest in a beautiful spot in the High Point cemetery. Brother Stowe was my pastor some thirty-two years ago. I have known him intimately and well all these years. He was a good man and a great preacher. If he had a fault I never knew it. I never heard him utter a word that would hurt or curtail the usefulness of anyone. He had reached that physical condition which made him long to depart and be at peace. If I counted correctly, there were thirty-three of his ministerial brethren at the funeral. An obituary committee will be appointed soon.

Faithfully,

A. G. Dixon.

NOT RIVALS

It is in contact with religion that the exaggerations of science have created the greatest confusion. Present generations have passed so completely out of the first extreme reaction from religion that it is hard to realize how far the nineteenth century went in its enthusiasm over the great discoveries of science. Here was a complete substitute for religion, it was argued. An explanation of the whole universe would so soon be available that any one was a fool to look elsewhere. This was natural. So, too, was the gradual return of a sounder point of view as the true scope of science became clearer. Today the common view of scientists is that religion and science are in no proper sense rivals. They explore the universe by different methods.—Geoffrey Parsons in Harper's Magazine.

Choosing a President

their abilities, but none so far as I know that is making any effort to draw attention to himself. Those who have filled the office know that it has no attractions for the man who loves ease. It is a place of work, work, work. It requires not only physical power of endurance but tact in dealing with dissatisfied and sometimes unreasonable people, and a good knowledge of men such as will qualify to fill ministerial vacancies occurring after conference has adjourned. According to present usage and law the president serves as a member of the stationing committee at conference and for this work much knowledge of ministers and charges is needed. There should be care in the choice of a president and loyal co-operation with him in every good work after he is chosen.

—Rev. W. M. Pike is expected to preach for Liberty-Siler City charge during the absence of Rev. Ferry Lee Gibbs in the Seminary.

The WORK and the WORKERS

Saturday and Sunday, September 3 and 4, were spent on the Connelly Springs work with Rev. D. M. Dew and his people. I preached at each one of the three churches, and had good congregations to hear the Word. This is one of our struggling charges for which something should be done. The people themselves could doubtless pay a better salary than they are doing if they only thought they could. But three small churches cannot support a pastor so he may give them full time. Brother Dew, a student in Rutherford College, is doing a good work and is loved by the people.

Spencer

We drove to Spencer for the Sunday night service with Rev. T. G. Madison and his people. Here we had a delightful service together. We have a very loyal little band here, and they are going forward happily. They have a splendid corner lot, which is paid for, on which they hope to build the Sunday school addition of a new church some time in the near future. These people will have to have help from the Conference.

Grace Church

Sunday morning, September 11th, I preached in Grace church, in the absence of Dr. Spahr, who was attending the sessions of the Pittsburgh Conference. I was in the Men's Bible class in Sunday school and had the pleasure of hearing Mr. J. Norman Wills teach the lesson. Then I preached to a very attentive and appreciative congregation. It was a delightful service.

Whitakers

Sunday evening we were in Whitakers but found that there was no appointment at our church, so rested in the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cutchin. And on Monday, in company with Mrs. Cutchin and Rev. F. W. Paschall we drove to Triplet, Va., to see Rev. and Mrs. H. L. Powell that we might do our best to comfort them in the sad bereavement that has come upon them in the tragic death of their child as reported in the HERALD last week.

Here we found Brother Powell engaged in a meeting in the Philadelphia church with Rev. Troxler assisting. We enjoyed hearing Brother Troxler preach.

Creswell

We then drove to Creswell where we spent six days with Rev. R. L. Hethcox and his people on this charge which is so far removed from all our other charges. We visited four of the five communities, preached in three of the churches, and preached to representatives of all the churches. For a greater part of the time we were in a meeting with Brother Hethcox at the Mount Hermon church. We thoroughly enjoyed our stay among these people, and had the pleasure of seeing the pastor receive thirteen members into the church at the closing service. Brother Hethcox is truly doing a great work on this charge, the people love him and want him to return for the tenth year.

We had planned to come back by Harmony church, on Halifax, and spend a day or two where Brother Bethea was assisting the pastor in a meeting, but having received a telegram announcing the death of Rev. J. H. Stowe we hastened home to attend his funeral on Tuesday morning.

Five Weeks to Conference

When you read this it will then be just a little over five weeks until the Annual Conference will be meeting in Asheboro. What we add to what has already been done for the Lord this year must be done speedily. If our charges do not rally to the budgets in these last weeks there will be a great shortage in finances. However, if pastors' estimates made in third quarterly reports are anything like correct, then the financial reports are going to be good. We cannot afford to fail our Lord in this.

Rally Day

Brother Pritchard has mailed a fine letter to each pastor recently relative to Rally Day. He also called attention to Rally Day in the HERALD. We are glad for such letters. Brother Pritchard is a member of the Board of Education and knows the great need confronting that Board. Please plan for a Rally Day with a good offering. This helps to pay your G. C. B., makes your report better to conference, and directly benefits High Point College.

It will also directly benefit every church and Sunday School which holds Rally Day.

High Point College

We are all so delighted that things are going so well at our College. We learn that 305 students have registered there this fall. Good! The College still needs our prayers, our faith, and our money. Great things have been done, are being done, and will be done at High Point College.

Pray, believe and give, and the College will continue to grow.

FLEEING FOR LIFE

When the British troops, during the Mutiny in India, had made their silent retreat from Lucknow at dead of night, there was one man left behind. Captain Waterman, having gone to his bed in a retired corner, over-slept himself. He had been forgotten. At 2:00 o'clock in the morning he got up and found to his horror that Lucknow had been evacuated. He had hoped against hope, and visited every outpost. But all was silent and deserted. His position was terrible to contemplate. To be the only man in an open entrenchment, and fifty thousand furious foes outside! Appalled by the situation, he took to his heels and ran—ran in the direction of the retreating forces til he could scarcely breathe. Still the same silence, interrupted only by the occasional report of a musket. At last he came up with the retiring rear-guard, almost mad with excitement. But he had made his escape, and he was safe.

No one will contend that this officer's anxiety and excitement were unreasonable, seeing he knew the dangers that surrounded him. And if you, unsaved reader, realized your dreadful circumstances as a lost sinner, in danger of losing your soul at any moment, would it not be perfectly reasonable for you to get into a similar state of alarm about your safety? Suppose a person had come up to the imperilled officer at Lucknow, just as he became conscious of his fearful position, and had tried to tranquilize his mind by saying: "Don't become excited; look upon your circumstances with philosophic calmness; view the matter intellectually as a gentleman of education and intelligence." Would this not have been mockery at that dread hour when he was so conscious of his danger, and when he knew that his safety depended on immediate flight?" "Yes," you say, "such counsel would indeed be mockery." And is not this the very counsel the world gives you whenever you are awakened by the Spirit of God as to your lost condition? But what does God say? He says, "Flee from the wrath to come" (Matt. 3:7). The safety of your soul depends upon your immediate flight. You are in danger of perishing eternally. You do not need the philosophy of the world in order to understand your opinion. You simply need to believe God as to your danger, and to betake yourself as a hell-deserving sinner to Christ, the sinner's only Refuge. In Him is your place of safety; for in Him there is "no condemnation" (Rom. 8:1). Fear not to trust Him now, for has He not said, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out"?—W. S., in Glad Tidings.

AN OLD TALE

In the Far East an old man who knew that his life was ending called his ten sons to his side and told them that he had amassed a fortune by industry and thrift and that he had divided his wealth into ten parts, leaving to each son one hundred gold pieces, so that each could begin business for himself. It happened, however, that soon afterwards he lost a portion of his property and had only nine hundred and fifty gold pieces left. The old man gave one hundred to each of his nine oldest sons, but when the youngest came forward for his share the father embraced him and said:

"My boy, I have but fifty pieces of gold left. Thirty I will need for my funeral expenses, so there will be but twenty pieces remaining. But I leave thee my ten friends, and I am sure that you will find them worth more than all the gold of thy brothers."

The old man died a few days later, and the nine sons took their money and without a thought of their youngest brother, followed each his own fancy. But the youngest, although his portion was the least, resolved to heed his father's words and hold fast to the ten friends. So after a while he prepared a modest feast and went to the ten friends of his father and said to them:

"My father asked me to keep you, his friends, in honor. Before I leave this place to seek my fortune elsewhere, will you not share with me a farewell meal?"

The ten friends accepted the invitation with pleasure and enjoyed the repast, and when the moment for parting arrived one of them rose and spoke:

"My friends, it seems to me that of all the sons of our dear dead friend the youngest alone is mindful of his father's feeling for us. Let us then be true to him and provide for him a generous sum that he may begin his business here."

The proposal was received with applause. The youth was proud of their gift of friendship, and soon became a prosperous merchant who never forgot that faithful friends were more valuable than gold or silver.—Selected.

"Tainted Money"

Two colored men were discussing tainted money. One of them said: "It is disaway, Jim. Dat money taint mine and taint yourn. Dat's why it's tainted money." Of course, there is no tainted money. The taint is on the man and not the money. And that money taint has tainted many men and women, in all classes. Holy Writ declares the love of money is the root from which all evils grow. We have never yet realized the grip and blight of stinginess and covetousness. —Selected.

GOD GLORIFIED

In the fourth chapter of First Peter, in the 11th and 16th verses, Peter makes an interesting statement in his exhortations to the strangers scattered abroad, to whom he is writing. In the first passage he says "that in all things God may be glorified;" and in the second one, "let him glorify God in this name." In the first it is that God may be glorified in all things; in the second it is that God may be glorified in one thing in particular.

His exhortation in the first instance is to be sober, be of sound mind, be fervent in love one to another, be hospitable, do what you are called to do in the very best way that you can do it, in order that in all things God may be glorified. What a stimulus to holy living, to honest and high living this is! If you are a professional man, a merchant, a banker, an artist, an artisan, a salesman; if you are a housekeeper, a business woman, a mother, a home-makers—what not, do what you have to do in the very best way that you can, so that in all things God may be glorified; for the cause of God is affected by the way those who are His professed followers live their lives every day.

But there is one thing in particular in which God may be glorified, and that is when we suffer as a Christian. It may mean fiery trials, it may mean misunderstandings, it may mean rebuffs, it may mean that your friends—at least those whom you thought to be your friends—turn against you, and treat you with the cold shoulder because they are not in sympathy now with what you are doing and way you are living; but if your life as a Christian is so pronounced, if you have separated from the world so completely that you are suffering on account of this Name, then in that one thing God is more glorified than in anything else that you can do.

Are you glorifying God in all things? Are you glorifying Him in that one thing?—North Avenue Church News.

UNDERMINING MORALITY

Experience has taught me many things, but this certainly and that is that you cannot weaken religious safeguards and sanctions without weakening and undermining the very foundation stones of morality. In fact, there is no such thing as a basis for morality apart from religious sanctions. If you do not believe it, then go back to the days of the Hebrew prophets and read once again the tremendous and profoundly serious lessons they have to teach us. The Hebrew prophet was the first inspired teacher in the religious history of the world to weld together in one indissoluble union religion and morality. What therefore God hath joined together let no man put asunder, and let all who read these words and are disposed to treat lightly the observance of God's holy day, beware how they seek to undermine and break down the religious barriers which now stand between us and the devastating flood which threatens to sweep across the land.—Bishop Guerry.

—We wish we could say something here that would result in a more general attendance of our people at prayer-meeting. It may be that some churches have the attendance of all members possible, but this is not true of many churches. What great spiritual benefits would be derived from general and faithful prayer-meeting attendance. What inspiration for genuine Christian work would be received. How much more satisfying would church membership become if all would join together weekly in earnest prayer for the church and the people outside the church. Is it treating God right to fail to meet with His people for prayer? Brethren and sisters, think of these things.

A VICTORY IN DEFEAT

"Who will be picked for second base this season, do you suppose? Ned or Barney? It will probably be one of them," speculated Jack Grover to the group of boys assembled before the front door of the Brookside High School one morning in March.

"Barney," asserted one of the boys confidently.

"No, Ned!"

"No, Barney!"

"Ned!" "Barney!" vociferously yelled the boys, the choice being evidently very evenly divided between the two.

"Well, I suppose we'll have to wait until morning to find out. But we'll know then all right, for the names of the team are to be posted tomorrow," averred Grover.

"Anyway, we are very sure who our shortstop will be, aren't we, fellows?" young Bates demanded slyly.

"You bet," shouted the rest of the group, all eyes focusing upon the tall, slim, graceful figure of Robin Fenwick.

Rob smiled a trifle complacently, as with a slightly deprecatory gesture he replied.

"Oh, you never can be sure about anything in this world. There's many a slip, you know," he quoted nonchalantly.

Yet it was only too clear that Rob did not quite believe his own words, or if he did, he did not consider that in this particular instance they would be applied. For Robin Fenwick was very certain in his own mind who would be chosen shortstop for the Brookside High School baseball team.

Therefore the next morning Rob gave merely a casual glance at the posted list, while sauntering leisurely toward his classroom, just as the first bell broke up the noisy, excited group of boys clustered about the bulletin board. As his eye quickly scanned the list, to his surprise and dismay, however, he found his own name missing from it. Aghast he stopped and stared, unable for a second to believe his own eyes. Yet all too plainly was printed in the place of shortstop the name of Lewis Morton. Only by summoning all his pride to his aid was Rob able to gather together his shattered forces sufficiently to stride into the room and sink into his accustomed seat.

Automatically he went through the morning's routine, stern and white-faced, utterly oblivious to the curious glances cast at him by his mates. When recess at length arrived, he set forth immediately in search of Angus MacKenzie, the captain of the Brookside nine, with the express purpose of having it out with him.

Just as he was entering the gymnasium, however, he heard the voice of Mr. Wylie, the English professor, and Rob's favorite teacher, exclaiming in a surprised way:

"I was truly amazed, Angus, this morning not to see Fenwick's name on your team list. I'm not much of a baseball fan, but I had always understood that Rob was one of your star players."

"He is, Professor Wylie," Rob heard Captain Mac soberly and earnestly reply. "One of the best players in the school, best batsman and our safest shortstop, and a mighty fine chap in the bargain, one of the very best. But he's a bad loser. A lost game with him is never fairly won by the other fellow, and he disputes every ruling of the umpire unfavorable to his side. I was so ashamed last year at that final game when we lost the cup, and Rob cut up so badly, accusing the winning team of cheating, and the umpire of partiality, when, as a matter of fact, a fairer set of fellows never existed than that bunch. We were licked honestly and aboveboard, simply because their team was the better one. When Rob wins, though, he's generous enough, never crows, or anything like that; but it's his attitude when he loses that hurts so badly the standing of our team, and of our school. It gives us the name of being welshers, whiners, poor sports; and that is the reason why I dropped him from the team, although I hated to do it," concluded Captain Mac. "I expect a bad time of it though when he comes to demand my reason," he groaned.

"I'm very sorry, indeed, to hear this about Fenwick," ejaculated Professor Wylie. "Very sorry, for I both like and admire Robin. I fear, however, you're right, Angus. The reputation of being a poor loser is a bad one for any boy or man to earn. I may not be much of a sportsman, but I do know no one has learned the first rules of sportsmanship until he has learned how to lose, that the important thing isn't the fact of whether you win or lose a game, but how you play it."

And Professor Wylie with a grave shake of his head walked slowly away.

Although Mac was now at liberty to be approached, Rob did not take advantage of this fact. He did not need to question Mac for he had received his answer. Instead he slunk quietly away in order to be by himself to think over a bit the astounding events of the last few hours.

During the next few days Rob had all he could manage to keep from showing to his comrades just how hard the blow had hit him. To Captain Mac's surprise, however, he never came to demand a reason for his non-appointment. Moreover, he was as friendly as ever with Mac.

Rob at first had naturally been very angry and had considered badly used by Angus, but he had gradually brought himself to see the justice of the captain's ruling.

How he now longed, though, for the chance to prove himself a good sport to his mates, and to win back Professor Wylie's respect and esteem which he feared he had in some measure forfeited.

Therefore, a week or so later, when he was rather diffidently approached by the captain of the scrub team, who rather feared a snubbing, with the request that he play shortstop for them, to the great surprise and delight of all the boys, he gladly accepted. Rob now strove hard to learn this secret of losing, to learn to prove his mettle by trying to accept defeat, when it did come, in a manly way. During their practice games with the regular team he endeavored to show no resentment at any ruling against him, nor when his team was licked. It was hard, up-hill work, of course, and very often he broke out into a torrent of angry abuse against the umpire, but gradually he succeeded in getting his quick temper under control, and these outbursts grew fewer.

During the regular games, however, as Rob stood, an outsider, watching his team win or perhaps go down to defeat, many times through the muffled balls of his successor, an almost uncontrollable longing to be playing there in his old place filled his boyish soul. For Morton was proving himself a very erratic player. While he often played a brilliant game, oftener still he lost his head, especially in an emergency, and made numerous errors, showing himself a regular butterfinger with the ball. Rob, however, wisely avoided making unpleasant comments on Morton's playing, nor did he side in with his mates in their bitter denunciation of his rival's deficiencies. Thereby, unconsciously, he won, by his reticence, their deep respect.

At length came Rob's chance to redeem himself. During a grilling game, in which the Southgate High School scored up run after run on the Brookside team, Morton had the misfortune to break a finger. The harassed captain in this emergency instinctively turned to his dispossessed shortstop. Summoning Rob to him he beseeched him to go into the game in Morton's place.

"Do help us out, Rob, and save the honor of the old Brookside High, will you old man?" he implored.

Here would have been Rob's chance had he been a small-minded chap to mortify Captain Mac and thus get even with him by scornfully refusing before the other players his former captain's request. Fortunately, however, Rob was not small-minded, but a big-hearted, generous boy, who really loved his team and his school.

"Of course, I will, Mac, and play my very best," replied Rob heartily.

Under Rob's skillful batting and clever fielding the score crept up, up, up, until it stood at only seven to six in favor of the Southgate High. The excitement was intense at the beginning of the ninth inning when the Southgate boys came to the bat. But their half was eventless, and they left the field without having scored. Rob had first turn at the bat. Strike one was a beauty, almost a home run. When the dust of battle had cleared away with the ball finally recovered, Rob was safe on third. The cheers and shouts of the Brookside rooters became almost deafening. For with a man on third and no one out, they saw a chance to tie this game, perhaps even win it.

Luck, however, did not seem to be with them, for the next man at the bat struck frantically three times at the ball, each time fanning the air wildly. The next man was also struck out, then Captain Mac himself came to the bat. Two strikes were called on him also before he succeeded in making a hit. At first the ball appeared to be very cleverly fielded. All but the shouting would then have been over had not the ball bounced out of the fielder's hand. Although he quickly recaptured it, again he dropped it, and as he tried to retrieve it, he hit it with his toe.

While the fielder was making all these errors, Rob, in an almost superhuman effort to tie the game, was galloping to the plate. He dropped and slid just after the Southgate outfielder redeemed himself by a beautiful clean throw straight into the hands of the pitcher, who whirled quickly and threw the ball to the waiting catcher. Rob's hand missed the plate by a bare half inch when the catcher touched him with the ball.

"Out!" shouted the umpire.

Rob sprang up, red-faced and irate, ready to dispute the decision with all his old-time vim, when suddenly he remembered. Suppressing the fiery torrent of words, he brushed off his clothes and meekly trotted to his bench.

The game was over and the Brookside High School had lost. Yet out of this game Robin Fenwick had won a signal victory.

That day Rob was the first boy, after his captain, to congratulate Jim Dark, the captain of the winning team, on their triumph. As the Southgate captain shook Rob's hand he exclaimed heartily:

"Well, anyway, you fellows are a fine bunch of sports, and the best losers I ever saw. That was a fine bit of sprinting, that last run of yours, Fenwick. Tough luck, I call it! You certainly deserved to win."

The following day Rob was officially appointed to his old place on the regular team for the remainder of the season. And when the next spring arrived, Rob had the great honor to be unanimously chosen captain of the Brookside nine in place of Angus, who had graduated the summer before.—Youth's World.

THE STORY OF A JAPANESE GIRL

In her lesson one day a young Japanese came to the word "Creator," but did not know its meaning. Turning to the dictionary, she read: "Creator, one who creates; a name given to God, who made all things."

A startling thought to her, for she had never heard of such a God; and it filled her mind by night and by day. She looked at the stars and said, "God must have made all the stars." The sun and even the trees suggested the thought, God made them.

She went to the temple and looked at the image of Buddha, and she said to herself, "It was not you, Buddha, for I never heard of your making anything."

When she went to Tokyo an old woman in the same house said to her: "Tasshee, I am going to a meeting; come with me."

"What meeting?"

"A meeting to hear about God."

"Oh, no," said Tasshee, "I do not want any of your gods. I have a God of my own, if I only knew where He is.

Tasshee, however, went to the meeting. The missionary opened the Bible, and read, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Tasshee was startled. "Why," she said, "this is the God I am looking for," and she became so agitated that she could hardly keep her seat, and so eager was she to put the question, "Where is He?"

When the meeting was over, she rushed to the missionary and said, "Tell me, where is this God that made the heaven and the earth?" Her desire was met by proper instruction.

She came to the next meeting and heard, "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Here again Tasshee was startled. A God of love! Her gods were gods of hate, of revenge, of anger. This God gave His Son. All the gods she had ever heard of never gave anything; the people had to give them offerings.

This thirsting soul received the Water of Life. Tasshee is now a Christian teacher, dispensing the Water of Life to others, telling them of God who spared not His own Son, but gave Him up for us all.—Church at Home and Abroad.

"IN CHRIST JESUS"

Allen Gardiner's heroic efforts among the Fuegians are well known, and the noble man's death in his endeavor to carry the Gospel to them. When his dead body was found beside his boat, it was noticed that a hand was rudely drawn on the rocks pointing to these verses of the 62nd Psalm:

"My soul, wait thou only upon God!
For my expectation is from Him.
He only is my Rock and my Salvation;
He is my Defense, I shall not be moved.
In God my salvation and my glory;
The Rock of my strength, and my refuge is in God."

Mark the word, "In God." The sphere in which he moved, the element in which he delighted, the atmosphere which he breathed, and the circle which separated him from all else, was the Lord himself. Gardiner's environment was above the world, he lived and moved in the heavenly places, and was, therefore, beyond the touch of sin, the discouragement of circumstances, the worry of care, the blandishments of the world, the seductions of the flesh, the blast of suffering, and the folly of pride.—Selected.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Corinth, Littleton Circuit.—Special meeting was held at this church last week. Rev. A. D. Shelton did the preaching. The community has never heard the gospel preached in a plainer and more powerful way than he preached it. It was real gospel preaching all the way through and every one who heard his message was inspired to live a better life, if they heeded the truths presented. The result of this meeting was not what we had hoped and prayed for it to be. Two confessed Jesus Christ as their Sovior, one united with the church and one will unite with church near her home.

We were so glad to have Rev. H. L. Powell with us on Tuesday and he intended to remain over until Wednesday. But a sad accident happened in his home and he was called home. Our deepest sympathy goes out to him and his family in this sad hour.

We were glad to have attend the meeting Mrs. B. C. Barbee and family of Farmville, N. C., Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Hardy and children of Lynchburg, Va., Miss Susie Morris of Tarboro, N C., Mr. and Mrs. Sampson Walker, Richmond, Va., Mrs. Pittman and daughter of Whitakers, N. C.

Mrs. M. J. Morris, Bonney and Henry Morris, and Miss Virginia Insco visited at Rev. H. L. Powell's on Monday night.

Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Morris visited Mr. L. E. Morris at Tarboro Sunday.

Rev. J. B. O'Briant will preach at this church the fourth Sunday at 3 p.m.

MRS. B. F. MORRIS, Reporter.

Chatham Circuit.—Although the pastor has been silent for a while, we have not been asleep on the job. We moved on the work the second day of June—a rainy day and our things were wet when we unloaded them, but on account of the thoughtfulness of the good people, who came to our assistance, we suffered no inconveniences. When we reached Hope church on the next Sunday morning, we found a table in the church yard loaded down with all kinds of provisions for our pantry. We greatly appreciated this good pounding.

The work is in fair shape at all the points on the charge. Each church has a good Sunday school, well-attended. Four revival meetings have been held on the charge; and one at Hickory Grove is yet to take place.

The revival at Zion began the first Sunday in July. Rev. O. C. Loy was the pulpit help. Brother Loy did good preaching and we feel sure the church was greatly revived.

On the fifth Sunday in July the revival at Flint Ridge began with Rev. D. I. Garner as the pulpit help. Under Brother Garner's able efforts there were eight conversions and two accessions to the church. Every one felt the good effects of the meeting.

Revival services at Hope church in Bonlee, began the second Sunday in August. The engaged help was Rev. W. M. Loy of Burlington. Brother Loy did splendid preaching. During the meeting there were thirty-three conversions, and seventeen accessions. On Saturday evening following the meeting Dr. Dixon preached. At the close of the service one man professed faith in Christ. The new members received as a result of the meeting, together with one taken since, raised the total increase in membership for the Hope church this year to twenty-five.

Rev. H. L. Isley was the evangelistic help at Piney Grove, where the meeting opened the fourth Sunday in August. Fourteen persons were converted and seven joined the church. Brother Isley's able preaching was enjoyed by all.

Dr. Dixon held the third quarterly conference at Piney Grove church on Saturday before the third Sunday in August. Brother Rufus Brewer was elected delegate to the Annual Conference. Dr. Dixon's preaching, at Hickory Grove on Sunday morning and at Piney Grove Sunday afternoon was an inspiration to his hearers.

During the year improvements have been made at Hope and Hickory Grove. At Hope new pews have been put in and the inside of the building painted. Hickory Grove has built new cement steps which are a great improvement over the old ones.

Improvements are to be made soon at Flint Ridge and Zion.

The people of the charge are co-operating in the work, and their support is greatly appreciated.

C. G. ISLEY.

High Point.—At Sunday school and church services Sunday morning the faculty and students of High Point College were given a warm welcome, and a cordial invitation was extended them to attend services regularly at the First church throughout the coming session. A large number of the student body was present, and the congregation is delighted with the presence of these vigorous, splendid young people who mean so much in the life of our denomination. Rev. P. E. Lindley chose for the subject of his message one most appropriate for the occasion, "The Land of Beginning Again." He talked in a most interesting manner of different phases of college life, and gave excellent advice and inspiration to his young hearers. Being a young man himself, Mr. Lindley's personality is especially pleasing and attractive to the students, and he is unusually popular as pastor as well as Dean. A charming feature of the musical program of the hour was the rendition of a beautiful violin solo "Caratina," by Miss Dorothy St. Claire, the new instructor in violin and public school music at the College. The choir sang a lovely anthem, "By Cool Siloam" by Vibbart, and Prof. Dan W. Smith played on the Pipe Organ "Pastorale" by Foote, "Priere" by Salome, and "March in A" by Guilmant.

At the evening service the choir sang "Hear Then in Love," and the male quartette, Messrs. Davis, Koonce, Smith, and Schultheiss, rendered a pleasing selection. The evening message was delivered by Rev. E. Lester Ballard, associate pastor. Nearly all the students of the College and several of the Faculty are members of the Methodist Protestant church.

The Ladies' Aid Society held a very pleasant meeting Monday afternoon in the home of Mrs. John H. Walker Jr., on Colonial Drive with Mesdames W. P. Pickett, S. C. Vuncannon, John S. Pickett, associate hostesses. It was decided to give a Reception at the church next Friday evening in honor of the Faculty and students of High Point College, and Committees were appointed to work out all details. All teachers of the city school system belonging to our denomination and all members of the congregation are cordially inited to be present. A special program of music and readings will be presented. At the conclusion of the business session, the hostesses served delightful refreshments.

Plans are being made for a series of meetings beginning Sunday, September 25th, which will be conducted by Dr. Leonard B. Smith of Wilmington, Del., and will continue a week or probably longer. Dr. Smith is well-known and greatly beloved by our members, having conducted meetings on two occasions in the old church several years ago, and having attended the Young People's Summer Conference at the College last July. Our people are looking forward with eager pleasure to hearing him again.

We regret to announce the serious illness of Mrs. C. A. Vuncannon, which has been prolonged for several weeks. We earnestly hope that her condition will improve very soon.

Readers of the "High Point Enterprise" are pleased to see that the College Journalists, under Prof. Talmage C. Johnson, Director, have resumed their page in the Sunday edition. They give bright and snappy news of campus life and activities.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Reitzel have returned from a visit to relatives in Durham.

Walter M. Crouch, Jr., is leaving today for Gainsville, Ga., to enter Riverside Military Academy as a student.

(Received too late for last issue.—Editor.

Calvary Church.—The Calvary Church seems to be recovering nicely from the "summer slump." There were one hundred and seventy present for Sunday school a week ago yesterday and one hundred and sixty-nine yesterday. This is quite an increase over what we have been having during the summer when our people, many of them, were on vacation and attending the "big meetings" at their old home churches. There was also the largest congregation present for the preaching service yesterday at the forenoon service that we have had for some time.

We were glad to see Mrs. J. H. Coble present for the eleven o'clock service yesterday, after an absence of several weeks. She seems to have completely recovered from her injuries sustained in an automobile accident. Miss Vivian Sullivan, who was operated on more than a week ago, is expected to leave the hospital some time this week. She has been missed from her place at the organ as well as in Christian Endeavor and Sunday school.

Brother J. A. Cox of our church has the sympathy of the church in the death of his brother Carl Cox. The pastor of the church feels that he has lost a good friend, for truly Brother Carl Cox was my friend. The family has our sincere prayers and sympathy in this severe trial.

We are endeavoring to make our Sunday evening services decidedly evangelistic. These Sunday evening evangelistic services are to take the place of our fall special evangelistic services. The prayers and co-operation of our church people are earnestly desired.

We are looking forward with pleasure to next Sunday when Brother J. Clyde Auman, returned missionary from Japan, will speak at the eleven o'clock services, and possibly preach at the evening hour. All of our people will want to hear Brother Auman tell about his work in Japan. Come and bring your friends and neighbors.

Taking all things into consideration the work here is encouraging. The fine co-operation of our people here makes possible whatever is accomplished. We are expecting to have, as usual, a hundred per cent report for our annual conference. That applies to finances, of course. We will also report the largest number of additions to the church membership of any year yet. Knowing these things we want to take heart and endeavor to accomplish even more than heretofore.

L. W. GERRINGER, Pastor.

Kernersville Church.—Rally and Home Coming Day was observed at the above named church Sunday, September 18th. The Rally service was held at the 11 o'clock hour, and the children did well, reflecting much credit upon those who trained them.

During this exercise Rev. Lester E. Ballard, associate pastor of First M. P. church of High Point, made an interesting talk on the subject of Christian Education.

The offering amounted to a little more than $14.00. A short while after the above service a good dinner that had all in quantity we could wish was served on the church ground to the delight of all present.

About two p.m. we returned to the church and sang a few old time pieces, followed by a special by Brother Ballard, after which Rev. L. W. Gerringer, pastor of Calvary church, Greensboro, and former pastor of Kernersville, spoke of his special interest in Kernersville and the charge of which it is a part.

He spoke very encouragingly of little churches, saying, many times if we would consider what they had done and are now doing, they would be much more appreciated.

A few members from the other churches on this charge were present. We were very sorry that other former pastors could not be with us to enjoy the occasion. Mrs. Ballard was with us and so was the family of Brother Gerringer. We thank all who had any part in making the day what we believe to be a profitable day for Kernersville church.

E. G. LOWDERMILK, Pastor.

Second Church, Charlotte.—Our revival meeting is still going on with good success.

We were glad to have with us last week Rev. G. H. Henley of Concord. He brought some inspiring sermons. And the power of God seems to come through his talks.

He had 35 conversions up to Sunday night. We regret very much that he could not stay with us this coming week.

Our pastor, Rev. Fred Love, has engaged Brother Phillips of Union County to preach for us through the remainder of our meeting.

We have also had with us Brother Miles of Weldon, N. C., evangelistic singer. He has brought some glorious messages through his singing.

We wish to thank all the good Concord people for their regular attendance and co-operation during this meeting. May God's richest blessings rest upon every one that has helped in any way during this meeting. We also want to thank Brother D. A. McLaurin of Concord, for a nice contribution for the expenses of the tent.

Please remember we have our building campaign going on. We hope and pray by God's help and the people's help we will be able to start our new church soon.

We don't know just when our meeting will close. It will go on through September 25th if not longer. We wish to thank Brother Surratt of the Frst Church, Charlotte, and the good M. E. and Baptist preachers of Charlotte for there help and attendance during our revival meeting. REPORTER.

Charlotte, First Church.—We are very sorry to announce Mr. and Mrs. George E. Young have moved to Lowell, N. C., where Mr. Young is engaged in furniture business. They have not left our church, however, so far they have been the first ones to Sunday school. Mr. and Mrs. Young are loyal Methodist Protestants and both have had several responsible places in church and Sunday school which they promptly and gladly filled. We wish them much success in their new business and home.

The Ladies' Aid Society held their regular meeting the first Monday with Mrs. J. E. Hawkins hostess. This was an enjoyable and interesting meeting. A nominating committee was elected to present names for officers for next year. After the business Mrs. Hawkins served delicious refreshments.

Mrs. B. W. Little is the delegate elected to go to Annual Conference. A committee is working on the Rally Day program to be given the first Sunday in October.

Promotion Day will take place the fourth Sunday in September.

Our evangelistic services also begin the first Sunday in October. Rev. J. E. Pritchard of Asheboro will be the speaker and leader. A prayer program will be carried out the last week of September.

The Sunday school officers were elected by ballot the second Sunday morning. The names will appear later. A nominating committee will present names for church officers soon. The Workers' Council of the Sunday school will meet Thursday evening of this week. Supper will be served and the regular program and business carried out.

The W. F. M. Society will meet Tuesday this week with Mrs. C. A. Stikeleather on Parkwood avenue.

The Inter-denominational missionary union of this city will study the book "A Straight Way Toward Tomorrow," beginning September 26th, through the 30th. Miss Carrie McClean will be the teacher and leader. The place will be the First A. R. P. church. Mrs. W. B. Lindsay is the president.

The W. H. M. Society will meet Tuesday evening, the 27th, with Mrs. John L. Sullivan, Harding Place.

We are very sorry to hear of the death of Rev. J. H. Stowe of High Point.

REPORTER.

Jerusalem.—Our revival meeting began on the second Sunday in this month with a sermon by Rev. M. Ivey Crutchfield, former pastor of Jerusalem and now pastor of Anderson charge. Rev. M. C. Henderson, pastor of the Denton charge, came for the Sunday night service and preached each night during the meeting which closed on Thursday night. A total of six services were held and Brother Henederson preached five good sermons.

While the visible results were not what we had expected, we believe much good was done. The church seemed to be revived to some extent. The unsaved people attending the services were few in number. Not more than three or four unsaved persons were at any one service. Some of them were deeply touched by the sermons of Brother Henderson but their hardened hearts would not respond to the invitation to be saved. There is not much opportunity at Jerusalem for evangelistic work, as practically all of the people are Christians.

The offerings received for Brother Henderson as an expression of appreciation for his splendid gospel sermons and his services during the meeting amounted to a little over $15. The pastor is thankful for a donation of $7 received at the close of the meeting. There are as good people at Jerusalem as may be found in any other church in the North Carolina Conference.

The pastor appreciates the kindness of Rev. W. O. Nanney, a Baptist preacher, who preached at Jerusalem last Sunday morning, occupying the pulpit in the absence of the pastor.

We will have only two more regular appointments before the meeting of the Annual Conference. These will be on the second and third Sundays in October.

C. B. WAY, Pastor.

Lexington, State Street Church.—Almost all our folks and some friends from other churches heard Brother Clyde Auman Sunday morning and night. His talks were much enjoyed by all who heard him.

Dr. Hardie will be with us next Sunday. We always look forward to his coming with pleasant anticipation.

Miss Juanita Hanner spent the week-end at the parsonage with Mrs. Bethea and was in the services Sunday. Miss Mabel Hutton is back at work in one of the city schools and attends all the services. She is a very helpful addition to our group and we always welcome the first of September because it brings Miss Hutton. All the churches of the town are invited to worship with the Second Reformed church next Sunday night, the occasion being the formal opening of their splendid new church recently finished. REPORTER.

Spring Church Circuit.—Perhaps the readers of the Herald would like to see a few lines from this section of the conference, so here we come.

All three churches observed Children's Day with excellent exercises. The offerings totalled about eighty dollars.

The special meeting at Lebanon was held the week following the fifth Sunday in July with Rev. C. L. Spencer as pulpit help. The people were well pleased with his preaching. There were twelve conversions and reclamations, and nine accessions.

The fourth Sunday in August found us at Spring Church with Rev. S. W. Taylor assisting. The people were delighted with Brother Taylor's fine preaching. As a result of the meeting, seven were added to the church.

On the second Sunday in September we began the meeting at Pleasant Hill. Brother

G. W. Holmes was the engaged help; he did good preaching, and the people heard him gladly. This meeting was not as fruitful of visible results as the others but I believe much good was done. There was one conversion.

At the recent meeting of Northampton County Sunday School Association, Lebanon church captured two honors. Brother W. W. Grant was elected County President, and the church was awarded the banner for having the largest attendance based on miles traveled.

A. D. SHELTON.

Hobbs Chapel, Greensville Circuit.—Our special meeting began the fourth Sunday in August and closed the following Thursday. Pastor Powell preached on Sunday to a large congregation in spite of the fact that there were two other meetings beginning that day, and the regular service was held at a Baptist church near us. Brother Powell did his best. Some of the Baptist folk said, "We didn't know that you had such a good preacher." "No, you have never heard him before," was the reply.

Rev. Fred Paschall came on Monday. His first subject, "The Need of Every Community —A Revival." This was good, but each sermon was better. On Thursday morning, which we thought was the last service was the best! His subject was, "The School to Know More About Christ." In this school he said were three rooms. Firstly, The Room of the Open Book—Bible. We should study it. Secondly, The Room of Prayer. For a person to have power he must stay in this room much. Thirdly, The Room of Service. Every Christian must enter this room to follow Christ. At the noon hour some of the folk were so hungry for the Word they requested Brother Paschall to remain for another service. His closing message was "Be Thou Faithful unto Death." Brother Paschall preaches to saints and sinners; he shows the rewards of the faithful and the consequences of the wicked. Come again, Brother Fred.

The church was revived, there were reclamations, and one of our finest boys was converted and joined the church. His mother joined with us also; she was a member of the M. E. church.

Our fourth quarterly conference convenes here on Saturday before the first Sunday in October. We are looking forward to having Dr. and Mrs. Dixon with us at that time. Everybody is invited—members and visitors. Let's welcome them with a goodly congregation and fine reports! REPORTER.

Hollister, Halifax Charge.—Our revival began the fourth Sunday in August and closed the following Friday night. Rev. Edward Suits was our help in the meeting. He preached some good sermons and we enjoyed listening to him preach. Brother Suits made many friends while here with us. Come again, Brother Suits. There were five accessions to the church and many reclamations. To show our appreciation to Brother Suits for his faithful service to us we gave him a purse of $40. Our pastor preached another one of his good sermons last Sunday night.

Our Sunday school attendance is not as good now as it has been, owing to the fact that many of our boys and girls have gone to college. Many of our people enjoyed the Sunday school picnic last Saturday at Mr. Galloway's. The revival began at Harmony yesterday with Brother Bethea as pulpit help. We are glad to have Brother Bethea with us again and to hear him preach. Conference will soon be here and we have a lot to do before Conference.

KATHLEEN SHEARIN, Reporter.

Denton Church.—Our pastor filled his appointment last Sunday morning with a great sermon. We are always glad when the day comes for him to preach here at the home church, he always has something good to say.

On last Sunday night Rev. J. D. Cranford from Weaverville was a visitor in our church and preached for Mr. Henderson. He gave us a fine sermon.

Our Sunday school is beginning to gain again. Our C. E. Society is progressing nicely.

The ones that are not coming don't know how much they are missing by not being here each Sunday morning and evening.

Best wishes to the Herald.

REPORTER.

Midway, Haw River Circuit.—Last Sunday afternoon at three o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Allman came to us with a group of boys and girls from the Children's Home; they gave a splendid program that was enjoyed by all present; the collection was $17.00. After service we gave the children a picnic supper, which they seemed to enjoy. We feel that this is a wonderful work and may the Lord bless the good people who have charge of these children.

Christian Endeavor was conducted Sunday night by Henry Wilson; our young people still hold out faithful in this work. Sunday school is still moving along nicely and we have prayer meeting every third Sunday; last Sunday we had a good meeting led by Dr. W. A. Johnson.

MRS. G. W. APPLE, Reporter.

Rockingham.—The work here is moving along nicely. We have very good attendance at Sunday school. Our Phillips' evangelistic club is doing some good work.

We have very good attendance on Wednesday night prayer meeting. The young boys hold cottage prayer meeting on every Monday night conducted by Mr. Elvie Cox.

Our good pastor, Rev. J. H. Trollinger, filled his appointment at 11 o'clock on last Sunday. He read for a Scripture lesson the first chapter of Jonah; his theme was, Running away from God. He preached a real good sermon. We have so many today trying to shirk the work that God has for us to do. On the fourth Sunday in September, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Dixon, will be with us. We will have the Dedication sermon; everybody cordially invited to attend that Sunday service. We are just thanking God that Rockingham church is free from debt, and we as members can say that the church is ours. We ask the prayers of all the good people that it may be a growing church for God's service.

MRS. D. E. McKENZIE.

Stallings, Mecklenburg Charge.—Our special meeting began the first Sunday in August and ended the following Friday evening, with Rev. W. M. Pike as pulpit help. Brother Pike delivered some mighty fine sermons, and we are thankful for having been privileged to hear him. The outward appearance of interest was not so very great, nevertheless we feel certain that much good was accomplished in the hearts and lives of all who came out to the services. A number of Christians reconsecrated their lives to God, there were several conversions and one young lady, Miss Shirley Mae Drye, united with the church.

The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society are moving along fairly well, but we are hoping and praying for improvement. And while we are taking these two important steps let us not forget to take another—work.

On Saturday, August 20, the Christian Endeavor society went to Lake Lure and Chimney Rock. A number of the members had never before seen these grand towering mountains of their native state. Still others looked for the first time at the large beautiful lake which was completed within the past year. So of course everyone had a delightful time.

The Ladies' Aid met in August with Mrs. H. B. Furr, and in this month with Mrs. Carl Stallings. Both meetings were enjoyed by all present. The next meeting will be held October 6, at three o'clock at the parsonage with Mrs. H. T. Totten. The next devotional meeting will be held next Sunday in connection with the Christian Endeavor program.

Miss R. A. Drye, one of the young members of our church, who was a Sunday school teacher and Christian Endeavor member, left last week for Cullohwee State Normal. We miss her, but we also rejoice in her opportunity and wish her much success.

On Monday, September 12, about 4:00 a.m. Little William Broome, four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Broome, left this world to be with Jesus. Another "budded on earth to bloom in heaven." Little William was a bright and beautiful child and the sorrowing family has our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement. REPORTER.

Siler City.—The members of the Senior Christian Endeavor Society had a very interesting monthly meeting last Thursday night, September 15, at our church. Misses Clata and Oma Andrew served refreshments at the end of the meeting. Plans were made by the society to take charge of the Wednesday evening prayer services and also assist with other church work while our pastor is away at the Seminary. Our regular evening prayer service was well planned. There were nine honorary members added to our list.

Our Sunday school is doing splendid work. The Baracas raised $17.00 last Sunday morning, September 18, to paint their room. The Junior Philatheas will have an apron sale next Saturday, September 24, at Mr. J. A. Cooper's Store for the purpose of raising funds to beautify their room.

At the morning service last Sunday morning our pastor, Rev. F. L. Gibbs, delivered a good sermon on "The Immortal Touch," text John 3:16. A special selection was rendered by the choir, "Open Your Heart to Jesus." The church was almost filled with members of the church and a large number of visitors from other churches.

At the evening service Pastor Gibbs delivered another splendid sermon. This was our pastor's last message before leaving for Westminster Theological Seminary, Westminster, Md., where he will be in school this winter.

A business meeting of the members was called last Sunday for the purpose of electing officers for new conference year. E. D. Woody was re-elected Sunday school superintendent, Mrs. D. L. Johnson assistant, and Pearlie Moore press reporter. The committee stated that a heatrola would be placed in the building soon. Plans were made to pay all claims in full, and plans were also made for Rally Day service fifth Sunday in October.

We are glad to say Mrs. O. E. Stone and Miss Lebus Stone, who have been sick, are improving. REPORTER.

Mt. Carmel, West Lexington Charge.—Our Christian Endeavor met September 7th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Fritts with Virginia Helmistetler as leader, and September 14th with Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Fritts in Lexington, with Pauline Forcum as leader. A fine program was prepared and carried out by both of them. We are always glad to see our children willing and ready to take their part. Come on, parents, let's join them and be willing to take our part also and show them we are backing them by our prayers and our presence in the Christian Endeavor and Sunday school.

Brother Ridge filled his appointment September 18th at 3 p.m. with another helpful and effective sermon. REPORTER.

STARTING RIGHT

The work of the church must be rightly begun if it is to move forward successfully. After our people have returned from their vacations something special is needed to arouse their interest and enthusiasm. A well prepared Rally Day service can do this more effectively than anything else. With its splendid songs, pieces, drills, sketches, play, etc., there is an abundance of material from which to build one or two inspiring programs. With these and the special efforts for a large attendance and offerings the results are certain to be helpful. The next few months will feel the effect in every department of the church.

Rally Day belongs to the Board of Education. That is the order of the General Conference and we are entitled to the offerings received at that time up to the full amount of our educational quota. If the offerings are used for any other purpose the Board is deprived of what rightly belongs to it and is thereby hindered from rendering a better service.

Start the work of the fall and winter right by holding a Rally Day service. Put so much into the preparation that the day will be great and profitable in every respect and the offering worthy of your church and the cause of Christian education. If you have not sent for the supplies a card will get whatever you need. Send to Board of Education, Frank W. Stephenson, Executive Secretary, 613 W. Diamond Street, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pa.

NOTICE!

Daily Vacation Bible Schools

The Board of Young People's Work is attempting to complete reports as nearly complete as possible, of the Daily Vacation Bible Schools conducted by Methodist Protestant Churches, or in which our churches participated, during the past season.

Did you have a Vacation School in your church or community? Do you know of other Methodist Protestant Churches who participated in a school? Is so, won't you please jot down the names of the churches and their pastors, with the principals of the schools and addresses, and rush the list to Rev. Lawrence Little, executive secretary of the Board of Young People's Work, Concord, N. C.? Thank you!

Thanking you for your co-operation, I am

Yours in His service,

BETTIE S. BRITTINGHAM, Assistant.

KANNAPOLIS THANKS YOU!

In response to our appeal in recent issues of the Herald, many of the good friends of the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina and elsewhere have sent in substantial contributions toward the building of our Methodist Protestant Church in Kannapolis.

Most of these contributions have been acknowledge in former issues. Since these articles have appeared, we have received the following gifts:

J. S. Polk, R. M. Cox, S. L. Tesh, Miss Mary W. McCulloch, G. H. May, Purvis Neese, W. W. Grant, J. D. Lindsay, Mrs. T. O. Penders, Rev. C. Compher, H. W. Highfield.

This is just to say a hearty "Thank You" to each and every one of you. Every member of the church in Kannapolis, as well as others of us who are interested in seeing the project succeed, are deeply appreciative of the interest shown and assistance given.

The work in the church there is progressing splendidly with increasing attendance and interest. The membership of the church has nearly doubled since organization and the Sunday school is adding to its membership constantly.

We have received nearly half the amount needed to enable the local congregation to carry the financial responsibility. There are perhaps others who would like to contribute something. If so, it will be greatly appreciated and will help wonderfully in this strategic moment of life of this new enterprise.

No gifts to the Kingdom could be made that will yield larger returns than in this promising new field.

Thanking all who have and who yet may contribute toward the building of this new church, I am

Yours in His service,

D. A. McLAURIN.

FROM BROTHER BRASWELL

Please let my friends know that I am still confined to my room the most of the time with the very worst form of rheumatism. I have tried many kinds of medicine and a number of doctors, and I seem to grow worse instead of better. I have received some very sharp criticism for my complaining, but I cannot help complaining when it seems like the pains of death have got hold upon me. I have had four months of suffering. It will take God to tell how hard it has been to bear. I have made a hard fight to live. I never made a surrender to death until this morning about 4 o'clock. I felt like I had just as well to surrender the fight. It has been a very sad day to me. Again please allow me to say I have made a hard fight to live. I love life. Life is sweet to me. I would be glad to live a little while longer if it could be God's will. But if it is not His will, I am prepared to meet my Lord.

Brethren, I need your prayers. I am not worthy of the humblest being. But I am in need of Greatest God. My race is run. I am sorry for all my mistakes. I thank God for all my friends and what they have meant to me. Conference is near at hand but unless there is a great change in my health I will not be with you all. You may not miss me, but I will miss you all. I will be at the Big Conference. God bless you all; pray for me. Your sick fallen brother,

D. A. BRASWELL.

Mr. Noah is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Cicero Noah. He received his education at Sylvan High School, and possesses many fine qualities.

Their many friends will wish them much happiness. H. L. ISLEY.

The Pastor on Davidson reports that they are O. T. on A. C. B. His check did not reach Mr. Idol in time to get the report in this week's paper. Let us see how fast these columns will grow during the next few weeks. Remember that Sunday, October 16, has been set as Pay-Up Sunday. If we strive to pay up by that time it will give us two weeks to work on whatever deficits there may be.

We are pleading especially for the payment of College Assessment on each charge. There are reasons why we cannot afford to fail the college in this assessment. Surely this small amount can be gotten on any charge.

Faithfully yours in His service,
A. G. DIXON.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE NOTES

Six new members were added to the Ministerial Association of High Point College when it held its first regular meeting last Friday afternoon, with J. Elwood Carroll presiding.

This Association has shown a steady growth since its organization three years ago, and with the addition of six more new members, it brings the total number up to 13. This organization is endeavoring to meet the particular needs of the ministerial student and to help him solve his own particular problems. Not only do the students themselves discuss the problems, but each week some outside speaker comes to the meeting and brings a message.

The ministerial students are looking forward with a great deal of interest to the many interesting programs that are being planned for the year.

The following students are members of the Association this year: T. H. Pinton, E. O. Peeler, K. G. Holto, T. J. Whitehead, D. D. Broome, Monroe Bennett, P. E. Bingham, J. W. Braxton, W. B. Wood, T. G. Madison, J. E. Carroll, George Ridge and R. T. Halleck.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Nicholson

Miss Addie Leita Nicholson departed from this world of sin and sorrow, to live with Jesus, September 1, 1927. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Nicholson of Mt. Hermon church. Besides her parents she is survived by two sisters, Mrs. H. E. Whitsell of Elon College, and Mrs. Herbert Albright of Hawfields; one brother, Mr. Elbert Nicholson, and a large host of friends.

Miss Addie's body was laid to rest in Mt. Hermon cemetery September 3. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. A. Burgess, a former pastor, assisted by her present pastor, Rev. J. Elwood Carroll, and a neighbor, Rev. H. L. Isley. More than a church full of people were present to pay their last respects.

The floral offerings were many and beautiful. A large group of her cousins, also Ruby and Truth Isley, were flower girls. The pall bearers were her cousins and some friends in the community.

Miss Addie professed faith in Jesus Christ when she was young, and joined Mt. Hermon church, where she was faithful until her health failed her about four years ago. She was organist as long as she was able to attend church. For several years, she was teacher of the Philathea class, and she did anything else her hands found to do.

She was a very attractive young lady, and was loved by all who knew her for her loving disposition. It was a pleasure to visit her while she was sick, she bore her afflictions with patience, and she always wore a smile and was cheerful to the very last. We mourn over her loss, but we know we should rejoice, because of her gain.

J. ELWOOD CARROLL.

Reitzel

Julius Franklin Reitzel, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Reitzel, departed this life September 14, 1927, aged 51 years, five months, 28 days. Survived by: mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Reitzel, Liberty, N. C., his wife and two sons, Wiley and Franklin Jr, Tampa, Fla., One brother, Carl S. Reitzel, Tampa, Fla. One sister, Mrs. W. M. Hanner, Liberty, N. C.

Mr. Reitzel died at his home in Tampa, Fla., September 14th, and was brought to his home community where he was laid to rest. The writer assisted by Rev. W. M. Pike conducted the service.

May God bless the ones whose hearts have been made sad by the passing of this one that they loved.

F. L. GIBBS.

Ashley

John Ashley died September 17, 1927, aged 45 years, 10 months and 13 days. Funeral services were held at Chestnut Ridge Sunday afternoon, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. M. I. Crutchfield. A large congregation was present to pay respect to the memory of Brother Ashley.

Brother Ashley was converted and joined Union Grove church 25 or 30 years ago, where he remained a faithful member until death.

The circumstances of this death are very unusual. Ashley and a boy were riding on a truck; both jumped from the rear of the truck while it was making 30 or 35 miles per hour. Ashley was almost instantly killed, while the boy was badly hurt.

B. M. WILLIAMS.

Mrs. David I. Garner

On Sunday, September 4, the writer was called to Haw River to conduct the funeral of Sarah Hughes Garner, the wife of Rev. David I. Garner, who is the faithful pastor of Why Not charge. The writer was called to this funeral because of the fact that while he was pastor at Haw River church Mrs. Garner was a very faithful and beloved member, and during that time Brother Garner was received into the church, and at a later date he performed the marriage ceremony at their wedding. Rev. O. B. Williams of the Haw River church, Rev. S. W. Taylor of the Burlington church, and Rev. T. A. Williams of the Glen Raven church, assisted in the funeral. Rev. D. R. Williams of the Graham church was also present.

Mrs. Garner was 36 years old at her death. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sanda Hughes of Haw River. Rev. and Mrs. Garner were married April 12, 1914. Besides her husband and one little son, her father, mother and one sister of her immediate family still survive. These with a great host of friends mourn the loss of a good woman who has gone to her eternal reward. The writer best knew the deceased as a young woman. She is remembered because of her industry and the interest she took in her home and the church she loved and honored. The large attendance at the funeral showed the high esteem in which she was held by her many friends. After the funeral the body was beautifully laid to rest in the Graham cemetery. The Daughters of Liberty of which order she was an honored member took part in the service at the grave. The love and appreciation of many friends were expressed through the many beautiful floral contributions that were used as a final covering of the grave.

Brother Garner and the other relatives have the deepest sympathy of their many friends, and may God sustain them in this trying hour.

GEO. L. CURRY.

THANKS

We, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Hughes, wish to take this means of expressing our heartfelt thanks and appreciation for the kindly consideration rendered us by the good people of Haw River and others who most kindly assisted during the days of our bereavement and the interment of our beloved daughter, Sarah.

Our most benevolent appreciation goes out to those, especially, who most respectfully presented so many beautiful bowers.

May God bless you evermore.

They render this fine service free to the children. Drs. Clayton and McManus render dental service free to the children also.

We consider this a very fine way in which they support the Home, and means so much to us in a financial way.

The summer months are about over and as the fall comes on let us begin to put forth more effort in the Young People's Missionary Societies. We want the young people to have all the training that is possible in the Home Missionary work, so our Board has prepared the best program that we have ever had for the young people. Write Miss Pearl McCulloch, Greensboro, N. C., for programs and literature. I have the Star Cards and Buds of Hope certificates; will be glad to send any amount. The Star Cards can be used to help raise your budget, so please write for them. If there is a pastor who does not have a Young People's Society in his church, and would like to have someone come and help him organize one, please write me and I will see that you have some missionary women come and help organize.

I hope to hear that some church wants to organize before the winter months come.

Trying to Think the Unthinkable

Man prides himself on his ability to think. He looks with contempt upon the lower animals because they cannot think much and sometimes it seems that they cannot think at all. But man is a great thinker, so he imagines. By his power of thought he can trace effects to their causes, he can discover likenesses and differences and classify the objects around him. He can make new combinations, he can invent, he can force the powers of nature to do his bidding, he can ward off evils, he can subdue the enemies that would destroy him.

Man's intellectual endowment has enabled him to build up a great body of knowledge. He calls it "science," and takes great pride in it. It seems to him much greater than it is. If he could see how small it is in comparison with what it would be if everything about him were fully known, he would be humbled. Newton made extraordinary attainments, going beyond all predecessors, but he said he had only gathered a few pebbles on the shore of the great ocean of truth. Upon a little of the world we may look and say, "I know it." But the unknown remnant stretches out to illimitable lengths in all directions. Our ignorance is so vast and so profound that it would surely humble us if we only realized how great it is.

Knowing so little of the world as it is today, how can we imagine that we know much of the past of the world? Yet men do make the most positive declarations regarding the world of long ago. Some little find in the rocks sets imagination going, and the most confident conclusions are drawn from premises that warrant nothing but suspense of judgment. Much is offered in the name of science that has no kinship to science. Men know when they see, but they do not know when they merely imagine. Real thinking is a logical process and leads to real knowledge, but the processes of imagination are not logical and only by chance hit upon the truth. Only what men know is science. What they imagine is not science, even if true, and the great bulk of the products of imagination belongs to the realm of error. Yet we must constantly be on our guard to keep men from imposing on us with their fancies, their imaginings. They falsely label them "science," and sometimes deceive the very elect.

But if the past history of the world lies beyond the reach of our knowledge, what shall we say of the beginning of the world? Is any human mind capable of describing the beginning of things, telling how the series got started? Can any man make the great jump from Nothing to Something? "From nothing, nothing comes." But the world is here and we cannot doubt its existence. Was it always here or did it have a beginning? If it was always here, how did the parts come to be related to each other as they are? No man can answer. All must admit that design proves a designer. We are driven by the power of our own thought to the conclusion that the the world was created—made by a pre-existent Being of Infinite Power. But how did He make the world? Here our minds fail. We have no mental faculties capable of conceiving an act of creation. In the presence of this question we can only bow in profound worship.

Our Right to Life Only Relative

Has every man the right to live? Yes, for a time. But no man's title to life is absolute. It is relative. It depends on his relation to God certainly, if not on his relations to his fellowmen. God gives life and has, of course, the right to take it when He chooses. When God commanded Saul to exterminate the people of Amalek He had a right to issue the command and Saul was under obligation to execute the command. God seems to have decreed the death of all mankind and He has a right to determine when and how each man shall die. God may choose disease germs to execute His purpose or He may, as in the case cited, choose a human agent. God is no more cruel in one case than the other. Those who are horrified to find in the Old Testament God commanding men to destroy other men do not seem to be similarly affected by the spectacle of men dying from the attacks of infinitesimal creatures in the blood and flesh.

We should constantly in our thought set over against the decree of death passed upon us all the loving purpose of God to give eternal life to every soul that yields himself to Christ. We cannot claim eternal life as a right, but it is a great gift from God which may become ours for evermore.

Better Church Statistics

Reports of alarming losses in the membership of Protestant churches were published a few weeks ago in many papers. The reports seemed to emanate from a reliable source and were very disconcerting to friends and members of the Protestant churches. But it turns out that the report was only a partial one, taking no account of gains by the accessions of new members. As a matter of fact, complete statistics show that the Protestant churches have been growing faster than has the population. In the twenty years from 1906 to 1926 the churches gained 46.4 per cent while the population increased only 36.5 per cent. This is a more satisfactory situation. All the principal denominations enjoyed growth in the last score of years. Our own church has not grown as rapidly as a few others have grown, but still it has grown. In 1906 we had 178,544 member; in 1916, 186,908; in 1926, 189,583. Probably no church has grown as rapidly as it might, but there has been growth generally for which we ought to thank God and from which we ought to take courage and increase our efforts for the Kingdom as represented in our own church.

YIELDEDNESS

The accordion does not refuse to be carried about and played; the piano does not say who the performer shall be; the violin responds to the bow that fills its bosom with sweet harmonies; the chisel yields to the sculptor; the brush yields to the artist; and we should yield ourselves to the one perfect Musician, Sculptor, Artist, Christ Jesus. If He wants you to preach on the street corner, turn loose! If in a great church, shine! You failed once when having your own way. Why should you wish to try it again? Follow where He leads.—J. M. Bovee.

WHAT DO YOU MEAN, CHRISTIAN EDUCATION?

By Rev. L. K. Long

"Yes, I surely want my son to have a Christian education, and no other kind. None of your skepticism, or so-called free inquiry, or liberal thinking for me. I want my son taught the truth and nothing but the truth—the truth that he can live by, the truth that is good enough to die by." So, that is that.

"I want my son to be really educated, to be trained to recognize truth when he sees it. I want his mentality developed, and that without religious prejudice. If I had my way he should have no religious teaching whatever until such time as his intelligence is sufficiently developed to enable him to judge for himself." And this seems to be something quite different.

What Is Education?

"The systematic development and cultivation of the mind and other natural powers, and the direction of the feelings, the tastes, and the manners, by inculcation, example, experience, and impression." This is the dictionary definition. Education, thus, has to do with the acquisition of knowledge, with skill in doing things, with the development and discipline of man's various faculties and powers—physical, and mental, and spiritual. In short, it has to do with all that goes to make a full, rich, and serviceable life.

This brings us to the significant statement of Herbert Spencer: "It behooves us to set before ourselves, and ever to keep clearly in view, complete living as the end to be achieved; so that in bringing up our children we may choose subjects and methods of instruction, with deliberate reference to this end."

Worth-While Knowledge

Because of the great number and variety of studies offered, wisdom is necessary in making a selection. Herbert Spencer, in his brief but monumental treatise on education, comes to our aid with a discerning classification of the leading kinds of activity which constitute human life. This list, of course, suggests the type of studies that should prepare pupils for the completest living. Here are the items: "1. Those activities which directly minister to self-preservation; 2. Those activities which, by securing the necessities of life, indirectly minister to self-preservation; 3. Those activities which have for their end the rearing and discipline of offspring; 4. Those activities which are involved in the maintenance of proper social and political relations; 5. Those miscellaneous activities which make up the leisure part of life, devoted to the gratification of the tastes and feelings."

With full appreciation of the fundamental value of the five activities named by Spencer, I should very much like to add a sixth: Those religious thoughts and feelings, those aspirations and activities that ally man, more closely than any other earthly creature, to God and to the higher spiritual order—making it possible in this relation to God to realize a high and holy life.

It is perfectly natural for a scientist to magnify the importance of the methods of his specialty, and to fully appreciate the value of the results of scientific investigation. After setting forth the worth of science as it is concerned with the various activities of life as before listed, Spencer continues:

"Thus to the question with which we set out—What knowledge is of most worth?—the uniform reply is—Science. This is the verdict on all counts. For direct self-presesvation, or the maintenance of life and health, the all-important knowledge is—Science. For that indirect self-preservation which we call gaining a livelihood, the knowledge of greatest value is—Science. For the due discharge of parental functions, the proper guidance is to be found only in—Science. For that interpretation of national life, past and present, without which the citizen cannot rightly regulate his conduct, the indispensable key is—Science. Alike for the most perfect production and highest enjoyment of art in all its forms, the needful preparation is still—Science. And for purposes of discipline—intellectual, moral, religious—the most efficient study is, once more—Science. The question which at first seemed so perplexed, has become, in the course of our inquiry, comparatively simple. We have not to estimate the degrees of importance of different orders of human activity, and different studies as severally fitting us for them; since we find that the study of Science, in its most comprehensive meaning, is the best preparation for all these orders of activity."

Science and Religion

Religion, as it evident from this paragraph, is not absent from Spencer's thinking; though, for some reason, he omits it from the list of great human activities. He quotes from Professor Huxley a paragraph that should be pasted in the Bible of every college student:

"True science and true religion," says Professor Huxley, "are twin-sisters, and the separation of either from the other is sure to prove the death of both. Science prospers exactly in proportion as it is religious; and religion flourishes in exact proportion to the scientific depth and firmness of its basis. The great deeds of philosophers have been less the fruit of their intellect than of the direction of that intellect by an eminently religious tone of mind. Truth has yielded herself rather to their patience, their love, their single-heartedness, and their self-denial, than to their logical acumen."

In order to further emphasize the relation of science and religion I am also giving here two important paragraphs from Spencer himself. He says:

"So far from science being irreligious, as many think, it is the neglect of science that is irreligious—it is the refusal to study the surrounding creation that is irreligious. Take a humble smile. Suppose a writer were daily saluted with praises couched in superlative language. Suppose the wisdom, the grandeur, the beauty of his works, were the constant topics of the eulogies addressed to him. Suppose those who unceasingly uttered these eulogies on his works were content with looking at the outsides of them; and had never opened them, much less tried to understand them. What value should we put on their praises? What should we think of their sincerity? Yet, comparing small things with great, such is the conduct of mankind in general, in reference to the Universe and its Cause. Nay, it is worse. Not only do they pass by without study, these things which they daily proclaim to be so wonderful; but very frequently they condemn as mere triflers those who give time to the observation of Nature—they actually scorn those who show any active interest in these marvels. We repeat, then, that not science, but the neglect of science, is irreligious. Devotion to science is a tacit worship—a tacit recognition of worth in the things studied; and by implication in their Cause. It is not a mere lip-homage, but a homage expressed in actions—not a mere professed respect, but a respect proved by the sacrifice of time, thought, and labor.

"Nor is it thus only that true science is essentially religious. It is religious, too, inasmuch as it generates a profound respect for, and an implicit faith in, those uniform laws which underlie all things. By accumulated experiences the man of science acquires a thorough belief in the unchanging relations of phenomena—in the invariable connection of cause and consequence—in the necessity of good or evil results. Instead of the rewards and punishments of traditional belief, which men vaguely hope they may gain, or escape, spite of their disobedience; he finds that there are rewards and punishments in the ordained constitution of things, and that the evil results of disobedience are inevitable. He sees that the laws to which we must submit are not only inexorable but beneficent. He sees that in virtue of these laws, the process of things is ever towards a greater perfection and a higher happiness. Hence he is led constantly to insist on these laws, and is indignant when men disregard them. And thus does he, by asserting the eternal principles of things and the necessity of conforming to them, prove himself intrinsically religious."

Sectarian Education?

I imagine that the majority of those who are most insistent in the demand that their children be given a Christian education, are really asking for a sectarian education. They want their young people kept in precisely that form of religious belief and practice which they have come to hold and to think of as most true and sacred.

Many Roman Catholics speak of our public schools as godless. To these persons all education must be religious and administered by their own church authorities. Its purpose, to a considerable extent, is to so warp and prejudice the mind of the child that it will henceforth be loyal to the church in which they are bringing it up. Many much smaller sects oppose any type of education that familiarizes their children with a fair representation of the religious ideas and ideals of the more progressive sorts of Christian thinkers.

Normal schools, agricultural schools, law schools, medical schools, engineering schools, and such like, are almost always free from sectarian influence. A theological seminary is usually connected with a denomination, but most of them are administered liberally, and students and teachers of many denominations mingle freely and with mutual respect and benefit. Most denominational colleges insist in their catalogs that they are "Christian, but not sectarian;" though some of them scarcely make good the latter part of their claim.

The multiplication table, square root, the propositions of Euclid, the microscope, the telescope, test tubes, the Roentgen rays—none of these are denominational instruments or methods.

Christian Education

Christian education gives special consideration to certain facts and principles, arranges for special influences to be brought to bear upon pupils, is administered by carefully selected Christian men and women who keep Christian motives and Christian service prominently in mind in the hope that their pupils will become active faithful Christians.

But it may be easy to thwart the Christian purpose. A little too much authority in insisting on these things may defeat the aim. Truth in itself is so lovely, the life of righteousness is so appealing to all that is noble and adventurous in a young person, the divine ordering of life has connected with it so many intricate and interesting problems, the search for the mind of the Master is so fascinating and rewarding—in short, the Christian character is so fine and good that we may depend for its propagation on the contagion of contact, more than on insistent sectarian teaching and influence.

As colleges and schools are starting on a new year's work the most prominent feeling on the part of pupils should be that of gratitude for opening opportunities just ahead. In view of the fact that unfamiliar ideas and teachings must of necessity be encountered in the class-room, both parents and pupils may well have a feeling of confidence in Truth and in the God of Truth. There may be dangers lurking about, but we may be sure that light, and law, and love—and the God of these three are in the hearts and minds of studious boys and girls.

The Bible is a window in this prison-world, through which we may look into eternity.—H. Clay Trumbull.

WAYNE B. WHEELER AND THE FUTURE OF PROHIBITION

The death of Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler has been made the occasion of altogether deserved eulogies of his ability and services to the cause of prohibition. We fear that it has also been made the occasion of attempts to make it appear that the success of the prohibition cause rested upon Mr. Wheeler's ability and indefatigable efforts. Nothing could be further from the truth; and this in no way detracts from full recognition of Mr. Wheeler's devoted and fruitful career.

For two years his close friends have known that Mr. Wheeler was facing the probability of early death. He had the habit of work. Time and again he was strongly advised to dismiss his work from his mind, to betake himself to new surroundings and there to occupy himself with other interests. He would leave his office, ostensibly to be gone for a long period of time, but shortly would be back at his desk, working harder than ever. He would leave his office for his home to "rest" and spend his time at the telephone conferring with friends and associates.

And then his charming and gifted wife burned to death before his eyes. It was a crushing tragedy and his depleted strength did not enable him to survive it.

Mr. Wheeler's services are too well known to need comment. It was, however, as a lawyer that his services were outstanding. In the later period of his career, legislative matters were decided in an organized conference of representatives of the Anti-Saloon League and other organizations. As counsel, however, he stood alone and loomed large. No cause could have been better served by a legal adviser.

He is pictured as a fanatical lobbyist, wielding the political influence of blind followers, a cracker of the whip. Congress, it is said, was terrorized by him. An absurd picture! The truth is that no major important legislation in support of prohibition was passed by Congress between the passage of the Volstead Act and the passage of the reorganization legislation enacted by the recent Congress at its latest session. This was not Mr. Wheeler's fault, but it certainly does not support the picture of a czar.

The Congressmen who have voted to support prohibition have done so because they believe in prohibition and because their constituents believe in prohibition and for no other reason whatever. The passing of Mr. Wheeler will not alter their faith or the faith of their constituents. So long as the people desire that the prohibition laws remain on our statute books, just so long will the prohibition cause command the loyal support of its present large majority in Congress.

There are only two things which can change the Congressional support of prohibition: Destruction or dissipation of the organization and influence of anyone of the major organizations supporting the policy, or such neglect by the temperance organizations of the work of education that a generation will appear upon the scene unable to contrast the existing situation with the situation which existed before prohibition.—Clarence True Wilson.

PREACHING THE CROSS

Jonathan Edwards, in his dairy of David Brainerd, says that this apostle to the Indians for some time thought that the best way to make men sober was by preaching to them the attributes of God, and keeping the Cross in the background. But he found the whole thing a failure; he could not produce one sober man. "Then," he says, "I bethought me that I would go and preach Jesus Christ; and many a hard face relaxed, many an eye shed tears that had never wept before, and I found that the best way to make men sober was to make them spiritual;" and from that time he glorified in and held for nothing but the Cross.—Selected.

FOREIGN MISSIONS—A PLEA FOR PRAYER

In a very recent article I made an appeal for funds in response to the S. O. S. call sent by Rev. J. F. Minnis for some special needs in connection with his work in India.

One item of this call was for five scholarships for five of our boys in High School. All of these boys have been supported by individual parties. I have written each of these individuals appealing for the continuation of their support with the hope and expectation of favorable response.

Another item of this call was for sixty dollars to pay one-half the expenses of two boys in a Teacher Training College preparing to become native teachers. One-half of their expenses is paid by relatives. I am hoping that one person or organization may be moved to send the full sixty dollars or two persons or organizations may be moved to send thirty dollars each for the support of these two boys.

A third item of this call was for seventy-five dollars with which to purchase grass or hay for the cows on the farm. For these cows to live and to supply milk for the workers they must have food. Here awaits a real missionary opportunity, different to be sure, for some to lay hold of.

And finally there was the call for sixty dollars for Christmas presents for the boys in the school, for the teachers—two dollars each—and for the laborers at the school and on the farm—one dollar each. This will have to come soon that it may reach them in time for Christmas. As Rev. Minnis writes, "In this land a little goes along way but we really need that little." I am so anxious that adequate response be made to this appeal and thereby bring this "bit" of joy and happiness to these easily satisfied hearts at this joyous gift season of the year. And not an adequate response to this one alone but to all so essential is it that these funds shall be forthcoming.

Now so forcefully have these financial needs been thrust upon my heart that to me it has become a vital matter of daily earnest prayer. There is so much to be done and such a small amount of money with which to do that I am constrained to resort to prayer. And why not?

The great cause of modern Foreign Missionary enterprise was born in prayer. Witness the "hay stack group" in prayer and real Foreign Missionary activity given birth.

For a number of years now the women of the different Foreign Missionary organizations hold their annual "Day of Prayer." In 1925 practically 1,000,000 women observed and participated in this Day of Prayer. In 1926 it became world-wide, the Christian women of every nation asking to have a part in this great day. Plans are even now completed for the observance of this day this year. Our own Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was born in prayer and in prayerful effort has grown and developed into one of our very strongest and most efficient missionary organizations.

Horace Starr Williams, our lone missionary in China at the present time writes that a number of the missionaries dwelling in Tientsin, China, until they can return to their respective posts of duty spend three hours daily together in prayer and a revival spirit, unknown among them for years, is resulting. And Dr. Zwemer adds this: "I know a medical missionary in South Persia, in charge of a hospital, who told me that he could not get along with his work unless he spent two and one-half hours in prayer and Bible study every day."

Jesus conditions the securing of every need of missionary enterprise upon prayer.

In our need for funds He says: "Ask and it shall be given." The African Inland Mission resorts to prayer and prayer alone for its financial needs and the necessary funds come.

In our need for missionaries He says: "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." And when he sends them they are the very ones most needed and the most efficient.

In our desire for the establishment of His kingdom in the hearts of the children of men He says: "Pray ye, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

Hence this plea for prayer. God has laid it upon my heart. How many will join me in this daily prayer circle for our Foreign Missionary work and just ask God to supply every need as He alone can?

RHODE ISLAND AVENUE INTERMEDIATES ARE WINNERS!

One of the finest reports I have seen of the activities of a Christian Endeavor Society has just come to my desk from the Rhode Island Avenue Intermediate Society of Washington, D. C. The Society is working on the Denominational Standards Chart with a very fine showing. Although it has only a small membership, it is recognized as one of the best societies in the Washington Intermediate Union, with a total of 24 societies in the union. The president and the pianist of the City Union are both members of this society.

Six of the members of the society attended the Young People's Institute at Westminster, Md., this summer and took back home a great inspiration for larger service. The Institute awards a "Foreign Missions Banner" each year to the society in the Maryland Conference Union that gives the largest amount to Foreign Missions. The Rhode Island Intermediates resolved to take the banner. Their goal was $175.00. They failed to secure the $175, but actually raised a total of $225.00—fifty dollars more than their goal! Most of this amount was secured by means of the regular monthly Missionary Offerings, and the balance from a lawn fete, a table at the church's annual bazaar, and by the members selling candy.

One rather unique feature of the society membership roll is the fact that they do not have any Associate Members, for the reason that every member has become a Christian, has joined the church and signed the Active Membership pledge. Every member is a tither and a Comrade of the Quite Hour.

The society gave an Easter party for the children of the Central Union Mission of Washington, and sent a large collection of post cards to our missionaries in India for distribution to the mission children.

Rev. R. Y. Nicholson, the President of the Maryland Conference Young People's Union, is pastor of this fine bunch of Intermediates. Miss Virginia Pile is the society reporter.

At the Young People's Institute this summer, the writer had the privilege of sitting at the table in the dining room with this live crowd and thoroughly enjoyed their interest and splendid spirit. This report of their activities is very heartening indeed.

HER EASY CHAIR

A dear old saint who had seen much trouble, and was in dire need, was asked if she ever felt like murmuring. She replied, "When I do, I just ask the Lord to put me in the easy chair, and keep me quiet." The visitor, seeing no easy chair about, asked what she meant. "My easy chair," she said, "is Romans 8:28: 'All things work together for good to them that love God.' "—Record of Christian Work.

A STRONG ARGUMENT FOR IMMORTALITY

Love tells us that there is no destruction in death—that the comradeship of the spirit is beyond the reach of interference. This experience of immortality, which it is possible for us all to have while we are still on earth, softens the loneliness of the physical separation that death brings. Death with a gentle touch comes to some who are weary with life, and whispers softly, "There, you are tired now. Rest awhile upon the Everlasting Arms." And the sick one answers, "Yes, I am tired now and will gladly rest, but I refuse to sleep forever. When I am refreshed I want to wake and to have another chance to work and laugh and love." By our continued experience of uninterrupted fellowship we whose spirits are in close comradeship with the spirit of Him whose pilgrimage on earth has ended, know that He has awakened and is living, is rested and active.

True, our physical ear no longer hears the accent of his voice. True, our lips no longer speak our message to Him. But we do not have to be forever talking to realize the presence of the loved ones of our heart. There is a comradeship of the spirit with no words spoken. As we sit together within the same room we often discover that words interrupt the depths of comradeship that silence gives. We are at work, reading, writing, thinking, and our wife is at her work, reading, sewing, planning. No word passes between us, and yet we are conscious of one another's presence and the work that we are doing is the better done because of that silent comradeship of spirit.

It may even be that we are not in the same room and yet that mysterious comradeship of eternal spirits is the most definite experience in our consciousness. So, when the spirit of him whom we have loved has been released from the limitation of the flesh, we know that the comradeship of the spirit is in no way interrupted. Love has never and never will acknowledge that its fellowship will be destroyed. Here on earth we live in one of the smaller rooms, in God's great house; at death we pass into a larger and brighter room in the one house of the one Father. A wall within a house can never separate eternal spirits who are believers in God and in His creative love. The ceiling in God's House is high, indeed, and we on earth and they in heaven live together under it.

When the evidence is all in—the universal belief in immortality, the God-given yearning within every soul that comes to maturity, the intuitions of our own hearts, our experience of comradeshipe with loved ones passed from earth, the powers that we possess, powers too great for a short life to be lived only upon the earth, the desire of the soul at its best for perfect holiness, the promises of Him who would not tell a lie, we sing with Alfred Tennyson:

"Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
Thou madest man, he knows not why;
He thinks he was not made to die,
And Thou hast made him; Thou are just."

AN INDISPENSABLE PART

If Christ is the door, you are the doorkeeper, to open or close it for others. If He is the light of the world, you are the bearer of that light to the end of the earth. If He is the vine, you are the fruit-bearing branch that draws life from that vine. If He is the bread of life, you are to break it to feed those who hunger. If He is the truth, you are the truth-bearer, the interpreter of the truth. If He is the bright and morning star, you are to brush aside the clouds that veil His beauty from the world, that humanity may see and live forever. Oh, glorious Truth that we are an indispensable part of the great plan and program of the Father.—Rosalie Mills Appleby.

GRIEVING THE HOLY SPIRIT

There is a particular frame and temper of soul, a sobriety of mind, without which the Spirit of God will not concur in the purifying of our hearts. It is in our power, through His preventing and assisting grace, to prepare this in ourselves, and he expects we should, this being the foundation of all his after works. Now this consists in preserving our minds in a cool and serious disposition, in regulating and calming our affections, and calling in and checking the inordinate pursuits of our passions after the vanities and pleasures of this world. The doing of which is of such importance, that the very reason why men profit so little under the most powerful means, is, that they do not look enough within themselves; they do not observe and watch the discords and imperfections of their own spirits, nor attend with care to the directions and remedies which the Holy Spirit is always ready to suggest.

Men are generally lost in the hurry of life, in the business or pleasures of it, and seem to think that their regeneration, their new nature, will spring and grow up within them, with as little care and thought of their own as their bodies were conceived, and have attained their full strength and stature; whereas, there is nothing more certain, than that the Holy Spirit will not purify our nature, unless we carefully attend to His motions, which are lost to us, while, in the prophet's language, we "scatter away our time;" while we squander away our thoughts upon unnecessary things, and leave our spiritual improvement, the one thing needful, quite unthought of and neglected . . . Surely there is not any temper of mind less a friend to the spirit of religion, than a thoughtless, inconsiderate one, that by a natural succession of strong and vain affections, shuts out everything useful from their souls, till at length they are overtaken by a fatal lethargy; they lose sight of all danger, and become insensible of divine convictions; and, in consequence, quite disappoint all the blessed means of restoration. If, therefore, we measure the Holy Spirit's concern for the sins of men by degrees of his disappointment, we may conclude, that there is no state of mind that grieves him more, unless that of actual wickedness. —Extract from a Sermon by John Wesley.

Yet the history of thought brings to our view men who have been ambitious enough to try to describe the beginnings of all things. They were "philosophers," "lovers of wisdom," perhaps, but what they gave us is far from being wisdom. They wrestled long with the problem of "becoming," trying to explain how a thing can change and become other than it was. Their explanations are as luminous as mud. One Greek philosopher asserted that there is no such a thing as motion and proved his assertion by this argument: "A thing cannot move where it is. Neither can it move where it is not. But it has no other place to move. Therefore it cannot move at all." He overlooked the essential alternative that a thing can move from where it is to where it is not.

A German philosopher solved the problem of existence by making nothing synonymous with something reduced to its smallest dimensions. An infinite number of these little nothings constitutes the world. One of them is inappreciable, undistinguishable from nothing, but taken in the aggregate they make up the universe.

Instead of their absurd attempts to explain what cannot be explained, how much better it would be if philosophers would candidly admit their inability and would join themselves to the great body of worshipers.

Our mental powers rightly used will lead us, not away from God, not into atheism, but they will lead us to God and leave us in His Presence as profound and joyful worshipers.

The WORK and the WORKERS

The next few days will keep me on the go so much that I will not have time to get the financial statement ready for the HERALD. That will give one more week to send in money from your charge. Five weeks bring us to Conference, so we must be busy for the Master. Remember that the report as set up in the HERALD will be put into the Journal just as each charge makes it by the time Conference meets.

Rally Day

It is almost time now for Rally Day, and yet if you have not already done so you can yet order Rally Day supplies from Rev. F. W. Stephenson, D. D., 613 West Diamond Street, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pa., and get ready by some Sunday in October. Hold the Rally Day at any cost. The offering will count on G. C. B.

Pay-Up Day

October 16th has been set as Pay-Up Sunday. Let us do our best. Thank you.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. DIXON.

A TIME OF SEPARATION

Schools bells are ringing again, marking the close of the long vacation and all over the land the children and the young folks are at the great American job of obtaining an education. The beginning of the school year is a time of change and sadness with many. It is then that the mother kisses her baby good-by and tearfully watches him march proudly down the road to school for the first time. It is then also that the big boy or girl, finished with high school, leaves home for college or for work and we, the fathers and mothers, know that while vacations will bring them back for short periods, the chances are that they never will return for long. So we are lonesome and sad.

But if these sons and daughters of ours are happy and if they make useful citizens, we must be content, for such is the way of life.—American Agricultural.

A DAILY PRAYER

Grant, O Lord, more love, deeper humility, greater simplicity and sweeter patience, increasing faith and perfect obedience; purity, peace, power; the joy of the Lord and comfort of the Holy Spirit. And always perfect victory over the world, the flesh, self and the devil. That I may be pleasing to Thee in thought, word and deed. That the smile of Thine approval may rest upon me, that I may prosper in spirit, soul and body, and be preserved entire without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.—Selected.

WEIGHTY WORDS FROM A SEMINARY PRESIDENT

The Union Theological Seminary of Richmond, Va., a Southern Presbyterian institution, recently inaugurated a new president, the Rev. R. B. Lacy, D. D. The following impressive paragraphs, including the heading are from his notably able inaugural address, published in The Presbyterian of the South of May 18, 1927:

Naturalism vs. Supernaturalism

"Our problem is made more complicated by the fact that theological training in America today can be broadly divided into two groups, those who teach naturalism and those who hold to supernaturalism. It has come to pass that the conflict today is not on doctrines which one evangelical Church holds as against another, but on the great doctrines which are common to all. The seminaries of past days devoted much time to the doctrines which were peculiar to their particular denominations—affusion as over against immersion in baptism—and the various points in which Calvinism differed from Arminianism, and indeed in which one branch of Calvinism differed from another. Today, however, we are not fighting at the outposts but at the citadel itself, and if we wage war around an outpost today, we must do so and show that we are doing so, because its loss would more easily permit the taking of the central fort. Our lines have been drawn close, and the present conflict in theological life is between those who hold to a personal God, to a Savior pre-existent, Virgin-born, possessed of miraculous powers over men and nature, offering Himself for the sins of the world, risen from an empty tomb, ascended, and interceding for His Church, and who shall one day return, as against those who deny many if not all of these doctrines.

"In the case of such conditions, what is a theological seminary's task? Our students can go out to a disquieted people and do one of three things. They can dodge or they can dogmatize or they can say, 'Come now and let us reason together.' They can take those disquieted men or women, boys or girls, and lead them along paths which they themselves have trod, past the opposition of science falsely so-called, past the scareheads of 'accepted scholarship' to the assurance of those things verily believed. It means arduous work for them; it means that we must give them here facilities to equip themselves to meet these issues.—Selected.

THE LORD LED HIM

How often we sing, "He leadeth me, oh, blessed thought," but how seldom do we ask Him to do so or give Him the opportunity! Arriving at a town late one night, a colporteur at Oaxaca, Mexico, found the door slammed in his face when the owner discovered that an "accursed Protestant" had got him out of bed. Walking down the street he asked God to guide him to a friendly door. He knocked at a door; would they accept a wayfarer for the night? "Yes, come in! Come in!" Entering he took his place by the side of the fire which burned brightly in a corner of the room.

"What is your business?" they asked. "I sell literature," he replied. "Not this Protestant literature?" they exclaimed. Was he to be turned out again? It would be so easy to lie or to evade the question. It was very late, and the night was cold and dark, and if he was cast out, no one would open his door at this hour to take him in. No one would know if he struck his colors. Oh, yes, his Master would. "Yes, I sell the Bible which tells the way of life," he boldly replied, and waited to see the friendly look disappear from their faces.

Joy filled his heart, for he had not denied his Lord as one, centuries before, had done at the side of a similar fire. "Oh, indeed! We are so glad, for we saw a New Testament months ago and have been searching for you that we might buy one." To him the whole room seemed to brighten, as if the divine Presence was made manifest, and around that fire until late at night he "opened to them the Scriptures." Next morning he went on his way rejoicing.—Forward.

VISION

Jesus crystallized the idea of Faith which is held in solution throughout the Bible, and rests on the assumption of two worlds. There is the physical world which lies 'round us on every side, and of which our bodies are a part. This is one environment, and the instrument of knowledge here is sight. There is the spiritual world which is hidden by the veil of the physical and of which our souls are a part. This is another environment, and the instrument of knowledge here is faith. There is an order in the education of humanity, and the first lesson is not faith, but sight. The race, and each individual in his turn, begins with the experience of the physical; seeing visible objects, handling material possessions, hearing audible voices, looking at flesh-and-blood people. It is a new and hard lesson to realize the spiritual: to enter into the immaterial, inaudible, invisible, intangible life of the soul; to catch a voice that only calls within, to follow a mystical presence through a trackless wilderness, to wait for an inheritance that eye hath not seen, to store our treasure on the other side of the grave. This is to leave our kindred and our father's house, and to go into a land which God will show us. It is to emerge from the physical, it is to enter into the spiritual spheres. It is an immense advance; it is a tremendous risk. Any one who shifts the center of his life from the world which is seen to the world which is unseen deserves to be called a believer. Abraham was the first man in history who dared to make this venture and cast himself on God. He discovered the new world of the soul, and is to this day the father of the faithful.—Ian Maclaren.

A DAY AT A TIME

"Be not anxious for your life." "The worst of our fears never happen," said Gladstone, the "Grand Old Man" of England. After years of forebodings in government, after many misunderstandings with the crowned heads of Europe, after motives of Christian service had been misconstrued, Gladstone bore testimony that the things that worried him most never happened!

Jesus realized, as He went about among men and women, how many people were carrying unnecessary burdens. Just as is happening today. Mothers are worrying themselves sick about their children and cumbered about much serving; fathers, fearful of the years ahead, buying the home, paying for children's education, carrying business responsibility. And the strength needed for life's battle is sapped during sleepless nights and fretful days.

How can we overcome these weaknesses? How can we go out into the challenge of the day armed with the courage of conquerors? Jesus said, "Ye must become as a child." Whoever saw a boy who worried where his next meal was coming from, or what would happen when his shoes were worn out? He knows mother will take care of the dinner, and dad will fix his shoes. Even further did Jesus go when He said: "Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat. . . . Is not life more than the food, and the body than the raiment?"

> "Now every morning is the love
> Our waking and uprising prove—
> Through sleep and darkness safely brought,
> Restored to life and power and thought."

TWO MASTERS

No man can serve two masters.—Matthew 6:24.

One master calls to ease and pomp and pelf,
The Other calls to hardship and—Himself.
One master calls to sunny luxury,
The Other calls to dark Gethsemane.
One master calls to power and to pride,
The Other Master is the Crucified.
One master leads on flowery paths and gay,
The Other Master walks the narrow way.
One master summons us to silken bed,
The Other had no place to lay His head.
One master calls us to a golden throne,
The Other to a desert leads His own.
One master calls where throngs their roses strew,
The Other humbly walks with very few.
But he, the master of luxurious ease,
Leads at the last to gloom and agonies;
While He who bids us toil alone with Him
Leads us at length to throngs of seraphim.
Yet, blessed Master, were Thy toils and tears
Extended ever through the endless years,
Still would Thy servants welcome poverty,
And fare through any wilderness with Thee;
For though Thy servants find the world their own,
We seek it not; we rest in Thee alone.

—By Amos R. Wells.

"BUT WE SEE JESUS"

I don't look back; God knows the fruitless efforts
The wasted hours, the sinning, the regrets;
I leave them all with Him who blots the record,
And mercifully forgives, and then forgets.

I don't look forward; God sees all the future,
The road that, short or long, will lead me home,
And He will face with me its every trial,
And bear for me the burdens that may come.

But I look up—into the face of Jesus,
For there my heart can rest, my fears are stilled;
And there is joy, and love, and light for darkness,
And perfect peace, and every hope fulfilled.

THE CURE FOR WORLDLINESS

We generally think in this way: if we could only cure the worldliness of the Church, what an impulse would be given to the cause of missions. But what if the better and more hopeful order be rather this: If we could only stir up a proper enthusiasm for the cause of missions, for the glory of God, for the advancement of His Kingdom, for the doing of His will on earth as it is done in heaven, would not worldliness cure itself?—Selected.

THE VIRTUE OF SILENCE

John Wesley one day remarked to Adam Clarke, "As I was walking, I observed two women standing opposite to one another. One was speaking and gesticulating violently, while the other stood perfectly still and in silence. Just as I came up, and was about to pass them, the violent woman, clenching her first and stamping her foot at her imperturable neighbor, exclaimed, 'Speak, wretch, that I may have something to say!' Adam," said Wesley, "that was a lesson to me; silence is often the best answer to abuse."—Selected.

THE REBELLION OF ANTONE

Miss Mills glanced up quickly from the spelling papers: "Antone Ridolfi, what have you there?"

"Jus' a pin, teacher."

"A pin? Bring it to the desk."

"No, ticher."

"What, Antone? I said bring it to the desk."

"No, ticher."

A puzzled and somewhat baffled expression passed over the teacher's pretty face. Antone—hitherto ready to spring to obedience at her slightest request! Dependable little Antone, whose devotion to her she so often likened to that of a faithful dog! Her Antone—rebellious! Quietly she spoke, but her tone demanded obedience.

"Come to the desk." The boy with hanging head, came forward. Miss Mills leaned toward him:

"Antone, what does this mean? You have never disobeyed me before. Why do you refuse to give me the pin?"

The boy raised pleading dark eyes to her face: "Ticher, I—I don't want I should give it to you."

"Where did you get it, Antone?"

"I bring it to school."

"Why?"

There was nothing saucy about his answer. "Because I want to. I bring pin all the days."

"But why? You must have some reason. What were you doing with it?"

"I just hold it and show it to Michael."

"But what did you intend to do with the pin? You—you weren't going to hurt anybody, Antone?"

"No, ticher, I just hold it and show it to Michael."

"You weren't scratching the desk?"

"No, ticher, I just hold it and show it to Michael."

"Antone, I'm going to ask you once more—will you give me the pin?"

The trembling mouth grew stubborn and again the lids drooped.

"No, ticher."

"Take your seat, Antone."

Little Miss Mills, outwardly unruffled, picked up her book. "We will have the arithmetic lesson now. Listen closely as I read the problem. I wish to see hands for the answer. Five, minus three, plus six, plus two, minus four, times five, equals—answer? Lucile Watkins. Twenty? Wrong. Listen once more."

As the teacher finished the repetition, a lone hand was timidly raised. In the back row, Teresa Spanelli, after vain endeavor to attract attention by "ahems" and wiggles, finally lifted her voice:

"Miss Mills, Antone's got his hand up."

This information evidently failed to score. "Has he?" replied the teacher, without so much as a glance at either one.

"Yes'm; ain't you goin' to call on him?"

"No."

The hand was quickly lowered, not to be lifted again during the session.

When the bell announced intermission, Miss Mills noticed that the boy remained in his seat until her sharply repeated order that every one form in line impelled him to join the others. From the window she studied the forlorn little figure in the yard, and pondered. She was not accustomed to having her orders deliberately disobeyed. The boy was evidently as determined as herself. That there was a reason for his defiant attitude she felt certain, but—

Pedro Cadenna's high-pitched voice called her to sudden realization that something was about to happen.

"Come on, you kids! Let's take the pin away from him! He ain't fit to play with pins. He can't even talk plain English!"

The smoldering fire in the girl's eyes kindled as she turned quickly toward the staircase. "They shan't take it away from him," she muttered.

"May I detain you just a moment, Miss Mills? I'd like your O. K. on a couple of these reports." Principal Williams laid the papers on the broad window-sill in the hall, and began to sort them, while his subordinate nervously awaited his word. From the yard came new sounds of commotion and struggle, and she knew that the suggested battle was on. Occasionally Antone's protesting voice reached her ears and her fist unconsciously clenched.

"These are the ones, Miss Mills; if you will just glance them over, please."

With suppressed impatience she reached for the sheets. Then Pedro's voice again penetrated the noisy confusion: "Sandro's got it! Quick! Throw it into the street, Sandro!"

The girl's lips trembled. "Oh, Mr. Williams!" she cried. "May I—will you —Oh! What was that!"

A man's warning shout! A sudden crunching of brakes! A child's terrifying shriek! Followed by a hubbub of voices, talking, crying, screaming!

Half-way down the stairs Miss Mills collided with the plump figure of Teresa Spanelli. "Oh, Miss Mills, Antone ran to pick up—pin—street—truck—he—oh, Miss Mills, Antone's runned over! He—he's dead—I know he is!" Then that same plump little figure straightway collapsed in her teacher's arms.

Three weeks later. The business-like nurse seated at the table in the main corridor looked up into the face of the pretty little school teacher with the worried eyes. "Patient's name? Antone Ridoll?" Hastily her pencil scrawled. "Ward four," she pronounced, handing over the yellow slip. "Next?"

As Miss Mills approached the bed a restless little figure, tossing a head of dark curls, came to sudden attention. Then a pitiful little face lighted as two hands reached out to her.

"My ticher!"

The nurse spoke: "He has talked of you. He seems to think so much of you."

"See." Antone nodded toward the small table beside the bed. "My flowers; you send them, ticher. I love them." Suddenly his face clouded. "Ticher, I—I cannot give you the pin."

Quick tears sprang to Miss Mills' eyes. "Never mind, dear. It's all right. We won't talk about it. Let's forget it."

"No, ticher; I feel so better to tell you. You listen, please, ticher."

Miss Mills glanced quickly at the nurse. The latter nodded approval.

"Very well, Antone; I will listen if it will make you feel better."

The boy breathed a deep sigh of relief. "I tell you all, ticher. You listen hard. One tam I very small baby, my mother is kill over other country. Then my father he come America. I stay home. Six years I stay, then my father he like to see me, so I came America too, all alone. Then one time two years gone by, he very sick man. And bimeby he goin' croak, he call me and say, 'Antone, I goin' leave you pretty quick. Here,' he says, 'you take this thing, because it belongs to you, now.' And he say again. 'You onderstand me, Antone? It is yours, remember that? It stands for love, and honor and peace, and everything what is good. Wherever you see it you mus' protec' it, even if it cost your life!' And I do, ticher; everywhere always with my life I protec' it, because it stand for my country. See! On my heart, ticher? It is my flag!"

Eagerly one little hand drew back the sheet.

Fastened on his breast was the tiny pin—replica of the Stars and Stripes of America!—Ethel M. Rice, in Zion's Herald.

JANE'S BIRTHDAY

All winter and all spring and all the early part of the summer, Jane planned about her birthday. When you are wee tiny, you don't know or care much about your birthday, but when you grow to be as old as Jane, you know about it a long time ahead and you plan to have a happy day.

Of course, Jane's mother and father planned too, and her older sister, Laura, talked about it every once in a while, so there was hardly anything a little girl as old as Jane could do that had not been thought about and talked over long, long before the important day arrived. Whether to spend the day in the park, or have a big party or go to the circus or—well, Jane thought them all over and had such a hard time deciding that a week before the birthday she had not yet made up her mind what she would rather do.

"I'll tell you what let's do," said her father one evening about one week before the great day, "let's drive out into the country and see your Aunt Jane. You haven't been there for—how long is it, anyway? She'd love to see us all and you could have lots more fun playing there than in the park where you go every day."

"Um-m," said Jane's mother thoughtfully, "well, I wonder now—."

"You had some surprise!" exclaimed Jane, excitedly, for a person could easily guess that maybe a trip to the country didn't fit, quite, with what Jane's mother was planning in the back of her mind.

"Surprise, fiddlesticks!" laughed the lady, gaily. "Who would ever think of such a thing! I say we will go to Aunt Jane's. But we'd better call her up tonight and make sure that she'll be at home and not too busy to have us come."

The more little Jane thought about spending the day at her favorite aunt's the better she liked the idea and she could hardly wait till evening when Aunt Jane's cordial voice over the telephone assured them of a welcome on the birthday.

"I know I'll have a birthday cake," sang Jane as she went off to bed.

"I know I'll have some creamed chicken!"

"I know I'll have some ice cream!"

"I know I'm going to my dear Aunt Jane's."

Her mother heard Jane singing as she took off shoes and stockings and clothes and said to her father, "I'm afraid she will be disappointed when she finds out—."

"Don't you worry, she'll not mind!" he replied comfortably. But Jane was so busy singing that she didn't hear.

Bright and early on the morning of the famous birthday, Jane dashed through her tub and dressing so as to surely be on time for breakfast. And what do you suppose she found at her place at the breakfast table?

Standing up in her chair, her own little chair, was a great big—something—all covered up with napkins.

"Happy birthday to you!" called Jane's family.

"Birthday gift! Birthday gift!"

"You'll never guess!" added Laura, excitedly.

Jane didn't bother with guessing. She pulled off the napkins and saw—a beautiful little doll go-cart, just exactly the kind she had been wanting this long time.

She was so thrilled she could hardly eat her breakfast. Her mother reminded her that they would all be leaving for Aunt Jane's in about fifteen minutes and that some breakfast must be eaten first.

"How'll I take my cart to the country?" asked the little girl as she started her cereal.

"We won't take it," replied her mother, "it's for city sidewalks, dear. I was afraid you might not want to leave it."

"But I couldn't leave it," insisted Jane.

"Then we'll put it in the back of the car and you may show it to Aunt Jane and maybe wheel it on her big porch."

It would be fun to tell all about how the cart was stowed away in the car, how Jane watched it carefully every bit of the journey. How glad Aunt Jane was to see them; how thrilled she was that the cart had been brought along and what a delicious birthday luncheon she had ready and waiting for them the minute they arrived. But we'll have to skip over all that—you can just pretend you know all about it, as surely you do.

Along about the middle of the afternoon, Jane said to her auntie, "Your grass is so nice and smooth I just know my cart will run on it. I'm going to try." Aunt Jane thought this a fine idea, so the cart was lifted down from the porch and, sure enough! It was such a good cart that pushing it on the grass was no bother at all. Jane ran back and got her doll and took her for a fine ride. They went further than Jane really intended. Out past the garden, past the chicken yard, clear to the orchard where Jane found so many lovely sweet clovers and daisies that she set doll Sue out on the grass so she could watch her little mother pick a handful of blooms for making a wreath.

"You stay right there," she said to her cart, as she pushed it off among the flowers. And then she went to picking and had such a good time that she never thought of the cart till she was ready to go back to the house.

Now, of course, carts don't run away—that is, they don't unless they happen to be left on a hill. And the hill in the orchard was so gentle a one that Jane hadn't noticed it at all. But no more had she turned her back than the cart started down the long slope toward the meadow. Once it nearly stopped by a big tree. But a little breeze blew it past. Once it nearly stopped by a big tuft of grass, but the grass wasn't so high but that the cart finally rolled over. On and on it went, till it rolled into a corner of the orchard behind some bushes.

Jane finished her picking and picked up Sue to put her into the cart—and it wasn't there! She searched and searched, but no cart did she find. She ran to the house and got her family and they searched. But would you have guessed? It was long after time for going home, before that little cart was found!

When she found it, Jane picked it right up in her arms and gave it a good hug, she was that glad to see it, and then she pushed it to the automobile and they all got in and drove home.

"Wasn't it a big birthday!" sighed Jane, happily, as they drove along through the country. "I had a ride and a birthday cake and two carts."

"One cart," corrected her big sister.

"Two carts," insisted Jane. "One I got this morning—and I lost that. And one I got in the orchard, and I'm never going to lose it again."—Selected.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Randleman.—Our special meeting began at New Salem the third Sunday in September. Rev. Robert Short came on Sunday afternoon and preached through Friday night. Brother Dosier preached one time Sunday. Brother Short did excellent work both as preacher and personal worker. There was one profession. The church was revived.

Special revival services will begin at Level Cross next Sunday. Mrs. Dixon is our engaged help. We are expecting Dr. Dixon also to be with us.

On the third Sunday in October an all-day home-coming service will be held at Mt. Lebanon. Prof. P. E. Lindley will be the principal speaker on the program. He will address us at 2:30 p.m. All former pastors and members, and friends in general are invited.

WM. H. NEESE.

Lebanon Church, High Point.—Our special meeting which began on the second Sunday in September continued through Wednesday night of last week. Rev. S. W. Taylor, of Burlington, pulpit help, did all the preaching. He is a fine artist in his line, having the ability to adapt the presentation of the gospel truth to the needs of his hearers, and at the same time winning the hearts of the people for his friends by his pleasing personality. The church was revived, a goodly number were converted, nine joined the church yesterday (Sunday) and there will be other accessions to the church by letter, later.

Our pastor, Rev. J. R. Hutton, preached in Burlington last night at 7:30. Instead of our usual preaching service here we had the children of our Children's Home render their program of songs and recitations. It was a splendid service which was enjoyed by all. The collection amounted to about $20.00.

We are now using the new song-book, "The Cokesbury Hymnal," and like it fine. The book contains 300 of the best hymns and songs from the best books of the foremost song publishers of the world. We wish to announce that on each Thursday night at 7:30 (until further notice) we will have singing at our church. Everybody who enjoys singing themseles or like to listen is invited to come. We need more singers in our congregation to become familiar with these good old gospel songs and we want to hear more and better singing throughout our congregation.

REPORTER.

Gibsonville.—Sunday was a good day for our work here. One more member joined as a result of our meeting. The congregations were better than usual. The largest number took the communion, also the largest percent of the congregation, of any time during the year. The worshipful spirit manifest made the service very impressive and very helpful. The discussions in Christian Endeavor on "What Would Happen if All Church-members Were Really Christians?" were interesting and suggestive not only to the Endeavorers but to others as the congregation assembled for evening worship.

Our Young People's Auxiliary of the W. F. M. S., organized a few months ago, gave recently in a most pleasing and impressive manner the pageant "Missionary Arithmetic," and netted a neat sum by a free-will offering for the work. The organizing of this society brings our Gibsonville church up to the one hundred per cent standard of organization given us at the beginning of the year, but we cannot claim one hundred per cent efficiency for all our organizations.

However, each organization is doing good work and certain improvements are being planned. The Senior Christian Endeavor enjoyed last Friday night a real hay-ride and weinnie roast. It is a good thing to have mule teams and farm wagons at hand when you need them.

Our finances need improvement, and the Board of Stewards is working to that end.

While we have received more members than we have lost during the year, our report to Conference by a legitimate revision of the class book will show a considerable loss.

T. M. JOHNSON.

Asheville.—Our hearts go out to Mrs. C. C. McNeil and her family in the recent loss of her father, Rev. J. H. Stowe.

Our last Brotherhood meeting was very enjoyable. Mayor Gallatin Roberts was the interesting speaker. He told of his enjoyment in doing things on the quiet for the sick and the distressed. He showed a keen interest in the poor and unchurched, and in the work of the church. He leads prayer meeting in his church and attends regularly. He is now a Presbyterian. His mother is a Methodist Protestant. She is a sister of Mrs. Sam Coe of the Maryland Conference.

President Fawcett of our Brotherhood has appointed the following committees for the next term:

Program—Rev. C. W. Bates, J. W. Boling, G. P. Younginer; Membership—E. H. Pratt, Richard Hanner, L. S. Neville; Civic—H. O. Chanock, I. W. Cashatt; Evangelistic—J. S. Williams, H. L. Hanner, Ralph Beacham; Relief—George Foster, C. C. McNeil, Brother Hyatt.

Last Sunday was Anti-Saloon League Day in Asheville. Ira Champion, of Birmingham and Washington City, was the speaker at our church. He has the cause on his heart.

REPORTER.

Burlington.—Yesterday was "Rally Day" with us, and good attendance, good programs, and a good spirit characterized the day. The Sunday school observed the usual Rally Day promotion, and nearly one hundred certificates were given. For the morning preaching service, Rev. Paul S. Kennett was the speaker. His sermon was timely, thoughtful, and impressive. Rev. W. F. Kennett, father of the speaker, was present, and led the responsive reading and offered the opening prayer. We are indebted to these brethren for their presence, and their good help in the service. At the conclusion of the service the committee on nominations offered their report. A complete list of church and Sunday school officers for the ensuing year had been carefully selected by this committee. The report was adopted without change. The newly elected officers will be formally installed next Sunday morning. We were glad to receive into the church at this service Brother and Sister James Johnson. They come to us by letter from the Siler church. Our C. E. work was encouraging for the day, and we are expecting good results in this department for the fall and winter months. At night Brother and Sister J. R. Hutton and Rev. J. A. Burgess worshipped with us, Brother Hutton preaching. The sermon was in the speaker's usual clear and thought-provoking manner. The music was pleasing, and the attendance good. We are grateful to Miss Emily B. Young for singing in this service, the visiting speakers of the day, and to all others who helped us in these programs.

During the recent absence of the pastor, Rev. George W. Holmes and Rev. W. M. Pike have preached for us. Our people were pleased with their presence and helped by their sermons. We thank these brethren for coming to our assistance.

The six remaining weeks will be busy ones with us, but we are happy in the work, and expect to close the year in a good way.

S. W. TAYLOR.

Randolph.—We have held our special meetings at three of our churches on this work.

On the first Sunday in August we began our special meeting at Bethany. Brother J. E. Pritchard came to us in the afternoon and helped us in his splendid work till the meeting closed on Friday night. We had a very good meeting. Some were reclaimed, some converted and a few were received into the church.

It was on the second Sunday in August we began at Shiloh. Brother F. L. Gibbs preached for us on Sunday afternoon. On Monday Rev. H. C. Carmichael of Moriah church came and did the preaching till the close of the meeting. His sermons were highly appreciated. The Spirit was felt in our midst. The conversions were confined to the Sabbath school. It was beautiful to see eleven of these unite with the church at the close of the meeting.

We began our meeting at Bethel on the third Sunday in August. Brother George L. Curry came to us on Monday. His sermons were appreciated. There were a few reclaimed and a few professions.

Our next meeting will be at Gray's Chapel—to begin on the fourth Sunday in September. Dr. T. C. Amick of Elon College will preach for us Sunday at 11 o'clock and Brother L. W. Gerringer will preach for us in the afternoon and will be our pulpit help during the meeting. We hope for a glorious meeting.

A. O. LINDLEY.

Flat Rock, Vance Charge.—Our revival meeting which was to have been the first meek in October has been postponed until the second week in October on account of the county fair in Henderson. We are expecting our meeting to last ten days or two weeks.

The fourth quarterly conference will be held at Flat Rock church on Saturday before the second Sunday in October; there will be preaching in the morning and business transactions in the afternoon. We are expecting to have Dr. Dixon with us at that time.

Mrs. S. W. Reavis and Mrs. B. W. Jones entertained their Sunday school classes at the home of Mrs. S. W. Reavis last Saturday night with a weinnie roast and ice cream. There were about 45 present and a most enjoyable time was reported. This is another good way to bring young folks in the Sunday school.

With best wishes to the Herald and its patrons. REPORTER.

Henderson.—On Tuesday night, September fifth, the Philathea class held its regular monthly business meeting in their class room. Mrs. T. J. Evans, Mrs. W. E. Wilson and Mrs. John Willis Hayes hostesses. The meeting was presided over by the president, Mrs. A. B. Young. After the devotionals, conducted by Mrs. Clyde Finch, the general business of the class was transacted. Many plans were made and special collection taken or pledged for the support of our orphan at the Children's Home. At the conclusion of the meeting the hostesses served refreshments.

Sunday, September the eleventh, was "Rally Day" at our church and Sunday school. There was a special effort made to have all members of Sunday school present. The attendance was very encouraging, and enjoyed a splendid talk by Mrs. H. A. Ellis, wife of the local Baptist minister here. A large congregation was present at the morning services.

On Monday, September 12th, the Ladies' Aid held their business meeting at the home of Mrs. S. R. Watson. A large number of ladies were present, and at the end of the business session a miscellaneous shower was given Mrs. R. A. Hunter. Quite a number of pretty and useful gifts were received, after which the hostess served refreshments.

Thursday night, September 15th, the Young Ladies' League held its regular monthly meeting in the Philathea class room at the church. In absence of the president, Mrs. H. A. Jordan presided. A very interesting and enthusiastic meeting was held. Plans for increasing their membership were made, and special committees appointed by the acting president. The society voted also to pay one dollar each toward the support of our orphan at the Children's Home. At the conclusion of the meeting, Mrs. R. A. Hunter dismissed us by prayer.

Our church is looking forward to the revival which begins the ninth of October, with Rev. L. W. Gerringer, of Greensboro, as preacher. A committee was appointed by the pastor to make preparations for these services.

A special talk was given by Mr. Jasper B. Hicks Sunday morning, September 11th, as a part of the Rally Day services. He urged each member to rally to their privilege and responsibility in helping carry on the work of the church.

MRS. CLYDE L. FINCH, Reporter.

Pinnacle.—The fourth Sunday in September is home-coming day. Rev. T. V. Crouse of Greensboro will preach at eleven. All-day service will be held.

Our meeting will begin the first Sunday night in October. Rev. F. W. Paschall of Whitakers will preach for us.

Our church is making excellent progress. We are planning on building four Sunday school rooms to our church this winter.

Don't forget to meet us next Sunday.

REPORTER.

Kernersville.—The fourth quarterly conference of this charge will convene at Sandy Ridge church two p.m. Saturday, October 15. Official members are elected to do business for the church, which represents the kingdom of God, therefore do not let the kingdom of God suffer because of your absence.

E. G. LOWDERMILK, Pastor.

High Point.—The revival began yesterday with a forceful sermon by Rev. P. E. Lindley on "Neglected Altars," a subject most appropriate to the occasion. He laid emphasis on the altar of broken resolves, the altar of brotherhood and fellowship, and the altar of repentance. Mr. Lindley's sermons are always practical and apply to our daily life, and they arrest and hold attention from the beginning. At this service the choir, which contained some new faces, rendered a beautiful anthem, "The Lord My Pasture Shall Prepare," and Mesdames J. C. Whitsell and J. H. Allred, sang a lovely duet from Mendelssohn, "I Waited for the Lord." Prof. Dan W. Smith played the Pipe Organ in his usual charming manner. At the evening service Rev. E. Lester Ballard spoke of the "Need and Purpose of a Revival," and Mrs. Whitsell sang "No Night There" with fine effect.

Dr. Leonard B. Smith of Wilmington, Del., arrived Monday evening at 8 o'clock and came directly from the train and preached. Our people are delighted to see him again, having been here in four revivals. Wednesday evening last, a preliminary meeting was held, at which Rev. E. Lester Ballard presided. Plans were discussed for the success of the revival, and cards were distributed for all those who will sign to do some personal work. It was decided to hold shop meetings at the mills and factories at the noon hour, and services will be held every evening at 7:30 o'clock in the church. This will be a fine opportunity for a gracious revival, and it is earnestly hoped that our church may receive an abundant outpouring of the Spirit and a religious awakening as never before witnessed in its history. Dr. Smith is an earnest, forceful speaker and consecrated worker, and our people will hear him gladly as he is not a stranger to us. The singing of familiar hymns will be a special feature of the services. Dr. Smith plans to visit personally the members of the congregation as well as the unsaved of our city.

High Point College has 310 registrations to date with 44 seniors, which is a decided gain over last year's class of 13. Among the recent arrivals is a Cuban boy from Havana, who has entered as a freshman at the age of 16. He and Mr. Allred of the Spanish department enjoy talking, which keeps the young boy from becoming too homesick.

We regret exceedingly to learn that tha condition of Mrs. W. D. Burgess is very critical, and hope for her recovery is slight. May the Heavenly Father be very near to her large family of devoted sons and daughters in these hours of sorrow and suspense. Mrs. J. A. Tussey is in the High Point Hospital, having fallen twice last week and fractured her hip, which has been placed in a plaster cast. Mrs. Tussey has been an invalid for several years, which causes much anxiety to her numerous relatives and friends on account of this accident.

In order to increase interest and work more effectively the members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society have been divided into three groups or circles, which will meet the third Monday of each month at different places. This plan will not interfere with the general business meeting on the first Monday. Last Monday afternoon Circle No. 1 met with its chairman, Mrs. L. J. Diffee on Johnson street at which time plans were discussed for raising its quota of the budget. Circle No. 2 met with Mrs. H. A. Moffitt on N. Main street, and Circle No. 3 with Mrs. J. H. Walker Jr., on Colonial Drive. Circle No. 4 is composed of the young ladies of the A. M. Idol Philathea class with Miss Mary Young as chairman. Each Circle is expected to raise approximately $100 for the work. The Woman's Home Missionary Society has sent for Scholarship Loan Fund in the college the sum of $50.00, or one-half a Scholarship.

A delightful reception was tendered to the Faculty and students of High Point College in the Sunday school assembly room of the church by the Ladies' Aid Society on Friday evening, September 16th. The room was prettily decorated in rainbow colors, and there were numerous tables where games and contests of different kinds were played. "A Bachelor's Reverie" and a wedding with bride and groom and six bridesmaids with the chorus from "The Rose Maiden" were interesting pantomimes. About 300 guests were in attendance, and members of the church extended a glad greeting to the young students and members of the faculty and their wives with the hope that the coming year spent in our midst may be a most auspicious and happy one. Delicious refreshments were served to the large crowd present by the girls of the congregation. This reception at the beginning of the college year has come to be an annual custom in compliment to the faculty and students.

We are pained to announce the illness of Capt. A. M. Rankin. Upon his return home from prayer meeting last Wednesday evening, he was stricken with a severe chill and nausea, followed by high temperature. His condition was thought to be slightly better yesterday, but a specialist, Dr. Crowell of Charlotte, has been summond to his bedside, and is expected this (Monday) afternoon. Capt. Rankin is sorely missed from services, and it is earnestly hoped by his countless friends that he may be quickly restored to good health. Dr. S. S. Coe is giving him the closest attention, and a trained nurse is also in attendance.

The Junior Mission Circle is holding a meeting at the church Monday afternoon. Mesdames Anderson and Whitsell, leaders.

Miss Willie Davis, daughter of Mayor and Mrs. W. A. Davis, has entered N. C. College for Women, Greensboro as a student.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gray and young sons have returned from a visit to Mrs. Gray's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hutchinson of Charlotte.

Mr. and Mrs. H. U. Oakes and family have moved to their attractive new home on Montlieu avenue.

Miss Daisy Lee York left last Tuesday for Charleston, S. C., where she entered Ashley Hall to prepare for kindergarten work.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Cox have moved into their new home on Parkway, recently purchased from Mrs. E. A. Bencini, who has moved to Greensboro.

Wyatt A. Pickens left Wednesday evening for Washington, where he stopped for a short visit before going on to Harvard university, Cambridge, Mass. He will again be Instructor in Spanish there and also a student.

Dr. A. A. York left last week for Chicago, where he will attend special lectures in Medicine.

Clifton L. Whitaker of Gastonia spent the week-end with his mother at the college.

Mangum Harrell has entered State College, Raleigh, as a student.

Holt and Garland McPherson, sons of Mr. and Mrs. O. D. McPherson, have returned to the University to resume their studies.

Philadelphia, Greensville Circuit.—Our Special meeting began the second Sunday in September with Rev. Bob. Troxler as pulpit help; except on Sunday Revs. A. D. Shelton and H. S. B. Thompson were with us that day. Each sermon throughout the meeting was a great inspiration and thoroughly enjoyed by the unsaved as well as the Christians. We had a pretty good congregation during the entire meeting, especially preachers. There were six on Monday, four Tuesday, and several Wednesday and Thursday. The preachers certainly did their part, "Welcome," each of you to our next meeting. Several conversions were made, not any new members added to the church.

We certainly appreciated Troxler's coming back to us this summer (for the fourth year) and are expecting to hear him again next year. "Don't forget our time, Mr. Troxler."

Because of no Sunday school literature we had prayer meeting Sunday evening two-thirty, Mr. Davis High leader. We hope to have our literature by Sunday and a large school.

REPORTER.

Pinnacle.—Pinnacle has a set day, once a year for home-coming. I was there yesterday. Brother T. C. Crouse was there by invitation, and preached at the morning service.

Brother Hunter, the pastor, said that the fourth Sunday in September is the set time for the home-coming occasion, and published for September fourth Sunday, 1928. There was a liberal dinner served on a long table in the grove. I thank the Pinnacle friends for their kindness and liberality. However, some of the friends that were looked for were not there—and this reminder is that such a meeting ought to be published in the paper.

There was a large congregation, but the front benches were not all full. The venture is to say that it is some help to preacher and people to fill the front benches. Hand shaking is good in the church, but filling the front benches is rather more of a means of grace. This report is not on to criticize, but there were (supposing) enough friends absent to have filled the front benches.

A great thing now being wished for is to put the Herald in every family where there is a member of the M. P. Church. Some churches are doing this way, and there is economy in it.

The way to sympathize and take interest in the real is to read about the work. As to reporting, we farmers who have been trained to the plow more than to the literary, have need of forbearance in such literary efforts as involve this report—hence the Editor is now being urged to correct these furrows severely.

I went to Pinnacle, purposely to hear Brother Crouse preach, but soon learned that I was also to hear another man—and I was glad. At two o'clock Hon. John Jones served; and he made great interest too. The congregation held out, or stayed in rather, to hear the lecture. Mr. Jones served as the same 12 months ago—and it may be safely assumed that if the preacher and the lecturer were to set in to serve at Pinnacle once a year they would preach to growing congregations.

They very much reminded of the evidence that both the law and the gospel are needed.

By force of circumstances Mr. Jones is engaged every day in his legal efforts trying to help the county to improve according to law—and the law is needed. The law is needed in order to keep the body under; but read what Brother Dosier has said in the late paper. Brother Dosier is one of our best Bible scholars. As for the Editor, our literary high authorities tell us plainly that really the editor of a paper is the ready writer; and this being the fact, it is no marvel that we farmers can report through the papers with a clear voice.

This effort comes in order to ask Brothers Crouse and Jones to set their dates to serve at Pinnacle on the annual date.

Of course the above effort is suggestive and not official. The official order is for Brother Crouse to preach at Pinnacle next Sunday night, and to continue. (When will the representatives of the Children's Home serve at Pinnacle?)

W. F. GRABBS.

Mebane.—We had very good attendance for church service Sunday evening at 1:30. The pastor has returned from a vacation of two weeks and delivered an interesting message at this time. The attendance for Sunday school has fallen off somewhat for the past two Sundays.

The Ladies' Aid society met in this month at the home of Mrs. W. J. Sykes with very good attendance. An interesting meeting was enjoyed by all. During the social hour the hostess served ice cream, cake, and watermelon. The October meeting will be with Mrs. W. R. Jobe.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies held their September meeting with Mrs. R. T. Dunn. The program was in charge of the Home society. We were glad to have as visitors Mrs. George Thompson and Mrs. W. E. Swain. Mrs. Swain has been a member of the societies here for a number of years and still is, and it was indeed a pleasure to have her meet with us again. The study book was given by Mrs. Case Sykes at this meeting. Refreshments were served during the social hour.

Monday afternoon of this week the William-Nicholson Mission Band met with Mrs. J. E. Foust. Twelve members and one visitor present. This band of children are doing a splendid work, but we feel it should increase in membership and attendance, and we hope the parents may give every possible encouragement to this organization.

Our Rally Day program will be given in October.

The following young people left recently for High Point College: Misses Elizabeth and Edna Nicholson, Grace and Katie Lee Barnette, Alta Allen, and Mr. Hassel Allen, and Miss Lillian Williams to Appalachain Training School at Boone, N. C.

On September 17 at Durham, N. C., Miss Grace Jones of Hillsboro, and Hubert Sykes of Mebane were quietly married, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Mr. Noel, pastor of the First Baptist church of that city. Mr. Sykes is a member of our church and Sunday school. His bride is also a Methodist Protestant but holds her membership elsewhere.

At present they are at home with Mr. and Mrs. Hyfill Jobe on Third street.

REPORTER.

Calvary.—We were very glad to have Rev. J. Clyde Auman, our returned Missionary from Japan, with us last Sunday morning. He told about his work in Japan. He is president of Nagoya College with a student body of over one thousand. I am sure we will be more interested in the work there, since hearing Mr. Auman.

At the Sunday evening service, the pastor gave another one of the series of evangelistic sermons he is preaching at the evening services until conference. He preached a very impressive sermon from "Choose you this day whom ye will serve," John 24:15. Near the end of Joshua's work, he called the leaders of Israel together and reminded them anew of God's dealings with them and his goodness to them, and exhorted them to choose whom they will serve.

Mr. Gerringer said that we must all make this choice. Two courses are open to everyone. We must choose every day in every situation. He made a strong appeal to those present to make the all-important choice.

The pastor is away this week assisting Rev. A. O. Lindley in a meeting at Gray's Chapel. We hope that they will have a good meeting. One of the layman will conduct the prayer service Wednesday evening. It is hard to understand, why more church members do not think they need to attend the mid-week prayer meeting.

We are glad to report that our church organist, Miss Vivian Sullivan, is recovering satisfactorily from an operation for appendicitis. We are also glad to know that some of our other members, Mrs. R. F. Laughin and Mrs. C. A. Parish, are recovering from recent illness.

The Sunday school is preparing a Rally Day program to be given the morning of second Sunday in October. At the evening service on that day the pageant, "Jehovah Jireh" will be presented.

On last Sunday evening the Senior Christian Endeavor society joined with the West End society and had their meeting there. Those who attended reported an interesting meeting.

Miss Lucile Williamson of Worthville became the happy bride of Mr. Raymond Ward on September 17. The marriage took place at the home of the writer, in the presence of only a few relatives and friends. We trust their happiness shall increase as the years go by. A. O. LINDLEY.

Williams-Coble

Miss Linda Ann Williams and Mr. T. H. Coble were united in marriage on September 18, 1927. These splendid young people are of the Gray's Chapel section. Miss Williams has taught in the Gray's Chapel school for the past two years. Only a few relatives and friends came with them to their pastor's home to see them made one. May the joy of united hearts cheer them through life.

A. O. LINDLEY.

Liner-Burke

Announcements have been received throughout North Carolina and adjoining states as follows: Mrs. Jennie K. Liner announces the marriage of her daughter, Agnes Alline, to Mr. Charles Cowin Burke on Friday, the sixteenth of September, nineteen hundred and twenty-seven, Graham, North Carolina.

Mr. and Mrs. Burke were quietly married at the Methodist Protestant parsonage here, Rev. D. R. Williams, pastor of the bride, officiating. Only the immediate family and a few intimate friends were present.

Mrs. Burke is the attractive and accomplished daughter of Mrs. Jennie K. Liner. She is very popular and well known through this section of the state.

Mr. Burke's home is in Raleigh, where he is in the printing business. He is a rising young business man and well liked by all who know him.

Immediately after the ceremony, the bride and groom left for Wilmington, from which point they are to make a steamer trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Burke will be at home after September 25th at Graham, N. C.

Thomas-Holt

Miss Josephine Thomas of Lenoir and Mr. S. S. Holt of Graham were united in marriage Saturday, August 27, 1927, at the home of the bride's mother at Lenoir.

Mrs. Holt is pleasantly remembered here, having been a member of the Graham High School faculty for several years.

Mr. Holt is widely known throughout the state. He is connected with the Tranors Manufacturing Company.

After a bridal trip through Western North Carolina, Mr. and Mrs. Holt are at home on North Main street, Graham, N. C.

Martin-Welch

A wedding of much interest was solemnized last Saturday, September 17th, at noon when Miss Elizabeth Holton Welch became the bride of Mr. H. Rufus Martin at the home of the officiating minister, Rev. J. W. Moore. Immediately after the vows were spoken the happy young pair left for a honeymoon trip through the mountains of Western North Carolina and Tennessee. The groom is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Martin of this city, holds a responsible position with the Tomlinson Chair Manufacturing Company, and is a young man of good business ability and much promise. His bride is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Welch of High Point, was a member of Class of 1925 of High Point High School, and is pretty and talented, having been a member of the church choir for some time. Upon their return to the city they will live temporarily with the parents of the bride at 111 Thurston street. The congratulations and good wishes for a life of success, usefulness, and happy service for this popular young couple are extended by a legion of friends.

WHERE ARE THE DELEGATES' CARDS?

It ought not to be necessary to ask that question because they ought all to be in the Secretary's hands. But the fact is twenty-one charges have not returned delegates' credentials. I do not know what charges are missing. I only know our work is held up until these cards are in. Please, brethren, let me have them! C. W. BATES, Secretary.

HOME MISSIONS

It has been my privilege to visit nine of the annual conferences held between the dates of August 10 and September15. My reception at all of them has been most cordial and ample time given to present the interests of the Board of Home Missions, and in the absence of the other Secretaries the other general interests of our denomination. It is gratifying to state that there exists not only the closest brotherly relation between the Secretaries, but the purpose of each to show the same interest and zeal in speaking upon the other departments of the General Conference work as he does that with which he is officially connected.

In addition to the public address I was expected to make to the annual conference visited I have found other ways in which I could be useful and make my visit profitable. It has been my wish to create a closer relation between the Board of Home Missions and the Church Extension Societies of the various annual conferences. The General Conference, at its last session, recommended that all annual conferences having Boards of Church Extension, or similar organizations, be linked in some vital relation to the Board of Home Missions for the purpose of greater efficiency in the work attempted by these Boards, and the Secretary of the Board of Home Missions sustain a sympathetic relationship with these Boards of Church Extension and similar organizations.

In my visits to the annual conferences I have endeavored, as far as practicable, to carry out this recommendation. This procedure should prove mutually helpful. My view is that the Board of Home Missions should work in conjunction with the above named organizations. Following this plan I was in conference with several of the Boards of Church Extension at the annual conferences recently visited when plans for work within the bounds of said conferences were considered with, what I believe, will prove to be favorable results.

The policy of the Board of Home Missions is co-operation in which both should share in the responsibility assumed, and expense incurred. This plan was put in practice very effectively at the Onondaga, Ohio and Illinois Conferences. At the Onondaga Conference it resulted in Rev. G. C. Weaver being appointed pastor of Rochester Mission. Brother Weaver has entered upon his duties at this important place, and is greatly encouraged with the prospects before him. We have here one of the finest openings for a new church I know of anywhere within our denomination. The location is in every way first class. Rev. H. N. Becker, a highly esteemed member of the Onondaga Conference, started this work but last November was called to his Heavenly home. Since then the work was well cared for by Rev. B. L. Taylor, a local minister, who did the best possible with his other duties. We all expect large results from the ministry of Brother Weaver and hope that funds can be secured to start the first unit of the new church next spring.

J. M. SHERIDAN, Secretary.

—Bro. D. H. Hunter of Tabernacle has moved to Greensboro and is living at 1307 Randolph Avenue. This is near Calvary church, and we are hoping to see him present on Sunday mornings despite his 95 years.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

Powell

Tuesday, September the sixth, was indeed a sad day in our neighborhood. Little Francis Powell, youngest child of Rev. and Mrs. H. L. Powell, was accidently shot by her brother. She was taken to Roanoke Rapids Hospital right away and lingered there until Wednesday about two o'clock, then passed into the great beyond.

Her little casket was followed by most of the family, playmates, and many friends from Greensville circuit to her mother's home church, Flat Rock, near Henderson, N. C., where it was laid to await the resurrection under a large mound of beautiful flowers.

Rev. M. P. Chambliss conducted the funeral services in the presence of a large and heart-broken audience.

Her bright sunny face will certainly be missed in Junior Sunday school class, and especially in Children's Day exercises. She was a great little speaker for the Master. Our loss is Heaven's gain. "You cannot come back to us, Frank, how wonderful we can come to you."

God keep, and comfort, the dear family at this time.

MELVIN PEARSON,
Her Sunday School Teacher.

Bradley

Mrs. Sallie B. Bradley died September 18th, aged seventy-six years. Mrs. Bradley's home was in Danville. She came to Randleman a few weeks ago to spend some time with her son Robert. One week prior to her death she fell and broke her hip. She suffered intensely, but patiently, until death relieved her. The deceased is survived by two sons and four daughters.

Mrs. John Mills, Mrs. Roby Gentry, Mrs. H. R. Martin, all of Danville; Mrs. Lee Saunders, Niles, Mich., R. S., of Randleman, and John of Whiteville, Va. The body was carried back to Danville and the funeral was held from the home of Mrs. Roby Gentry.

Mrs. Bradley was a member of the M. E. church in Danville where she had made her home for thirty-three years. This writer's acquaintance with Mrs. Bradley was very brief, but she impressed us as being a consecrated Christian woman. Her general conversation prior to her painful affliction, and her patience and submissiveness in her affliction revealed the fine qualities of a great soul. We would point the sons and daughters to Him, whom, we believe, their mother faithfully served.

WM. H. NEESE.

Rev. J. H. Stowe

The news of the passing of this veritable father in Israel will bring great sorrow to the hearts of a large number of people throughout North Carolina, many of whom he baptized in infancy, others whom he received into membership of the church, others who were united in happy marriage by him as officiating minister, many more whom he visited and prayed for in time of illness and sorrow, and still others who were converted under his earnest, faithful preaching. He had made his home in High Point since 1921, when he was forced to give up regular work on account of throat trouble. He had been ill and failing rapidly for several weeks, but always attended services at the First church when able to do so. He was present at the last communion services in August, and partook of the Lord's Supper. His gentle, kindly presence always seemed to bring a benediction to the congregation.

Rev. Mr. Stowe was born in Cabarrus county, February 1, 1853, and attended school at Mt. Pleasant. On August 20, 1874, he was happily married to Miss Margaret Elizabeth Long of Union county, who died September 27, 1920, and was buried at Fallston, Cleveland county. An annual visit to her resting-place was one of his chiefest pleasures during these latter years. To this home were born eleven children, two of whom died in infancy, and Mrs. G. L. Curry, wife of a well-known and popular member of N. C. Conference, passed on in 1924; the following sons and daughters survive: W. W. Stowe of Asheville, H. R. Stowe of Winston-Salem, W. E. Stowe of Asheboro, B. O. Stowe of Greensboro, Mrs. W. P. Royster of Troy, Misses Annette and Xannie Stowe, High Point, and Mrs. C. C. McNeil, West Asheville. A sister, Mrs. E. M. Robertson, also survives. There are also twenty-three grand-children.

Mr. Stowe was ordained and joined the N. C. Conference in the fall of 1893, and served several charges among them being Asheboro, Haw River, Guilford, Mecklenburg, and Winston-Salem circuits. For many years he was a member of the conference faculty. He retired in 1921 and moved to High Point. Since that time he has been tenderly cared for by his two dutiful and faithful daughters, Misses Xannie and Annette.

Mr. Stowe died as the Sabbath day was drawing to a close at 6:20 o'clock, September 18, 1927, at his home on Hawthorne street. Funeral services were conducted in the First church Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock by Dr. Geo. R. Brown of Reidsville, assisted by Rev. E. L. Ballard, Rev. P. E. Lindley, and Dr. A. G. Dixon of Greensboro. A noteworthy feature of this service was the presence of thirty-four brother ministers, a fact which attests the regard and high esteem in which he was held. A truly consecrated and godly man has been gathered to his fathers.

MRS. R. T. PICKENS.

High Point, September 20, 1927.

Surratt

Lillie Geneva Loftin Surratt died September 15, 1927. Her age was 53 years, three months, seven days. She was converted September, 1893. She joined the Chapel Hill M. P. church and has remained a member until her death.

She was married to George G. Surratt March 24, 1895. She lived happily with him until his death September 15, 1912. To this union were born three children—Orpher, Fannie, and Homer. Her first born, Orpher, died when about two and half years of age.

She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Carl Cook, a son, Homer Surratt; her father, J. C. Loftin; two brothers, Rev. A. G. Loftin and G. C. Loftin; also a half brother, R. G. Loftin; and two little grandsons.

Sister Surratt was a good Christian woman, and she will be missed in her church and community. Her funeral was conducted by the writer from Chapel Hill church on Friday, September 16, at 11 o'clock and burial took place in the church cemetery. She is gone but not forgotten.

May the God of all comfort be with the bereaved ones in this sad hour.

C. E. RIDGE.

Surratt

Jane Alice Morgan Surratt departed this life September 13, 1927, aged 66 years, five months, and nine days. She was married to Mr. L. D. Surratt of Jackson Hill. To this union were born eight children. One daughter, Mrs. R. B. Ridge, preceded her to the great beyond, about five years ago. The husband, five sons, two daughters, eighteen grand-children, a large number of relatives and friends are left behind to mourn her departure.

Sister Surratt was converted when a young girl, and later united with the M. P. church at Pleasant Grove. She lived a devoted Christian life. The church has lost a faithful member, the community has lost a good neighbor, the home has lost a true mother.

Her funeral was conducted from Jackson Hill M. E. church by the writer assisted by Rev. C. P. Goode, and burial took place in Clear Springs cemetery on September 15th, at two o'clock p.m.

May the dear Lord comfort the bereaved and bind up our broken hearts.

C. E. RIDGE.

Hull

Mrs. May Hull departed this life September 7, 1927. Before her first marriage she was Miss May Pittman. She was first married to Elby Lewis to which union three children survive; James Lewis, Enfield Route 1; Willie Lewis, Enfield, Route 2; and Mrs. Bessie Throar, Enfield, N. C.

After the death of Mr. Lewis she was married to Mr. Hull, to which union one son, Mr. Spooney Hull, of Richmond, Va., still survives.

Mrs. Hull has been a loving and faithful member of the M. P. church at Union on Halifax charge. She loved her church and was a faithful attendant as long as she was able to attend and after she was not able to attend, she never lost interest in her church. She always contributed to the support of the church, and was a subscriber to the church paper and not only a subscriber but she read her paper. She was faithful unto the end and left the evidence that she was prepared.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. R. C. Stubbins, of Enfield, and the writer, after which the remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery beneath a beautiful mound of flowers.

C. L. SPENCER, Pastor.

Thomas O. Bess

Mr. T. O. Bess departed this life September 19, 1927, being 59 years, nine months, and 25 days old. Mr. Bess had not been so well for more than a year. The morning of his death, he felt as well as usual, and went out to cut some cane. He returned to the house with a severe pain around his heart. Before a doctor could be secured he was dead.

But before he died he told his children he was going to meet their mother. He sang, "Home, Sweet Home," and "Where We'll Never Grow Old." Mr. Bess confessed faith in Christ and joined Bess' Chapel Methodist Protestant church in early life, and has been a consistent member ever since. The funeral service was conducted at Bess Chapel Tuesday at two p.m., by the pastor assisted by Rev. J. E. B. Houser. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Jenkins sang, "Where We'll Never Grow Old." The large crowd and many flowers showed the high respect in which Mr. Bess was held.

Mr. Bess' companion, one daughter, two brothers, and one sister preceded him to the great beyond. He leaves to mourn their loss, eight children. Forest, of Shelby; Archie of Cherryville; Daniel, Mrs. W. A. Hull, Mrs. Earl Baxter, Bush, Wilford, and Ollie May of this community; twenty grand children, three sisters, Mrs. D. C. Heavner, Mrs. Mary Walnut, and Miss Maggie Bess and a host of relatives and friends. Mr. Bess will be greatly missed by his children, church and community.

E. A. BINGHAM.

Drake

Miss Siss Drake, known as Aunt Siss Drake, departed this life September 8, 1927.

Miss Drake was a member of Harmony church on Halifax charge, where she had been a member for a number of years. Miss Drake never married. She lived with Mr. and Mrs. F. V. Avent. Miss Drake was a faithful member of the church. She was faithful to attend and contribute to the church. She was known as one of the best women in the community. She always appreciated and spoke very highly of her pastor. We visited her several times during her illness and had prayer with her. She seemed always to enjoy it so much and she was ready and waiting for the end to come.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. Fred W. Paschal of Whitakers. There was a large crowd attended the funeral. After which the remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery, beneath a beautiful mound of flowers.

C. L. SPENCER, Pastor.

—Wouldn't it be delightful in the annual conference session in Asheboro in November if every church should report a good gain in membership, a good spiritual condition prevailing, and all claims for the year paid? That would be unusual, but it is not impossible or unreasonable. Let it be the aim of every church to make it so.

—Norman Devinney, son of Mrs. J. E. Deinney, formerly of Julian, now of Greensboro, has entered school at the State University. He took his high school course in Florida. He is a young man of good promise and we hope to hear good reports of him in school and later in life. He purposes to be a business man and shows aptitude therefor.

—Deaths from pellagra are said to be increasing in our state. The number is said to vary with the price of cotton and other staple crops. The disease is attributed to a too restricted diet or a diet deficient in some of the essential food elements. It is painful to think that some of our people are starving to death in this land of plenty. People should be taught what are the essentials of a nourishing diet. Some suffer, not because they are too poor to buy what they need, but because they do not know what they need to maintain health.

—Now floods have shifted to Hungary, where great damage is feared.

ASHEBORO AUXILIARY

A meeting of unusual interest was held at the Methodist Protestant church, Asheboro, on Wednesday afternoon, August 31, when the ladies of the Missionary societies of the church joined with the Clyde Auman Missionary Society of Seagrove in a joint meeting and picnic following.

The speaker for this occasion was Rev. Clyde Auman, who is a native of Randolph county and has recently returned from a six years' stay as a missionary from the Methodist Protestant church in Japan. Mr. Auman told most interestingly of his stay in the mission fields and gave most vitally interesting sketches of the earthquake. At the time of the earthquake Mr. Auman and his family were at Nagoya, Japan. Mr. Auman stressed the importance of the work of the Christian school, of which he is president, and told of the interest of the young men and women in a Christian education, and told of preaching his sermons to three relays of people, the building being inadequate to hold the congregations.

At the close of the talk, Mrs. Hal Walker sang a solo. Then Mrs. Walker and Miss Fern Way sang a duet, accompanied by Miss Louise Swain.

The ladies of the church then under the direction of Mrs. J. S. Lewis, president of the missionary society of the Asheboro church, served a most sumptuous basket picnic in the church social room.

MRS. JOHN SWAIN, Corresponding Sec'y.

BOARD OF EDUCATION INTERESTS

Rev. J. E. Pritchard is pastor of our church at Asheboro, North Carolina, and recording secretary of the Board of Education. The following is from a recent letter reporting his plans for observing Rally Day: "We are to hold our Rally Day service next Sunday. All the classes will go to their regular rooms at 9:45 and stay until 10:30. Then all departments will be brought into the church auditorium for a program one hour in length, closing at 11:30. We are giving promotion certificates to those who are entitled to them and in addition we are having this original exercise: The children who are to be promoted from a department will be given certificates, then the superintendent of the department they are leaving will address the superintendent of the department to which they are to go and inform her that these children are coming to her department, then she makes a brief speech expressing her regrets at the separation. The children who are not being promoted from the department will stand and sing, "We're Sorry You're Going Away." Then the superintendent of the department to which they are to go makes a welcome speech, then the children go immediately to that group. We are getting out a Form letter to all our families this week urging them to attend next Sunday."

The number of Rally Day orders received to Friday, September 23, is the largest in the history of the Board of Education for any of their special days. The change from Christmas to Rally Day necessitated extra effort to inform and interest our people but the results are beginning to appear. The material being furnished this year seems to be especially satisfactory judging from the commendations which come frequently to headquarters.

The suggestion of the Board of Education that the church endeavor to raise the offerings on Rally Day to fifty per cent more than a year ago, or from $17,830 to $25,000, is being accepted by our pastors and an earnest effort made to reach the goal. If more of our churches would observe Rally Day it would not be difficult to secure this sum. We have this satisfaction at least that more of our people are coming to appreciate the meaning and value of Rally Day. The church that does not observe it is certainly losing a great opportunity.

The orders received up to and including September 23rd were as follows; comparing them with the total number received a year ago:

		1927	1926
1.	Maryland	103	117
2.	Ohio	54	97
3.	Indiana	40	45
4.	North Carolina	34	27
5.	Michigan	24	28
6.	Eastern	24	23
7.	Pittsburgh	22	28
8.	Illinois	14	14
9.	Onondaga	13	21
10.	Iowa-Missouri	12	11
11.	Kansas	10	9
12.	West Virginia	10	20
13.	Alabama	4	3
14.	Missouri	3	2
15.	Texas	3	3
16.	Ft. Smith-Oklahoma	2	1
17.	Mississippi	2
18.	Louisiana	2	1
19.	Georgia	1	1
20.	Virginia	1
21.	Tennessee		1
22.	Colorado-Texas		2
23.	South Carolina		3
		378	457

Since the orders continue coming until November it looks as though there would be a substantial increase over last year and possibly over two years ago when they exceeded five hundred. If your church has not sent in their order yet please do so at once. Give your committee a fair chance to make adequate preparation then you will have a program to delight and please everyone. Send orders to Frank W. Stephenson, Executive

So Easy to Prevent, So Difficult to Cure, So Disastrous If Not Cured

We are trying to alarm you. There is a reason. You may be in great danger. Your health and even your life may be at stake. You have a habit of eating. You believe that this habit is necessary to your life. And it is. Yet this same habit of eating may unexpectedly bring you to the end of your life. All depends on what you eat and how. You may eat your way to life and health or to disease and death. The September number of The Health Bulletin calls attention to an alarming increase in the prevalence of pellagra in North Carolina and the number of deaths therefrom. It is commonly agreed that the cause of this disease is a deficient diet, a diet lacking in some of the elements essential to health. People cannot thrive on bread and molasses or bread and molasses and fat meat. Yet poverty seems to restrict some people to a diet that consists mainly of these hings. Sometimes it is not poverty, but ignorance, that restricts. Milk would prevent many from having pellagra, and milk might be had if its importance were known. Raw cabbage might save others, or potato peelings. White flours, especially self-rising flours, are said to be the cause of much trouble to health. Whole wheat flour might save lives that are now lost because people think more about the appearance of their food than about the wholesomeness of it. Dr. E. J. Wood, of Wilmington, who has treated many cases of pellagra, says:

"In an analysis of all the cases I have seen since 1915 the predominating factor in a diet regarded as defective has been self-rising flour which is known as 'lazy man's flour.' It is universally used in those households where pellagra has occurred. . . . Self-rising biscuits are easily prepared, present a most attractive appearance, and are especially palatable to all classes. This biscuit is comparatively soft, and therefore pleasing to the aged and those with usual dental defects, as well as to the children. After they have eaten such biscuit I find great difficulty in persuading people to eat 'beaten biscuit,' or Maryland biscuit, which contains no chemical raising agent, but is made sufficiently light by kneading or beating."

Pellagra is a dreadful disease even when it is not fatal, and we cannot take too much pains to fight shy of it. And we do that by attending to what we eat. Our foods must contain those mysterious elements known as vitamines. We may find them in milk and eggs and vegetables, but in some cases cooking destroys them. Raw cabbage contains them and is more digestible by far than cooked cabbage. If you had witnessed the sufferings of one in the later stages of pellagra, you would be convinced that no effort is too great to avoid the dread disease. The disease comes on insidiously, but fortunately if taken in time it may be cured. But it cannot be cured by drugs in the present state of medical science. About all the doctor can do for you is to tell you to do the things that you ought to have done to prevent the coming of the disease—have a care as to what you eat and how.

—That is the best government in which an injury to one is the concern of all.—Solon.

Our Father's Daily Blessing

Have you gotten into the habit of expecting some new blessing from God every day? It is your privilege. When you awake in the morning you may ask yourself, What new experience of God's goodness and grace will He lead me into today? At night when you review the experiences of the day you may find that you have had a day made blessed at some points by the direct influence of God upon your life. When Jesus taught us to pray, Give us this day our daily bread, He meant more than to lead us into the habit of looking to God for needed material things. He realized as no other has that man lives not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The words that daily proceed from the mouth of God and address themselves to our souls bring to us new blessings every day if we are in the spiritual condition to receive them. It is not a mere figure of speech that God speaks to us, but an actual fact. You may hear His voice tomorrow, today, if your spiritual ear is not filled with other voices. In order to hear God's voice and receive the blessing His words will bring to you, you must "tune in." You must get God's number and turn the dial of your consciousness to the right point. All souls in tune with God hear His voice daily and find in it new inspiration, quickened sense of the goodness of God, strengthening of will to righteousness, assured hope of final reward, and joy in the service of the Everlasting Father. Each day marks an advance upon all preceding days. God has not led us this way before. He will make this day contribute something new to your life and character. How blessed indeed is the human life that is spent in daily contact with God, in conscious reception of His ever-enlarging blessings. Thus to know God and Jesus Christ Whom He hath sent is life indeed.

A Worthy Pair Honored

Bro. Jesse E. Hanner and wife of Tabernacle had a visit from more friends last Sunday than ever came at one time before. They were taken by surprise and did not know what to make of it at first. It had not occurred to them that their friends would celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary. But it took only a hint from Mrs. Ed Coble, a former protege of theirs, to induce friends to gather a hundred or more strong. Bro. Hanner was greatly surprised when he returned from church service at Tabernacle to find his yard filled with automobiles and people from far and near. But he soon understood and greeted his friends heartily. Mrs. Hanner was not well enough to go to church, so she got into the secret a little earlier. It was the purpose of Mrs. Coble to make the occasion a complete surprise to both of them. Among the friends present was the magistrate who officiated in their marriage fifty years ago, Esquire Fox, of Randolph County. He is now over eighty years of age, but is still hale. Bro. and Sister Hanner have never had any children born to them, but they have been special friends of orphan children, having aided about a dozen by taking them into their homes. Some of these have remained until they reached their majority. One

GENEVA'S GOLDEN RULE DINNER

"Sir," said Johnson to Boswell, "it is a great thing to dine, with the canons of Christ Church." So it seemed to a small group of Americans who were in Geneva on September eighth, a great thing to dine with a goodly company representing twenty-two nations, gathered together because of an intense in some specific world problems for which they were endeavoring to find a solution. For the fourth year they were having an International Golden Rule Dinner, and the general theme this year was the task of securing permanent homes for the refugees, who through all the years since the war and the deportation have had no other dwelling place than unhealthful refugee camps.

Among the speakers and guests of honor were Mr. Albert Thomas, who is director of the International Labor Office, one of the outstanding men in France; Senator Justin Godart of Paris, former Minister of Education; Senator Louis de Brouckere of Brussels; the Rt. Hon. Lord Radstock of London, and Charles V. Vickrey of New York. Other distinguished guests were Albin Peyron, Commander of the Salvation Army in France, Mr. Gentle-Cackett of the Bible Lands Mission, Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, Dr. Paul Schutz, Secretary of the Orient Missions in Germany, Captain Gracy of the Birtish Society, "Friends of Armenia," and Mrs. Glanville of the Near East Relief of Australia.

Bishop James Cannon Jr., of Washington, D. C., Dr. and Mrs. Atkinson of New York, and Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker of Austin, Texas, were of the American group.

The refugees for whose welfare Mr. Thomas, Lord Radstock and other speakers made eloquent pleas were those who had fled from thir formr homs in Turkey, southward into Syria. To provide homes for those who, following the Smyrna disaster, had sought refuge in Greece, efforts are already being made to redeem the waste lands of that country by draining swamps, and in other sections undertaking irrigation projects. Similar plans are now being made for Syria. The general program includes:

1. The installation at Beirut of a new Armenian quarter to replace the present miserable camp. A credit of three million francs has been granted by the High Commissioner from funds of the Lebanon loaned for this purpose. The site has been bought and housing plans are now being carried out.

2. Making healthy and improving the camps at Aleppo.

3. Draining the marshes at Alexandretta, where six thousand Armenians are camping in wretched huts and are being weakened and decimated by the ravages of malaria and other diseases.

4. The placing in agricultural centers of families of tillers of the soil at present grouped at the camps, with a view to promoting, not only the definite settlement of refugees as farmers or proprietors, but the early complete abolition of the refugee camps.

Experiments which have already been carried out in several agricultural centers have been eminently successful. With a small loan made to the individual families, sufficient to provide a team of oxen; agricultural implements, seeds, and a small "stake," the same result has been secured in Syria and the Lebanon as was proven possible in Greence as a result of the efforts of the Greek Refugee Settlement Commission.

Mr. Vickrey voiced America's interest in the efforts being made in behalf of the refugees as well as its interest in the care of the orphans for whom our country has felt primarily responsible, and who are still dependent on the friends of children. He also expressed his great pleasure at seeing that people of many nations, some of them widely separated geographically, were glad to come together for this simple Golden Rule meal. It seemed an evidence of the fact that those of all lands and all faiths believe that the world's ills and sorrows can be healed through the application of the Golden Rule.

The following resolution, passed by the International Near East Association, which is composed of twenty-five national societies, was read by the secretary, Mr. Gordon L. Berry, and endorsed by the four hundred guests at the dinner: "Resolved: That we earnestly urge the continued and increasingly general observance of International Golden Rule Sunday (December 4, 1927) as a day when people of all nations, races and religions are asked to give practical expression to the world brotherhood of man, recognizing the eternal obligation of the strong to help the weak, the rich to share with the poor, the employed with the unemployed, and prosperous with those in adversity.

That, while we recognize the right of each donor or national organization to allocate funds according to special personal or national interests and obligations, we respectfully suggest that a substantial portion, if not all, of the Golden Rule contributions of 1927 be made available for child welfare work and the settlement on lands in Syria on a self supporting basis of the Armenian refugees now eking out a miserable existence in the refugee camps in or near Beirut, Aleppo, and other congested centers."

BETTER TEETH FOR THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

By Rev. Luther K. Long

Seymour W. Lowman, the new Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of prohibition enforcement, commends himself to the respect and confidence of all good citizens by his clear apprehension and vigorous setting forth of the situation in his department. Mr. Lowman says:

"There are many incompetent and crooked men in the service. Bribery is rampant. There are many wolves in sheep's clothing. We are after them." The last sentence should carry courage to every lover of law and order. May Lowman's legions catch the culprits!

The Washington Evening Star, in a recent editorial on "Run Them Out," strongly commends Mr. Lowman's determination to clean things up. The following sentences from that excellent editorial should be read many times—and heeded by every responsible person. The editor says:

"The issue is that corruption, crookedness, graft and inefficiency exist among officers of the Government. Run these malefactors out! They are morally, if not legally, guilty of treason. . . . . There must be honest men. Let them enforce the law, fearlessly, fairly and with that regard for the sanctity and dignity of the Federal Government from which flows its strength. Rid our Government of the crooks, the drones, the grafters! And then let us talk of prohibition, if the subject is still open for discussion."

In recent weeks all the friends of President Coolidge—and they are legion—have had occasion to rejoice over two things. (1) The notable increase in all-'round vigor that has been developed in him by his Summer vacation in the Black Hills; (2) The manifest increase, throughout the entire country, of popular devotion to him and to his good wife. It would be a fine stunt for the President to use some of the moral force and advantage thus generated to tone up and strengthen the administration's stand in favor of the eighteenth amendment and the enforcement of the Volstead act. In what better way could he lay himself out in the service of the country during the sixteen months remaining of his term of office? What thing could he do that would insure him a clearer and a more enduring title to the honor and gratitude of the generations to come?

The burden and responsibility, however, for drying up wet places must rest in large measure with the people. It may become advisable to employ a sort of draft in order to secure an adequate number of the right kind of enforcement agents. In all parts of the country there are many incorruptible, law-abiding, temperance men—not unsightly cranks—who do not hanker after an enforcement job. They are busy with their own affairs, and are slow to volunteer. A method of appeal and a way of pressing them into service, must be devised that will line up these men where they belong. They would bring at once dignity and efficiency to the whole situation—and most desirable results would follow quickly.

REMARKABLE REVIVALS IN CHINA

A Modern Miracle in Hunan—How the Revival in Tamingfu Started—Fruits of the Awakening in Chao Chen

By George T. B. Davis

Several months ago communism was sweeping over China like a tidal wave. The movement was accompanied with intense persecution of the Christians, desecration of churches, and looting of mission property.

Today a change is taking place. The onward sweep of communism has been checked, and in some places the communists are in hiding instead of the Christians. The opposition to communism by the Chinese people has increased very much during the past few months. This is the Lord's doing in answer to the cry of His children in many lands. It is a striking testimony to the power of united intercession. But a great volume of persistent believing intercession is still needed to make the victory complete.

While the anti-Christian agitation is still strong, yet it is perceptibly decreasing, and in one place at least has ceased entirely.

Mr. Hermann Becker, of Yuanchow, Hunan, tells of the miraculous manner in which God answered prayer in their city. He writes:

"The students forced the people into a big parade. They wanted to take some of our helpers and Christians and drive them through the streets. The Christians decided that if they should take one of them, they would ring the large bell and all the Christians would go with those bound. I also offered to go with them. The whole city became nervous. We had a day of prayer and fasting. The parade was very big, but, except for some crying against us, they did nothing.

"On the 19th they wanted to have a big lantern parade, and after that to destroy our chapel. We prayed much. Just when the parade started, a big thunder storm came and all had to flee. It was the Lord! On the 20th we still had rain, so they began the parade in the evening of the 21st.

"We wondered how the Lord would intervene this time. About fifteen minutes after the parade started fire broke out in the house of the General. The soldiers drove the people home with rifles and knives. Some were killed and wounded. We are now caring for some of the severely wounded men. All the anti-Christian movement has gone. The people are as friendly as ever. It was a real miracle. No one could have foreseen such a change."

Mr. Becker has applied for 13,000 copies of the New Testament for distribution in his district. One thousand Testaments have already been forwarded. Mr. Becker writes:

"We are waiting and longing for the New Testaments. The whole church is praying for the distribution of them."

In a glorious manner the blessing of God is resting upon the nation-wide distribution of New Testaments in China. The Chinese pastors and evangelists and workers are co-operating most heartily and enthusiastically in the presentation of Pocket Testaments to Christians and inquirers to build them up in the faith, and to the unsaved to lead them into knowledge of the truth.

Dr. Jonathan Goforth, who has probably been more graciously used than any other missionary in China in revival meetings, tells how he gives the Testaments to those who make profession of their faith in Christ in his meetings. He writes of the readiness of business men and others to receive and read the Word of God. He asks for a consignment of eight or ten thousand Testaments for use in his new field of labor in Szeuingkai, Manchuria.

A Chinese pastor in Shangtung province writes to express the gratitude of 7,000 church members for the Books already received, and requests a further supply of 3,000 copies. He says: "This year I have been appointed leader in a revival movement and have visited all the churches in this district. I received 2,000 Testaments which have already been given out. But many more are needed. Letters begging for copies come daily without break. I beg that you will quickly send me 3,000 copies.

"From the time we received the Books the believers have made great advance in studying the Scriptures. Those who formerly had no Testaments now have one. Those just beginning to learn the doctrine are more zealous, and have already become believers. The gift of the Scriptures has greatly influenced and confirmed their faith. They are mutually encouraged to search the Scriptures to the great benefit of the church."

One of the most touching requests for Testaments has come from Mr. Hwang, a Chinese Christian—evidently a pastor—who has recently contracted leprosy, and is now in a leper colony in Fukien province. He writes: "My gratitude in receiving your letter was greater than I can express in words; and to know that you look on all countries as one family, and all the people as blood brothers. This is what is spoken of as 'loving others as one's self.'

"All in this infirmary are lepers who have never been able to hear God's gospel. They dare not go to the different halls for fear of infecting others. In 1900 I went to the South Seas to preach. This year at the age of 69 I have contracted this disease. When I came to this infirmary I gathered my brethren together to worship God. Most of them are poor and unable to buy Testaments. I hear that your honorable Society is giving away Testaments. I am pleased beyond measure. I write first to ask for Testaments, and second to thank you."

The last sentence of Mr. Hwang's letter reminds one of the leper in the Bible who returned to give thanks. We are gladly sending him a consignment of the life-giving little Books.

Just as the Lord has so marvelously answered prayer, and has raised up forces to oppose and put down communism in China, so in answer to the united prayers of His children in many lands, He can send a mighty spiritual awakening sweeping over China. Already remarkable revivals have occurred in certain places. In two districts at least the outpourings of the Spirit have been largely along the lines of the Welsh revival. Mr. A. J. Smith recently sent an account of how the revival began in Tamingfu in Chihli province. He said:

"The missionaries had been praying for some time, and the Chinese also, that God would send a revival in His own way and in His own time. We had ceased to pray for more missionaries and more money, but we were praying for a spiritual revival. Everything else was secondary. We also got to the place where we said said, 'Lord, send a revival; no matter in what mission, no matter in what province or station, just so a Holy Ghost revival is started.'

"We were greatly encouraged in our praying as we received letters from America, and from other parts of China, telling how the Lord was laying it upon their hearts to pray for a revival, and of the faith they had in God for a revival. A letter from a friend at T'eng Hsien, Shantung, said, 'Some day there is going to be the greatest revival in the world here in China, and we can not get ready too soon. His day is coming.' We gave prayer the pre-eminence. The best hours of the day and night were spent in prayer.

"God has wrought far beyond our fondest expectations. If anybody would have told us five months ago what would take place among the Chinese and foreigners we would not have believed it. Some of the missionaries would be called out of bed at 2 o'clock in the morning to pray. After the burden of prayer had rested upon our hearts for a number of weeks, the burden also came upon the Chinese. They would get up at midnight, and weep and pray for the lost. They would get up early in the morning in the dark and cold and pray for a revival.

"Thousands of confessions have been made. Our best workers confessed to have sins in their lives. All kinds of confessions have been made. Restitution was made to the extent of hundreds of dollars. There was little preaching done. People would get up and quote a Scripture verse, then comment on it. Others would testify or tell of some experience and people would come to the altar of prayer. Such praying, and such Godly sorrow for sin, I have never witnessed in all my life. I knew that God had the power to work in such a marvelous way, but I had not expected it at this time to such a large extent."

Surely not only in China, but in the homelands as well, glorious revivals can be brought to pass if prayer is given the pre-eminent place. Charles G. Finney declared you can have a revival anywhere if you will pay the price. They paid the price in China; and the fire fell from heaven.

Almost simultaneously with the revival in Tamingful district, an equal or even more remarkable outpouring of God's Spirit took place in the Chao Chen district, across the border in Shantung province. Mr. L. C. Osborn recently sent me an account of how the church was transformed when the flood gates of heaven were opened. He said:

"Since the revival began the Chinese have shouldered responsibility as never before. A large part of the work that we have heretofore carried has been shifted to the shoulders of the Chinese. We will give ourselves to prayer, and the preaching of the Word. Praise the Lord!

"It was such a blessing to see open Bibles all over the house. Some of the sins confessed were as follows. A young man was so deceived by the devil that he intended to murder his whole family, and then to commit suicide. Another stole over $300 worth of narcotics. Still another defrauded a friend out of $100. One church member before conversion, poisoned two of his neighbor's cows; another confessed to shooting a man.

"A number of workers confessed to dishonesty in giving out famine relief money, and in handling of mission money. Adultery, borrowing things and refusing to return same, deceitfulness of all descriptions, worshiping idols after being in church several years, were among other sins. Many confessed to breaking all of God's commandments, pride in its worst form, love of self, covetousness, years of hatred toward the missionaries, stealing, long grudges where people had not spoken for years, the taking of revenge, mistreatment of parents, and many other sins.

"The revival spread to the outstations and whole families were united and reconciled to each other. One Sunday there were over 100 seekers at the altar of mercy. Practically all of these were people who had heard considerable preaching; parents, relatives and friends of the Christians. On this day there was much weeping and people dropped to their knees all over the house confessing their sins. Dismissed church members were praying for mercy, and those for whom we had given up hope were mightily revived. People came in for many miles around. God was in our midst. We shall never forget it. But if Jesus tarries and we are permitted to return to our work, we believe we shall see the 'greater things.'

"Five persons possessed with demons were delivered during the three weeks. The enemy was unusually busy, but the Lord got the victory in every case. Praise Him! Some who were under deep conviction ran away from the meetings, but God followed them and they returned, and in sackcloth and ashes bitterly confessed their sins.

"The night before our party left headquarters for Tientsin, being ordered out by the American Consul, we had a communion service with the Chinese which was followed by prayer and testimony. The Chinese said, 'It used to be you missionaries and we Chinese, but now we are one.' Praise God!

"Before this revival began it was impossible for the Chinese to see the importance of strict Sabbath Day observance, but now conviction seizes them, and they are strongly reproved for desecration of the Lord's day. Praise God! The benefit of tithing was also never understood by many, but now some are having to make up years of back tithing, and tithing in general is a joy. Others who have never tithed are promising so do so.

"What God has done He can do again! What He has done in one place He can do in all places, therefore let us pray and believe for a mighty revival."

It may be true that we are on the eve of an era of unparalleled spiritual progress in China. A missionary writes from Hong Kong that the leading native evangelists of South China recently said "There will be a hundred thousand more Christians in China two years from now than there are at present."

Each one who reads these lines can have a definite share in helping to bring to pass a great spiritual awakening in China. Will you not join with thousands of others in daily persistent believing prayer for a mighty outpouring of God's Spirit in this distressed land?

The Chinese pastors are distributing among their people many thousands of prayer cards asking them to spend a few minutes daily in earnest intercession. Will you not set apart a little time daily for special prayer that a righteous government may speedily be established, and that peace may prevail; for the missionaries and Chinese Christians; for the millions of unsaved; for the nation-wide distribution of New Testaments; and for an era of unparalleled spiritual progress?—Methodist Recorder.

A Worthy Pair Honored

of these, James Burgess, has for many years been serving the State or the United States as agronomist. He was present on Sunday. The affection borne for Mr. and Mrs. Hanner by those they thus helped is pleasing to know of. Had they been real parents the love could scarcely have been stronger. Visiting friends last Sunday brought with them materials for a real wedding dinner which were placed upon a long table in the yard and enjoyed by all present. Rev. W. F. Ashburn, their pastor, was present and called on Rev. T. F. McCulloch to return thanks. After dinner and a time spent in pleasant conversation the friends departed, glad that they had been permitted to have a part in paying this honor to these worthy people.

—Sunday has been set apart for worship and religious services. People should be slow to use the day for purposes inconsistent with these sacred uses. In fact, they should not do so. Let the Sabbath be kept sacred, not desecrated. We are not advocating a return to the spirit and method of the Puritan Sabbath, but a due respect for the purpose of the Christian Sabbath. The Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath day. Let Him be duly honored in all our Sabbath day activities.

What other book beside the Bible could be heard in public assemblies from year to year, with an attention that never tires, and an interest that never cloys.—Robert Hall.

The WORK and the WORKERS

The greater number of our churches, we believe, are rounding up good reports for Conference. There remain just four weeks in which to work, and we realize that all faithful pastors, and a great many faithful laymen and laywomen, are working diligently to make a good showing in reports to Conference. We hope that more charges, and more churches will make a 100 per cent report this time than ever before. Produce is now moving to the markets, and this should enable our people to pay up well during October.

Pay-Up Day

Please remember that October 16th has been set as Pay-Up Day. Get in all the funds possible by that day and mail as quickly as possible to Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C. Then use the remaining days to collect deficits.

That College Assessment

The assessment for College running expenses is one of the most necessary things before us. It is a small amount for each charge. It must be raised, or our College will suffer just that much.

One Per Cent for Superannuates

Please turn to page 50 of last Conference Journal and read report of Committee on Superannuates, and find:

"That each church in the Conference be asked to add to their budget, consisting of pastor's salary, Conference claims and current expenses, an amount equal to one per cent of the total amount of budget for permanent fund of the Superannuated Fund Society."

"That all ministers and preachers be asked to contribute one per cent of their salaries to the Permanent Fund of the Superannuated Fund Society."

Not much has been said about this during the year, but of course pastors and people will respond to this Conference action.

Conference Map

We occasionally have inquiries concerning the Conference map. The printers now have the finished map, and we will soon have 700 printed copies for distribution. Some 400 copies have been subscribed for at 25c per copy in quantities, or 35c per single copy. We will distribute these before Conference, if possible; if not, they will be at Conference for distribution.

Visitation—Melton's Grove

On Friday, September 24, we were at Melton's Grove for quarterly conference in the afternoon and for preaching in the evening. The conference was well attended, and a splendid audience gathered for preaching. The people here seem very greatly encouraged, and so far as we can tell the church is in the best condition it has been for years. They have on hand a plan to increase pastor's salary by about $100 for next year.

Rockingham

The entire day, Sunday, September 25th, was spent with our people in Rockingham. This was a happy day for these people. They had all debt cleared on church building, and we had the privilege of dedicating the church. The pastor had planned all-day services, and I preached twice, and Mrs. Dixon spoke on missions at the afternoon service. They took offerings for the budgets during the day. Pastor and people are happy in the work, and plans are on to increase salary for next year.

Bethesda

On Monday, September 26th, we went to Bethesda church, near Cheraw, S. C., for quarterly conference and preaching. The service was well attended for a Monday morning. Rev. J. H. Trollinger is pastor of these three charges, and is loved by his people and is doing a splendid work for the Master.

Pageland

Monday evening found us in services in our church in Pageland, S. C. There was a good congregation present, and they gave earnest heed to the Word. Rev. C. E. Phillips, the pastor, is loved by his people and is rendering splendid service.

Stallings

On Tuesday morning, September 27th, we drove to Stallings, on Mecklenburg, for preaching at 11 o'clock. It was a beautiful day and a busy time for cotton-pickers, but really more people came for the service than I had expected, and they were very attentive to the Word. We had a good time together, and we trust that their reports to Conference will be better because of the visit. After dinner with the pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Totten, we headed toward Charlotte. Here we spent the night with Rev. and Mrs. H. F. Surratt and had the privilege of talking with them over their work.

North Charlotte

We spent a part of Tuesday afternoon looking over the grounds and studying conditions in our North Charlotte work. At night we met a number of our people there in the church hut and talked over the entire situation with them. From all we could learn, by both seeing and asking questions, we believe there is a good opportunity of building up a church in this part of Charlotte. Rev. F. M. Furr is serving as pastor since Brother Braswell had to give up the work. They have a splendid corner lot on one of the main roads leading into North Charlotte, and just as soon as possible they propose starting to build the Sunday school rooms for a permanent church plant. They deserve the sympathy, the prayers, and the financial support of the Conference.

Concord

We stopped in Concord a few minutes to see Rev. D. A. Braswell, but did not find him at home. Inquired about him and learned that his physical condition has not improved much.

We stopped for just a few minutes to look over the new Sunday school plant now being erected in the rear of our First Church plant. It is a splendid building, similar to our Sunday school plant in Lexington, and will add much to our Concord church.

Littleton

On Friday evening, September 30th, I drove to the home of Rev. J. B. O'Briant and spent the night. Did not preach anywhere, but Rev. N. M. Harrison and Rev. A. D. Shelton came in and I had the privilege of a conference with these three brethren concerning the work in this territory.

Greensville

Saturday, October 1st, found us with Rev. H. L. Powell and his people at Hobb's Chapel, Greensville Charge, for preaching and quarterly conference. These people attend their quarterly conferences well. It was a pleasure to preach for them, and to preside over their conference. They did not feel that they could increase salary, but they did hold their own and set salary at $1,500 for next year.

They also instructed the delegate to ask for the return of the present pastor. Brother Powell's people love him, and consider him a fine preacher.

Chase City

Sunday, October 2nd, we were at Chase City. Here we met a fine congregation who listened very attentively to the messages. I preached twice and assisted in dedicating this splendid country church. They are happy that all debt is cleared and their house dedicated to the service of God. This church is rather far removed from our other churches and the people are desirous of being attached to some other church or churches for next year. Rev. W. C. Sanders has served them this year, and they speak well of him and his work.

Rally Day

It is not too late to hold Rally Day in your church. Appoint the day, round up your forces, and take a good offering for Christian education. This will count on your G. C. B. if sent to Mr. V. W. Idol and marked Rally Day offering.

PRAY FOR THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE SESSION

Much important work must be done, and many important changes must be made during the sessions of our coming Annual Conference which will affect our institutions, our charges, and the lives of our pastors and their families, and the upbuilding of Kingdom interests throughout our Conference for the years that are to come.

No man or set of men should act hastily on great issues. Let us pray much, and be calm in our souls, and then act boldly upon the leadings of God's spirit.

We are hereby asking every Christian who who reads this, to stop and pray most earnestly that the will of the Lord may be wrought out in our every Conference action, and that His Spirit may prevail in all that is done.

If we pray aright He will hear and answer, and if His will is done in it all then each one of us should be happy. He will direct if we but trust.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. Dixon.

THE CLIMAX OF THE RALLY DAY PLANS

One Rally Day is no sooner over than we begin the plans for the next one. And a Secretary's anxiety increases with the passing of the days. Then comes a pause. It is weeks and often months before we know just what the results of our work, promoting, praying and planning are. Then we wonder if every pastor will make it a point to see that the offering is not only sent in promptly but designated as "The Rally Day Offering."

But we are learning to be patient. The interest of our people in Rally Day and in the cause of Christian education is certainly increasing. The offerings last year increased twenty-five per cent or over forty-two hundred dollars. These things alone keep us encouraged to the point of real enthusiasm.

It is somewhat surprising, however, that so many of our churches do not use our supplies or observe the day. We are anxious to give the material the widest possible distribution for the information it contains and the character of the play, pieces, etc., is sure to be beneficial.

If you have not sent in an order for Rally Day supplies, do so as soon as possible. Make as careful preparations as circumstances warrant and the results will be satisfactory to all. Send orders to Frank W. Stephenson, Executive Secretary Board of Education, M. P. Church, 613 West Diamond Street, North Side, Pittsburgh, Penna.

DIVISION OF DECIMALS

By Marion B. Knight

"I can't see any sense to it," exclaimed ten-year-old Edna while she waved her pencil defiantly and finally thrust its point through her work paper the more emphatically to express her disgust.

"No sense to what?" asked her mother in that gentle conciliatory tone I had learned so early in my visit to associate with the evening home study hour.

"Oh, to this pointing-off business or to the old rule itself for that matter," returned Edna. "Now you just listen! 'Move decimal point (it's division of decimals, you know) in divisor to the right as many places as are needed to make divisor a whole number!' I can't read any more of the nonsense. If I don't make any mistake I get the answer right, but I can't see through it; why do all that moving of the decimal points?"

"Did you pay strict attention when the teacher explained it?" asked the gentle voice cheerfully.

"She didn't explain at all. Just said, 'Apply the rule ex-act-ly.'"

"Great old teaching I call that," put in Harold, who, being a senior in high school and brimming over with wisdom, must of course take a hand in the discussion. "Don't she know," he continued, "that a clear understanding of why things are so is the sine qua non of learning? Good illustration of the faulty methods—"

Without attempting to interrupt Harold's arraignment of modern school methods, mother reached out for the arithmetic book. "Perhaps I can help you, if I can remember," she said doubtfully in an undertone.

Thus ignored, Harold turned to me for attention and I gave it, but only outwardly, for already my mind was groping among the half-remembered phrases of my far-off school days. Ah! "pointing off as many places in the quotient as the places in the—"

"There's too much mechanical teaching," Harold's voice went on. "No appreciation of the value of interest and perception of reasons, no—"

"Halloo! Harold, since when have you changed your lectureship from tennis to pedagogics?"

We all started at this interruption. It was Professor Ward, next-door neighbor, who, pushing open the door, entered without ceremony.

"You must hold your audience spellbound, Harold, for I rang three times and no one answered. Is your father at home?"

"No, he has gone to New York," said Harold.

"But you, professor," said mother, "are always welcome and never more so than just now. Won't you explain this division-of-decimals rule to Edna? We can't understand the why of it."

Professor Ward held out his hand for the proffered arithmetic and for a moment or two scanned the objectionable rule. Then turning to Edna he asked, "Do you fail to get the answers when you follow the rule?"

"Oh, no, but I don't understand why—" she began.

"Your rule is all right," interrupted the professor. "All you have to do is just use it. Edna, you are only a fifth grader. You couldn't, just couldn't, understand the why, if it were explained. You would get confused following the whys; but maturer minds can grasp them. After a few years"—and he playfully tapped Edna's head—"you will have grown something in here which will be able to understand it all, though I've known people who had pretty good minds who never attained the power to grasp the harder mathematical concepts, but I think you will. Follow your rule now and you'll come out all right."

Then the professor fell to discussing tennis with Harold, Edna returned to her decimals, and I withdrew to my seat by the fireplace and to the train of thought which his words had started.

"You are only a fifth grader. You could not understand, if it were explained." Those sentences shot down deep into my consciousness, down where in secret anguish of soul I had struggled to understand the heart-rending division problem which life had set me. Outwardly my calmness was considered evidence of my success with the problem, but inwardly my heart had been stormed by ravening wolves. Resentment and rebellion wrought their havoc.

Life, both as we look upon it and as we experience it, is full of subtraction and division problems, and with some such problems an understanding of the reason is necessary for their solution. For such an understanding I had eagerly sought. Moreover, life's real problems are difficult at best, but when complicated, as they sometimes are, by the criminal neglect, selfish blunderings, or even well-meant stupidity and inopportune blindness of other people, oh, then we all know how distressing is the confusion which seems to place them beyond solution. For my part I could only reiterate my pitiful "Why? Why?" Could I but understand the reason, I could surely rally my forces on the problem. But no explanation had been vouchsafed me. The professor had accounted for its withholding. Mine was a problem that could be worked not through understanding but by using the rule.

I am only a fifth grader in the preparatory school of life, and it is actually true that my mental and spiritual capacity is not yet equal to understanding the ways and purposes of the Infinite God. No satisfying reason will be given, but there is the rule. Use it.

"You believe in God." (Put the decimal point right there.) "Believe also in me." "Let not your heart be troubled." In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." "And, lo, I am with you alway."

Painful and slow your steps may be as you work for the desired answer to your problem, but, if you follow the rule, the answer will come at last and it will satisfy.—Zion's Herald.

A FORGET PARTY

"Did my son post that letter I gave him yesterday?" asked Ned's mamma.

Ned's hand dived into the inside pocket of his coat and brought out a crumpled letter.

"I'm sorry, mamma!" he cried, seeing the grieved look on his mamma's face.

"I, too, am sorry," responded mamma, "as that was a letter inviting Aunt Amy to stop off here on her way home."

"Oh!" cried Ned. "And I so love Aunt Amy!"

"If you catch this mail, the letter may yet be in time," said mamma.

Ned ran off as fast as he could to post the precious letter.

Uncle Charlie knew that Ned had been forgetting again, and he thought of a plan to cure Ned of this habit.

"Ned will be eight years old Saturday," said mamma that day at teatime.

"Can I have a party with boys and girls, and plum cakes and candies?" cried Ned.

"Of course, you can," said Uncle Charlie. "I'll buy the candles—eight and one to grow on."

"I'll bake the plumcakes," said mamma.

"I'll write the invitations," said Sister Nell.

"I'll make a heaping platter of fudge," laughed Aunt Amy, who after all, had gotten the delayed letter in time.

"And I," said papa, "will send up some ice cream."

Ned danced for joy and ran off to school.

"Do you think," asked Ned at dinner Saturday, "my party will come right at 2:00 o'clock?"

"Well, well," said Uncle Charlie, "I forgot all about those candles."

"I've been so busy," said Aunt Amy, "that I forgot to make the fudge!"

"And I," said papa, "forgot to order the ice cream. It is too bad!"

"It doesn't matter at all," said Sister Nell, "for I forgot to invite any one to the party."

Ned's face grew longer and longer, and he looked at his mamma, who had not spoken yet. Surely she had not forgotten!

"Why," laughed Uncle Charlie, before mamma could speak, "It'll be a forget party, won't it?"

This was too much. Ned burst into tears and ran to his own little room. After what seemed a long, long time to Ned, and to Ned's mamma, too, she stole upstairs with a great big piece of plum cake, for try as she would, mamma could not forget her little boy's birthday.

After that, when Ned forgot, which he seldom did, some one would say, "I guess we better have another forget party."—J. V. Roach, in Christian World.

TRYING FOR THE BEST

Two boys worked together in the same school, and were equally bright. But there was a big difference in them, after all, as time showed.

"If I get second prize, I'll be satisfied. That's what I'm going to aim for. No use trying for first—too many after it now," said one of them.

"I shall try for the first, whether I get it or not. I'll have the satisfaction of knowing that I tried for the best," said the other.

It happened that both won their prizes.

"I'm satisfied," said the second-prize man. "I got what I tried for."

"I am more than satisfied," said the other one. "I got the best—and the inspiration to keep on trying for the best in life."

They went through life as they began. One tried for the best always, sometimes winning, sometimes losing, yet with the joy of past success to cheer him over every failure.

The other aimed lower and won and lost, as all must do. Yet even when he won he held only second place, because he did not try for anything better. And no one can rise above his own endeavor.—Cora S. Day.

FROM PASTORS and PEOPLE

Harmony, Yarborough Charge.—Guess You have been wondering why you haven't heard anything from this part of the "vineyard," but your scribe has been wrestling with Science, Geometry, Latin, etc., and can't get much else on her mind, but I wish to express appreciation of Brother Asheburn's labors here. His earnest messages were full of Gospel truths, and we feel that more good was accomplished than was visible.

Brother Cowan filled his appointment Sunday and the last communion service of the year was offered.

Brother Cowan and family have endeared themselves to the community and we hope they will be returned to us another year. We are sorry to report Miss Kate Medlock on the sick list, but hope she will soon be up again.

We are planning a Rally Day service some time soon, date not yet decided upon.

REPORTER.

Democrat Charge, Pleasant Gap.—Our revival which began the first Sunday in September ended the following Sunday. We believe that the meeting has meant lots to our community and we feel that the church has been greatly revived.

We were glad to have with us during our revival some folks from High Point and Thomasville. Mr. T. B. Ridge and family of High Point, Mr. Odus Ridge, Mr. J. M. Gallimore and Mr. Bingham Wilburn of Thomasville. They were a great help to us. They sang a number of quartets and other special songs. While they were here they made a visit to Mt. Mitchel. The pastor and friends appreciated their visit with us and hope they will come back again.

The pastor was also visited a few weeks previous by his sister, Mrs. Hill, Mr. T. A. Cranford and family, also Mr. B. M. Miller and family of Thomasville.

The second Sunday in October will be the last appointment at this church for this year. The fourth quarterly conference will be held on Saturday before the second Sunday in October at Pleasant Gap church.

God bless our pastor, Rev. H. W. Bell. We believe he is a great man. He is a big preacher. We alway expect wonderful sermons each time he preaches.

REPORTER.

Bessemer City.—Our Sunday school is now moving from 152 students to two hundred and we are praying for that number. This church is on fire for the Sunday school and they are now planning to build more school room.

Our revival will begin on October 2, 1927. Rev. Walter Isenhour will be the pulpit help, so you pray for us.

Church is putting her faith on legs and Christianity on wheels and we can see in the near future a great day for our church in Bessemer City. W. L. CARSON.

Lincolnton.—We have painted the church inside and out and remodeled the inside, so it looks like we are doing something and we are; don't let that fool your tin top.

I have been in revivals this year almost five months and this has been one of my most successful years in evangelism.

In 1921 on Mecklenburg charge under Bible ministry, 45 members were added to the church. Almost 1-20 of all that were added to the church that year.

God hears when we call and God helps when we work. God said to his Son, "Let us make man in our image;" today he says to you, "Let us make man."

We are the army and God is the Captain. Why not march on to victory? May God bless use all in our efforts to establish his kingdom.

We are closing out our tent meeting here on Rhyne Heights Sunday evening, October 2, 1927. We have had a wonderful meeting. Because I have called sin by its name and persuaded men and women to lay down the sin business. People have come from far and near to hear the old gospel gun put shot and shell into the ranks of the devil. People of other denominations have blended their songs, prayers and personal work with us for the Master's cause.

Our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor are marching on to higher heights. Our church is moving on fine now.

W. L. CARSON.

Orange Charge, Chestnut Ridge.—The revival meeting began here Sunday, September 25th, and closed Thursday night, September 29th.

Rev. Edw. Suits did all the preaching except one sermon by Rev. D. R. Williams, and one by the writer.

We were glad to have the following ministerial brethren attend the meeting: Brothers Carr and Contrell of the Baptist church; J. D., T. A., D. R. Williams and M. I. Crutchfield of our own conference These all rendered valuable assistance in the meeting as did a number of the people from adjoining M. P. Churches, especially Brother T. O. Pender from Mebane who led the singing part of the time.

The preaching of Brother Suits was of a high order and made a profound impression. I do not believe it was ever my privilege to hear a stronger series of sermons.

The visible results were not what we had hoped for. Very few of the unsaved attended the services. Four were converted. Four joined the church. Some were reclaimed, the church was revived.

A purse of $40.00 was presented to Brother Suits, to partly express the appreciation of the people.

Think the church is in the best shape spiritually it has been during the present pastorate.

To God be all the praise.

B. W. WILLIAMS.

Halifax.—We began our revival services at Eden on the first Sunday in August and at Bethesda on the second Sunday in August. Rev. H. W. Maier, of Thomasville, N. C., assisted me at both places, and he was at his best and did some good preaching and the people were well pleased with his messages. We did not have the visible results that we expected but we feel that great good was accomplished. We began our meeting at Union church on the third Sunday in August. Rev. M. P. Chambliss of Henderson, N. C., assisted us here and did some good preaching and the church was greatly revived.

We began our meeting at Hollister on the fourth Sunday in August. Rev. Edward Suits of Mebane, N. C., assisted me here and did some good preaching which resulted in great good; five were converted and united with the church and several were reclaimed and the church was revived.

We began our meeting at Harmony on the third Sunday in September. Rev. N. G. Bethea, (a former pastor) of Lexington, N. C., assisted us here. Brother Bethea brought us some fine messages which I think will result in great good. On Friday night he delivered a lecture on his travels through the Holy Land at Bethesda church. This lecture was enjoyed by all who heard it.

We began our meeting at Ringwood on the fourth Sunday in September. Rev. A. D. Shelton of Pleasant Hill, N. C., assisted me here and delivered some good messages which stirred the hearts of the members of the church and on Friday night nine came forward and knelt at the altar for prayer and were converted or reclaimed. Two united with the church at Ringwood and there are two or three to unite with other churches.

It is a very short time until conference and we are behind with our collections, but we can always count on our members to come up with a good report on the last round.

Let us all pray that we may all bring up good reports and that we may have a good conference. C. L. SPENCER.

Tabernacle, Tabernacle Charge.—Attendance at church and Sunday school was good Sunday. Brother Ashburn preached one of his best sermons at 11 o'clock. We were glad to have a number of visitors worship with us. Among them were Brothers T. F. McCulloch and Eugene Causey of Calvary church, Greensboro.

Our last quarterly conference for the year will be held Thursday afternoon, October 13th, in Tabernacle church.

The Missionary societies will also hold a meeting that afternoon in the church. We hope to have a good report for Annual Conference.

A surprise wedding anniversary dinner was given Brother J. E. Hanner and wife Sunday. While Brother Hanner attended church, as is his custom, a large table was erected on the lawn and members of relatives and friends gathered in honor of the golden anniversary of the marriage of Brother and Sister Hanner.

A bountiful dinner was spread which everyone present enjoyed.

The table was decorated with bouquets of roses and dahlias.

Pastor Ashburn, Brothers J. F. and T. F. McCulloch were present, also the Brother Fox who performed the marriage ceremony of Brother and Sister Hanner. This couple who have been married 50 years are our most valuable church members

Never in the memory of this writer have we known this couple for any reason, to grow indifferent toward their church or forsake it in any way, but have known them as faithful and active church members.

We wish for them many more happy wedding anniversaries.

MRS. R. R. H., Reporter.

Haw River Charge.—Last Thursday was a sad day for Haw River Charge. Mrs. John Jones of Mizpah church, after a brief illness from blood poison, passed away at St. Leo's Hospital. Later in the evening while returning from the Harvest Jubilee at Reidsville, Brother Charles Lucus and wife of Fair Grove church with their two children and a Mr. Johnson who was driving the car, were crushed to death at a railroad crossing. The lives of the entire family of Brother Lucus who were living at his home were crushed out. All four were buried at Fair Grove in one grave.

We have never, before, seen so many people at a funeral.

The funerals were conducted by the writer assisted by Brothers Ashburn and Gilespie of the Baptist church. The sympathies of the entire community go out for the bereaved relatives. W. D. REED.

Glen Raven.—We are getting on fine, especially the finance part of the work. We will hold our fourth quarterly conference on Saturday before the third Sunday in this month, at this church, at 2:30. Hope to have fine reports from all.

Our Children's Day program was a success and enjoyed by all present.

Sunday, September 18th, we received Mr. W. D. Pearce by letter.

On next Sunday our Alamance county Sunday school convention will be held at Bethlehem Christian church, Altamahaw. Hope to be well represented. Fourth Sunday Rev. David Shepard, a ministeral student of Elon College, preached for us in the absence of our pastor. We all welcome him any time.

Conference will soon be here and we trust this will be the greatest one ever held.

Best wishes. REPORTER.

Asheboro.—Our Rally Day services were held on the fourth Sunday in September with good results. The Sunday school stayed for the morning service and the auditorium overflowed into the Sunday school annex. An interesting program of one hour's length was rendered. The offering for Christian Education was about sixty dollars. One of the new features of our Sunday school work is the Intermediate-Senior Department with Brother Robert Lloyd as superintendent. We now have the following departments in our school; cradle roll, beginners, primary, junior, intermediate-senior and adult.

At the evening hour on Rally Day Rev. J. Clyde Auman came down and preached a splendid sermon. Our people were delighted to hear him again. Last Sunday, due to several big family reunions, nearby revivals and the results of the Randolph County Fair, things went down almost to the zero point but we are hoping to start up again soon.

The pastor will be in Charlotte this week including next Sunday assisting Brother Surratt in a meeting. In the pastor's absence next Sunday morning Rev. Robert Lloyd will preach. There will be no evening preaching service. J. E. PRITCHARD.

Jerusalem.—The date for the meeting of the 100th Annual Conference is rapidly approaching. There are only three more weeks after the present week in which to prepare for the conference. This writer will have only two more appointments at Jerusalem between now and the Annual Conference. What is done by the various charges must be done speedily. There will be a hustling around on the part of stewards from now until the last Sunday before conference in securing the finances for the pastors' reports to conference.

As stated in the foregoing paragraph we will have two more services before conference, next Sunday morning and the third Sunday morning. After that we will be looking forward to November 1 when we will go to Asheboro for the Annual Conference. This writer will endeavor to make one more report for Jerusalem before conference.

C. B. WAY, Reporter.

Mitchell's Grove, Guilford Circuit.—While we have been silent for some time, yet we are still pressing on in this beautiful highway of holiness that leads to life everlasting.

Our Sunday school is doing good work; have a very good attendance. We have one of our young men, Graden Ring, for superintendent. He also is a student at our High Point College. Graden has proved himself for some time to be one of the most loyal church members, always present; he is dependable, he never fails us, rain or shine, cold or hot. We are looking for still greater things from his life, for he is so faithful to his church. Then we have Brother Lewis Cashatt for our Bible teacher; he is always there and enjoys the study of God's Word, and we are thankful for his interest in the class. We have five classes and the teachers are real faithful. Miss Josie Parsons has the Intermediate class, Mrs. Mitchell the junior class, Miss Nina Jones has the primary class and Miss Rosa Cashatt the beginners' class. Then David Cashatt, who has been our secretary for a number of years, never fails us, but always there through shine or shade. Faithful attendance has much to do with the progress of the Sunday school especially the regular attendance of the officers.

Our special meeting was fourth Sunday in September at 11 o'clock. Rev. Mr. Braxton, a student at High Point College, preached a splendid sermon; at 2 o'clock the children from our Children's Home game a program which was very much enjoyed by all; the collection was a very liberal offering which amounted to about $50.00 that was pledged and paid, so we seemed to have the evidence of the spirit of the Lord right at the beginning of the meeting. Then at night Rev. Braxton gave us another good serman. Come again, Brother Braxton. We have so few young men today that seem to hear the call. Our young ministers that are truly and sincerely preaching the Word need much enrouragement in this fast age; so many more things to attract their attention which the older ministers did not have to contend with. On Monday Rev. J. H. Moton came and remained until Friday night, when the meeting closed. Brother Moton preached at 2:30 and at night and most of you know how Brother Moton can preach. Well, he just seemed to be at his best. We had a great revival and feel that both saint and sinner feel they want to live better than ever before by hearing such wonderful, soul-stirring sermons. May the Lord bless Brother Moton and give him souls for his hire. May he live many more years to preach the blessed Word of God, and may his last days be his best days. We welcome him back again to our church and into our homes.

MARTHA PARSONS.

Hickory Grove.—Our revival meeting, which was in progress for six days, came to a close last Friday night. We had about twenty conversions, with nine additions to the church. Rev. W. M. Loy, of Burlington, did the preaching. His preaching was very interesting, constructive and convincing. Our attendance was good. It can safely be said that the work here is progressing nicely. While we are doing nothing astonishing, yet all forces are pulling together and are encouraged and optimistic. However, we need your prayers.

ELIZABETH GLASS, Reporter.

Corinth, Littleton Circuit.—Rev. J. B. O'Briant has filled two appointment here since our last report. He always brings us a good message. After services yesterday the church officers were elected. Our church financially is behind and Conference is but a month away, so we must hurry to get in line. M. J. Morris gave us a good lecture on church finances yesterday.

We have a new Sunday school superintendent, Mr. G. D. Insco. We wish him much success. Mrs. Carter is our organist.

We were glad to have attend services here yesterday Mrs. C. T. Hardy and children, and Mr. Clifton Morris, of Lynchburg, Va.

Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Morris visited friends at Greenville and Farmville, N. C., last week.

Miss Louise Insco, of our community, left the 27th for Greenville E. C. T. C. where she will attend school. We shall miss her very much.

Bonney Morris, teacher of the Junior class, left Sunday for Davis-Wagner College, Norfolk, Va. He is a young man of good promise and we hope to hear good reports of him in school and later in life. We shall certainly miss him at church and Sunday school.

Rev. H. L. Powell visited in our midst one day last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Pepper and baby have returned to New York after visiting his mother for several days.

Mrs. M. S. Harrill is visiting her daughter, Mrs. M. J. Morris.

Don't forget services here the fourth Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. We hope to have a large crowd as this will be our last appointment before Conference.

With best wishes.

MRS. B. F. MORRIS, Reporter.

Spring Valley, Vance Circuit.—Our special meeting began the third Sunday in September. Rev. R. C. Stubbins came on Monday and preached through Friday night. Brother Stubbins did excellent work. There were several professions, and the church was greatly revived.

Our Sunday school is doing fine. Last Sunday we had 67 present, and yesterday we had 75. We know from this that the Sunday school has been revived since the meeting.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society met last Wednesday at the church with a very good attendance. Reports were read from various committees, and it was decided to have an ice cream supper real soon to help on the budget.

Our Christian Endeavor Society met last night with the largest crowd since early spring and a very interesting program was fully carried out. The subject was, "What Would Happen If All Church Members Were Really Christians." Just what would? Ask yourself that question.

Mrs. J. B. Wiggins delightfully entertained the Young People's class of the Sunday School Friday night at her home.

The fourth quarterly conference will convene at Flat Rock next Saturday. We hope to have a good report. REPORTER.

High Point.—Dr. Leonard B. Smith of Wilmington, Del., who is conducting a series of meetings for two weeks in the First church, is delivering most timely, practical, and convincing sermons every evening. Dr. Smith is as eloquent a speaker and as consecrated to service and God as the First Church congregation has ever had the pleasure of hearing. He came on Monday evening, September 26, not as a stranger to us, for he had conducted three revivals in the old church, the last one having been eleven years ago, but the years have added power and force to the man and his character until today after a ministry of twenty-one years he stands without a peer among his fellows in the denomination. On Sunday morning his message to the large audience was an eloquent masterpiece of word-painting as he depicted Jesus, the dying Lamb of God, on the cross. The theme of his discourse was "Why Jesus Christ died." He emphasized Christ's humiliation as He hung upon the cross between two common thieves, suffering alone and forsaken, and His exaltation, as He cried with a loud voice, "It is finished!" He died that He might bear the sins of the world and that we might live; that He might carry us to glory. He is in Heaven now, interceding for us. At this service Mr. Clarence Schultheiss sang a lovely solo, "Hear, O Heaven, Give Ear, O Earth," with fine effect. The choir rendered a beautiful anthem "O Saviour of the World." At the evening service, Dr. Smith spoke on "Times Once and Now," and compared conditions in our day with those of the time of Paul. He declared in part that Paul discovered in Athens too much false religion, and today one finds too little real religion. People then were ignorant, and perhaps could be excused for a part of their sinfulness; today there is no excuse for ignorance, that it is sinful ignorance, not ignorant sinfulness." "Paul was announcing a brand new theme; mine, though the same, is ever new. He was attempting to displace in their hearts a multitude of gods; my purpose is to make a place for the "only true and living God." He was attempting to uproot false faith; I am enjoining the old faith, God's only remedy for sin. Paul discovered at Atheus too much of false religion; I find in High Point too little of real religion. He attempted to get the people away from their many altars; I'm trying to get people closer to a few altars. The effect of Paul's sermon was largely the possible effect of mine; some mocked, some waited to hear him again, and some believed." Dr. Smith preaches the old doctrine of repentance as the only remedy for sin; he says that repentance is not fear, or feeling, or a resolve to improve on the past; but it is a complete "change of mind" toward sin and self and God. This is what God commands all men everywhere to do." Dr. Smith believes firmly in the family altar, observance of the Sabbath, the conservation of our youth to the church, and a consistent life for professing Christians.

On Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, despite an all-day rain-storm, a goodly number of the members of the two Missionary Societies met at the church for the general October meeting. Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, president of Foreign Society, presided, and after reading a chapter, led in a fervent prayer. The three circles made good reports. Each circle will hold a meeting at separate places on third Monday of each month, and has pledged to raise $100 for our Budget. In the Home Society Mrs. E. L. Ballard, presided. An additional $7.00 was contributed to Scholarship Loan Fund in the College, making our contribution $57.00. Mrs. George T. Penny gave her check for $100 as her annual Scholarship in Alvan Drew School, Pine Ridge, Ky., and a rising vote of thanks was tendered her for her generosity. This is the fifth year that she has contributed this amount, which has paid the expenses of a young girl, Argent Park, through High School, and she expects to graduate from eleventh grade next May. This shows a fine spirit of helpfulness on the part of Mrs. Penny. The question of our society giving a Scholarship in High Point College each year to a certain boy or girl for the four years' course was discussed, and we decided that it would be a splendid thing to do, but no definite steps were taken. Dr. Leonard B. Smith then came in, and delivered a splendid, heart-to-heart talk on the importance of saving our youth while of tender years. He stressed the importance of the mother's influence in the home, and the numberless temptations of modern life to lure our children's feet into paths of indifference and sin. This was a most practical, timely talk on a subject of vital interest to us, most of whom are mothers, and our heart's desire is to see our children Christians, growing up to become God-fearing men and women.

The Executive Committee of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies is meeting today (Tuesday) with Mrs. C. L. Whitaker on College Circle. The members will be served lunch in the College dining room.

We are much pleased to announce that the condition of Capt. A. M. Rankin is improving, and he hoped to be out again in a few weeks. A host of friends will rejoice to hear this glad news from this staunch and loyal layman. We are also delighted to learn that Messrs. J. W. Hinkle and D. A. Neese, who have been quite ill, are improving. The many friends of Mrs. W. P. Pickett will be pained to learn that she is ill in bed, suffering from neuritis.

Caroleen Charge.—Our revival meeting began the third Sunday in September and continued ten days. Rev. G. H. Hendry of Concord was pulpit help except on Saturday night Rev. Mr. Hornbuckle, pastor of Caroleen M. E. Church, delivered a fine sermon. Also Sunday morning the pastor, Rev. L. S. Helms, delivered a fine sermon. Then Sunday afternoon at three o'clock Mr. Hendry preached a special sermon to men and boys only.

The congregation was very good at the night services. Mr. Hendry delivered some splendid sermons. I am sure the meeting was a help to all that attended. There were several conversions, but no members added to the church.

We were glad to have Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Hendry and little daughter visit in our home several times during the meeting. Hope they will come to Caroleen again in the near future.

There will be an all-day service at Caroleen M. P. Church the serond Sunday in October; the fourth quarterly conference will be in the afternoon. A large crowd is expected to be present. We ask the prayers of all the good people that Caroleen Church may be a growing church for God's service that much good may be accomplished in the future.

FANNIE McKINNEY.

Asheville.—We were very glad to receive into our membership Mrs. Jarvis Eller last Sunday.

Pastor Bates is preaching earnest sermons. Our church is endeavoring to wind up the year with all the budgets paid.

Brother R. Fletcher Williams was married to Miss Josie Rymer this (Monday) morning at 10 o'clock. The bride was visiting her brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Furman Rymer, at 114 Westwood Place, in West Asheville. She has been on the staff of the N. C. Children's Home Society in Greensboro for several years. Brother Williams lives next door to that institution on Fairmount street. The bride's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Rymer, were present; also, besides her host and hostess, her brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Rymer and their little son, Frank, Jr., who was ring-bearer; and her sister Miss Flora Rymer, who was maid of honor, and the only attendant. Others present were Miss Miriam Williams, daughter of the groom, and Miss Miriam Spoon, of Greensboro, Rev. J. S. Williams and Mrs. Williams. Mrs. Frank Rymer played the wedding march. Rev. J. S. Williams performed the ceremony. The home was adorned with beautiful flowers and evergreens. Dainty refreshments were served.

REPORTER.

Matthews Chapel, Greensville Circuit.—Our revival meeting which was in progress the third week came to a close on the following Thursday evening. Rev. H. S. B. Thompson was with us on Sunday, and Rev. R. S. Troxler, of Lexington, came to us on Monday and was with us to the close.

Several conversions were made, and one added to the church, but yesterday being our regular preaching Sunday two others came forward for church membership.

I am sure everybody received a great blessing by having Brother Troxler with us. He delivered excellent messages that I feel sure we were drawn closer and are better prepared for our work. We hope to have the privilege of having him with us again some day.

Sunday school and Christian Endeavor are progressing nicely. We have curtains ready for our Sunday school rooms but haven't as yet put them up. Last night we had a good topic for our Christian Endeavor, and our program was very interesting. "How Can We Make Our Society More Successful" was the topic for discussion. At the conclusion of our program Mr. Norwood, of the Baptist church, gave us a brief talk on the "Progress of our Young People in the Future." This was very interesting.

We are planning a circuit rally for the fifth Sunday in this month, which will be held at Matthews Chapel. All churches on this work are urged to prepare a short program for the day and we will also have a place for some good speaker. There will be all-day services.

Do we realize another conference year is drawing to a close, and can we look back over the past and see our work well done? But if we have made mistakes, we would not like to repeat them.

We are expecting Brother Powell to return for the fifth year.

Just recently our community was grieved and shocked when we learned of the most sudden death of little Frances Powell. Our hearts go out in sympathy to Brother Powell and family. May the dear Lord comfort them and bind their broken hearts.

LOTTIE EDWARDS.

South Lexington.—The work of the church and Sunday school has been moving along fairly well since our last report. The Sunday school attendance has been "picking up" for the past few Sundays. There were 146 present last Sunday. The offering amounted to $4.82 which was for the Children's Home.

There was no preaching at this church last Sunday morning, as the pastor, Rev. A. Ridge, was at Mount Carmel at 11 o'clock for his regular First Sunday morning appointment at that church. The writer and family, accompanied by Mrs. Mollie Hartley, of the South Lexington church, were privileged to attend the Sunday school and preaching service at Mount Carmel and heard a good sermon by the pastor on the subject of drifting.

There was a fairly good attendance at the service at South Lexington last Sunday night and Brother Ridge delivered another good sermon on the subject of weaving the fabric of a Christian life. His text was Isaiah 38:12. A seven-year-old girl sang a solo just preceding the sermon. The little girl's song was deeply appreciated by the congregation. Her name was not learned by this writer.

Pastor Ridge has announced that the fourth quarterly conference for the South Lexington charge will be held at Mount Carmel on Saturday before the third Sunday in October at two o'clock in the afternoon. He urges all official members to be present and also asks all members of the two churches to attend if possible, as there will be very important business transacted in finishing up this year's work and planning for the coming year.

The election of church officers and Sunday school superintendent will be held at the South Lexington church next Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service, it was announced last Sunday night.

A revival meeting of a few days duration will begin next Sunday morning with the pastor to do the preaching. Probably a singer and choir leader will be secured to direct the music for the services.

C. B. WAY, Reporter.

Hope, Chatham Charge.—We regret very much that our pastor, Rev. C. G. Isley, has been indisposed for several days and was not able to meet his appointments Sunday. We hope he will soon be out again.

Our Sunday school is planning a rally day service for the second Sunday in this month at 11 o'clock. The program will consist of appropriate pieces by the children and a choir from Siler City M. P. church will furnish special music. In the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock Rev. W. M. Loy of Burlington will preach for us. We are all looking forward with pleasure to hearing Brother Loy again, as he was with us in our revival and made many friends in that community.

REPORTER.

Mt. Zion, Pinnacle and Mt. Zion Charge.—Attendance at Sunday school isn't what we would like to see. One reason for this decline is so many "reunions" are being held on Sundays. Quite a lot of people can't attend their family reunion and their church the same day. We hope these reunions will be held on Saturdays or some week-day.

Brother Hunter has served us at all times promptly and regularly.

At our last and third quarterly conference Brother J. A. Allen of Pilot church was duly elected delegate to Annual Conference. A committee of three, Mrs. W. E. Jones, Mrs. E. A. Jones and C. W. Allen, was appointed by Superintendent S. T. Lane last Sunday to get out program for Rally Day service to be held on the third Sunday night in October. Committee met in the home of Mrs. E. A. Jones Sunday evening and arranged program and immediately after preaching service Sunday night program was handed out.

Miss Mildred Stone was recently married to Mr. Foust Smith of Capella, Stokes county, N. C. We shall miss Mrs. Smith in Sunday school and church work; however we wish for this fine couple a very happy and prosperous life.

Mrs. E. S. Stone has been confined to her bed for sometime with erysipelas, but is improving. Mrs. Stone is one of those "stand-bys" in all meetings of her church who always is there if health will permit. We hope for her a speedy recovery.

Mr. Roy Hunt will leave for Winston-Salem next Monday, having accepted a position with the office force of the new Taylor Warehouse of that city.

We are glad to report two of our boys at High Point College, Mr. Norman Culler, and Mr. Edgar Lane.

The Woman's Missionary society held their regular meeting immediately after Sunday school last Sunday with good attendance and reported that a new member joined the society.

On Saturday before the third Sunday our fourth quarterly conference will meet with Pilot church at 1:30 o'clock p.m.

Mr. and Mrs. Ottis Rierson recently returned from Alexandria, La., where they have been visiting Mrs. Rierson's uncle, Mr. Chas. Kallam.

Best wishes to the Herald and readers.

C. W. ALLEN, Reporter.

Chestnut Ridge, Orange Circuit.—Our revival meeting began the fourth Sunday in September and closed Thursday night following. Our pastor had for his pulpit help Rev. Edward Suits, of Mebane.

Our pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, filled the pulpit Sunday morning. He delivered a wonderful message, which was enjoyed by all.

Mr. Suits came Sunday afternoon and remained until the meeting closed. Our people learned to like Mr. Suits and enjoyed his stay among us. He has a warm welcome in our hearts and we wish for him to come again. He delivered some wonderful messages. There were several professions, some reclaimed and four united with the church. The church was greatly revived and much good accomplished. At the close a purse of $40.00 was presented to Mr. Suits.

Thursday p. m. Rev. D. R. Williams delivered a very helpful and interesting sermon which was enjoyed by all. We were glad to have with us during the meeting Rev. T. A. Williams and family, Rev. D. R. Williams and wife, Rev. J. D. Williams, Rev. M. I. Crutchfield; also the Baptist preacher, Mr. Cantrell, and wife, from Hillsboro.

There will be a Sunday school convention at this church the fifth Sunday in October, with dinner on the grounds; hope to have a good program from each church.

The fourth quarterly conference will meet here Saturday before the fourth Sunday in October. Let all official members take due notice. There will be some business of special interest to come before the conference.

The Lord's Supper will be observed the second Sunday in October.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

OCTOBER HOME MISSIONARY PROGRAM

The October program for Home Missionary societies studies the Pine Ridge school, of which an interesting account, with some statistics, is given in chapter one of the booklet, "Our Five-Fold Program," which we believe was mailed to each auxiliary.

The Scholarship Maintenance Fund, to be stressed this month, is a fund for the education of children in Pine Ridge School.

The report of the scholarship maintenance committee to the last Home Board, which was adopted, contains these items:

"We feel that it is the duty of each auxiliary of the W. H. M. S. to take up some form of Scholarship work, and we recommend that each auxiliary have a scholarship secretary who is sufficiently interested to present the work in an appealing way, remembering that only thorugh earnest prayer can great work be accomplished."

"As the proceeds from the sale of the used clothing, sent to Pine Ridge, becomes a part of the Scholarship Maintenance Fund, we ask that all delegates stress this phase of the work and present the scholarship work to their auxiliaries in a personal way when possible."

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETIES

PINE RIDGE NOTE

We expect to have Rev. E. D. Stone, D. D., of Baltimore, with us for an evangelistic meeting beginning October 11th and continuing ten days or more. We request the prayers of all who are interested. These meetings ought to mean much to our young people in the school and the community.

People are coming from far distant points as well as near by to get supplies of winter clothing and shoes from our second hand store. Our stock is low. Ship by parcel post direct to Pine Ridge, or if necessary by freight to Slade, Ky. Please send nothing by express as we have no express office accessible.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD

LITTLE FRANCES POWELL

Dearest Frances, you have left us
And we miss you, oh, so much
But our Father hath said,
"Of my kingdom is such."

How we miss you in our school room
With your smiles of love and cheer;
In our hearts we often wish
That you again were here.

You were kind and thoughtful of teacher,
Always lending a helping hand,
Every day there is a longing
For Frances, my "right-hand-man."

Yes, your class mates miss you
As you would say each day,
"Little comrades, come with me
And let's play school today."

You, with them would scamper off to play,
Then all of you would begin to sing
After which you'd call for Bible verses—
"Mildred, give us John 3:16."

Oh, my heart would beat with pleasure
As I'd listen to your childish play;
I'd say, some day, she'll be leading others
Up the bright and shining way.

We loved you, oh, we loved you,
We loved you so well
Again, we hope to meet you
In Heaven, there to dwell.

Dear Father, comfort us, and help us
In our lives day by day
To profit by her example
And brighter other lives along life's way.

She had her faults and failures
As all of us humans do
But God could read her little heart
And knew that it was true.

So He took her home to heaven
Where she sings in the cherubic band.
Some time, we hope to meet her
Then and there, we'll understand.

Weep not for Frances, dear loved ones,
As you look upon her vacant chair
You, too, will meet her—heaven will be sweeter
When she happily welcomes you there.

Until then, be true and faithful,
Trust in God, and do your best each day
Some day, somewhere, your heartaches will cease
And your tears will be dried for aye.

DORA PAIR.

Cox

Alpheus Carl Cox, son of the late Milton and Margaret Cox, was born in Randolph county October 15, 1880, and departed this life September 14, 1927. He was brought up on his father's farm where he learned many important lessons which stayed with him through life. On August 19, 1900, he was united in marriage to Miss Ada Miller, also of Randolph county. In early manhood Brother Cox taught vocal music, later teaching in the public schools. His last work of a public nature was that of Sheriff of Randolph county to which office he gave his best. After retiring from this office he bought a farm about eight miles south of Asheboro and lived there only a few months until he was taken ill and after several months of illness was called home.

In early life Brother Cox professed saving faith in Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour and united with Gray's Chapel Methodist Protestant church. After his marriage he united with the Christian Church and on moving to Asheboro a number of years ago he brought his letter to the Christian Church. When the church was discontinued as an organization he and his family began to attend the Asheboro Methodist Protestant Church where his interest and sympathies continued until his death. During his last illness the writer visited him a number of times and his mind was on spiritual things. A good man is gone. The county has lost a valuable citizen. The funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. L. W. Gerringer at Gray's Chapel M. P. Church on September 15.

He leaves his widow and six children, A. M., Miss Mabel, Paul, Genevieve, Floyd, and Margaret. There are two brothers, John Cox of Greensboro and Eddie Cox of Climax; two sisters, Mrs. John Hockett and Miss Nettie Cox of Pleasant Garden.

SCHOOL NAMED FOR LABOR LEADER

A new public school building in Chicago has been named in memory of Samuel Gompers, famous labor leader who died December 13, 1924. A bronze tablet bearing a likeness of Samuel Gompers and an inscription telling of his life and achievements has been presented to the school by labor organizations of Chicago. The inscription ends as follows: "He was a firm believer in our public school system. He did much to encourage and promote education among the masses. The legacy he left is the memory of a true, an honest, an unstainable life, consecrated to the service of justice, freedom and humanity."

JEWISH NEW YEAR

The Jewish New Year began at sundown September 26. According to Jewish reckoning that was the beginning of the year 5688. Special services in observance of Rosh Hashanah, as the New Year is called in Hebrew, were held in synagogues throughout the world. Yom Kippur, or the Day of Atonement, is the most sacred day in the Jewish calendar. It falls this year on October 6.

1 Per Cent on Budgets For Superannuates

English Street	$ .50
Forsyth	11.48
Orange	52.00

Haw River Mission has the distinction of being the second charge over the top on all budgets. We are glad to welcome them to this position. Spencer has stood alone for so long that they will be glad for company.

Winston-Salem and Davidson goes over on the A. C. B. Fine, folks and pastors, hurry up over on the G. C. B. also.

Charlotte is proud to report over the top on the G. C. B. counting their contributions to the Missionary Societies. They say they are going over on the A. C. B. this week. Is so they will be the third charge over on all budgets.

On the college Bethesda and Orange go over the top. We expected Melton's Grove to have a report of over the top in too but presume "Uncle Sam" was a little slow and the report did not reach the treasurer.

It will be great to watch the charges climb over the top from now until Conference meets. A goodly number of pastors and people will be able to say "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do" this Conference year. How many will?

One of the churches on Anderson is over the top. We would be glad to show this if we knew which one it is.

WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT TUBERCULOSIS?

1. What is tuberculosis?
2. What germ causes it?
3. When do these germs usually enter the body?
4. When they enter the body do they usually cause active disease at once?
5. What factors contribute to changing a tuberculous infection into active disease?

If you do not know the answers to these questions write The Extension Department, The North Carolina Sanatorium, Sanatorium, N. C., and ask for the pamphlet distributed free of charge to citizens of the state, "What You Should Know About Tuberculosis." When you receive the pamphlet you will find the answers to these questions in the first paragraph of the first chapter. A perusal of the entire pamphlet will tell you many things about one of the most common and dreaded diseases that will help you to guard yourself, your family and your neighbors from the dread disease.

THE DEMPSEY-TUNNEY FIGHT

The Dempsey-Tunney fight is on, the world is all "on fire;"
Church folk and crooks and bums amass to satisfy desire;
Amass to see the "knock out" blow; they do not pause to think
That death may trail that crashing blow that makes the loser sink.

One hundred seventy thousand strong will go to see that fight;
And millions more will long to go on that grand glorious night;
And thousands more who would not go, at home will "listen in,"
And talk about it all so much; they'll help the thing to win.

Three million dollars will be spent for seats in sight of "ring,"
To see the skill in "dash" and "blow;" to see that bloody thing
And millions more will be flung into the gambling ring,
And O, the awful aftermath, this may the loser bring!

It is a gamble from the start, it's a gamble who will beat;
It's a gamble when one pays his cash to get a worth-while seat.
Life's standards are thus brushed aside; enthusiasm wins
With God in heaen looking on—they do not think of Him;

The One who gave them life and health, and all material things;
With promise of eternal life, if we, His praises sing.
O no, they're drunk with mad desire, and now they do not care
How much astray they'll lead the young, who'll know that they were there.

Nor do they care for those strong men, misled in early life;
No, "Hip hurrah! I'm going to see that grand and glorious strife;"
The world-wide strife for VICTORY—a fight for weatlh and fame;
Thus helping these misguided men to bring the world to shame.

But when the day of reckoning comes, which comes as sure as life,
And our Creator calls us home, will we be then in strife?
O no, no striving with our Lord; He lets us have "our day"
Until He comes to call us home; then He commands the way.

—Alice Hyatt Mather.

Another Version of the New Testament

Some have been surfeited with new versions of the Bible or parts of the Bible in recent years. Some people are so constituted that they are opposed to change in religious matters. To them the old seems the true and every variation is in the direction of error. But there have been reasonable objectors to some of the new versions of the Bible. Some translations have been too free; they have not yielded the precise meaning of the original. Some have been too verbose. They have multiplied words and have weakened the statement without materially adding to the clearness of it. Sometimes the dignity of the old versions has been lost in the effort to modernize the expression. Taking the whole world of English-reading students of the Bible, the largest number today probably prefer the Authorized Version, the King James version. The next largest class probably includes those who prefer the American Revision. None of the versions that have appeared since the American Revision has met with wide favor. There are admirers here and there of each of them, but more objectors than admirers.

Now there comes to hand a new version made upon a different principle. It is called the "concordant" version because the plan is to represent a Greek word wherever it occurs by the same English word or expression everywhere. It assumes that in the original the same word has everywhere the same meaning. As an example, take the Greek word "hupostasis." This occurs five times in the New Testament: 2 Cor. 9:4, 2 Cor. 11:17, Heb. 1:3, Heb. 3:14, and Heb. 11:1. In our King James version this word is rendered "confidence" (or the adjective form "confident") three times, "person" one time, and "substance" one time. In the new Concordant version it is everywhere rendered "assumption."

The question is, Is there a gain or a loss in this plan of using always the same English word for the same Greek word?

At first glance it would seem that there is a decided gain. But the attempt to make one principle or one rule apply everywhere often leads to extreme and bizarre results. Take the case of Hebrews 1:3; King James version has it:

"Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high."

The new Concordant version has it:

"Who, being the Effulgence of His glory and Emblem of His assumption, as well as carrying on the universe by His powerful declaration, making a cleansing of sins, is seated at the right hand of the Majesty in the heights."

This rendering comes very near making nonsense out of the original. The word, "assumption," to English ears does not very well lend itself to the suggestion of the thought of person. It may be that "hupostasis" does not have precisely the same meaning in all the five instances of its occurrence in the New Testament. If it has not, then the translation should reveal the differences in the original. The same English word does not always have the same meaning as used by different writers or even by the same writer. Why, then, should we believe that the words of the Greek never vary in meaning? As a matter of fact, a Greek lexicon shows that Greek words did vary in meaning.

What the average person wants in a translation of the Bible is not a literal version, but one that most easily and directly yields to his mind the meaning of the original.

The author of this new version has been working at it for twenty-five years and has produced a book that will interest scholars, but he cannot reasonably hope that the common people will take to it. Close students of the Bible will find it helpful in determining the precise meaning of certain texts and every one who wishes to know the Greek Testament will be glad to have the help of this literal translation. The book is mechanically and typographically excellent and is highly commended by some who have examined it. The complete work is sold for $12, cheapest binding, but there is a pocket edition of the New Testament priced from $1 to $2.50, according to the binding.

Flat Rock Church's Opportunity

Flat Rock Church, Guilford County, has recently fallen into the practice of having Home-Coming Day. It is especially appropriate for this church from which have gone out so many men and women to live in other communities. This church left such an impression on them that they are glad when they can go back even for a little while. And it makes their visit more enjoyable if they can meet their associates of former years. It has occurred to some of these returning pilgrims that it would be a fitting, a handsome thing, a pious thing, for all friends of Flat Rock Church to unite in preparing a great memorial in the form of a splendid new building of stone to take the place of the present aging wooden building. Surely this would do much to add prestige to a place already famous for the preachers it has sent out and for the good influence it has exerted. It seems to us an opportunity to do a great and lasting service to the church. New times create new demands and present equipment will not meet the demands of the future. Is this not a fitting time, is this not the psychological moment, to begin in earnest the undertaking? It could not have been easily done earlier than now. Later than this may be too late. We understand that this matter is to have serious consideration in the home-coming meeting next Sunday. We hope that a reasonable optimism and a determination to stand by Flat Rock Church in its progressive movements will characterize the meeting. Surely the cause of true religion is important enough to justify great sacrifices and to inspire the most liberal freewill offerings.

Two Corner-Stones to Be Laid in One Day

Brother Curry and his Forsythe people are announcing that the corner-stones of two of their churches will be laid next Sunday. This is extraordinary, perhaps unprecedented. We congratulate them upon their progress and wish we could be with them next Sunday to rejoice with them.

PROHIBITION NOT AN ISSUE IN 1928?

By Luther K. Long

A statement something like this is frequently seen in the press: "Prohibition is not, and should not be made, a political issue in the campaign of 1928."

In some instances the person using this form of speech is evidently confused as to the real significance of the words he utters. In other cases the writer is endeavoring to quiet the drys in his own party, while encouraging the wet element everywhere to proceed as though there was no such thing as the Eighteenth Amendment.

In the state of Iowa, according to recent reports, efforts are already being made to line up a prospective delegation to the Democratic National Convention in favor of Governor Al Smith—in spite of the efforts of former Secretary of Agriculture E. T. Meredith looking toward securing a delegation that will give its support to a dry candidate. "Let's not fight among ourselves," seems to be the idea of certain promoters of the Smith boom, "let's fight the Republicans. We of Iowa were for McAdoo in 1924 because we believed him to be the strongest man in the party. Now that McAdoo has withdrawn we are inclined to Governor Smith because he seems at present to be the strongest man in the party for the 1928 campaign." Thus would prohibition be eliminated as an issue in 1928.

Senator Walsh, of Montana, is much more rational in his views, as expressed recently in an interview with a representative of the Washington Evening Star. This outstanding dry Democrat says:

"One need only refer to recent tests in both houses of Congress to satisfy himself that in so far as public sentiment is reflected there, the country is overwhelmingly dry. An exceptionally accurate correspondent says Congress is as dry as six to one, and that in four Congresses since prohibition was adopted there has been no retrogression. There must be, therefore, a very substantial change of sentiment before repeal becomes a live issue. The wet and dry question undoubtedly will enter many congressional contests, but it is unthinkable that either party will declare in favor of repeal in whole or in part, or for reversal of the policy."

Senator Walsh then proceeds to enumerate some of the living issues for the 1928 campaign: The tariff, farm relief, political corruption, the growing exactions of trusts and monopolies.

It may be that no one party will venture a plank in its platform calling for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, and that no other party will do more than to incorporate in its platform a general statement favoring the enforcement of all laws. But these two policies will still leave a very large section in each of the great parties entirely unsatisfied.

If there is a considerable group of citizens who are determined to secure the repeal—or at least the practical nullification—of the Eighteenth Amendment, let that group so declare, making its nominations and conducting its campaign in the open.

At any rate, in view of the aggressive activities of the wet group, it seems imperative that any party expecting to make a successful appeal to law-abiding, moral and temperance voters, should unequivocally declare—both in its platform and in the persons and characters of its nominees for office—that, at this particular stage of the prohibition fight, it stands fair and square for the Eighteenth Amendment.

Senator Walsh is undoubtedly correct in his judgment that the country is overwhelmingly dry. But the sense of this situation will get to the inner consciousness of the wets much more effectually through the right sort of platform and candidate—especially if the wets themselves are in the field with a wet platform and wet candidates who go down to ignominious and deserved defeat.

A SYMPOSIUM ON THE CHURCH

1. What It Means to Build a House of Worship.

God is glorified in the building of a house of worship. It subordinates the physical to the spiritual; it puts property to spiritual uses; it redeems money from sordid meanings, and turns it to high account; it goes to establish the kingdom of God in the realm of nature; it extends the dominion of the gospel and asserts the dominancy of divine things; it puts tongues into wood and stone to proclaim the name of God and Christ; it gives voice to dumb beams and walls, and makes them eloquent of eternal things. The erection of a church is the homage of both labor and capital to Christ; in it a man's toil, or that which he has toiled for, is consecrated.—Bishop Marvin.

2. The Mission of the Church.

The Church must grope her way into the alleys and courts and purlieus of the city, and up the broken staircase, and into the bar room, and beside the loathsome sufferer; she must go down into the pit with the miner, into the forecastle with the sailor, into the tent with the soldier, into the shop with the mechanic, into the factory with the operative, into the field with the farmer, into the counting-room with the merchant. Like the air, the Church must press equally on all the surfaces of society; like the sea, flow into every nook of the shoreline of humanity; and, like the sun, shine on all things foul and low as well as fair and high, for she was organized, commissioned, as well as equipped for the moral renovation of the world.—Bishop Simpson.

3. The Moral Influence of the Church.

Mayor Latrobe, of Baltimore, once said: "I have been mayor of this city for nearly fourteen consecutive years, but I here solemnly declare that I would not be willing to try to govern Baltimore with five times the present police force, if it were not for the corrective and restraining influences of the Church."

A young lawyer, an infidel, going to the West to settle for life, made his boast that he would locate in some place where there were no churches, Sunday schools, or Bibles. Before the year was out, he wrote to a former classmate, a young minister, begging him to come, and bring plenty of Bibles, and preach, and start a Sunday school, "for," said he, "I have become convinced that a place without Christians and Sabbaths and churches and Bibles is too much like hell for any living man to stay in."—From Sunday School Times.

4. The Church as a Disturber.

The Church was built to disturb the peace of man; but, often, it does not perform its duty for fear of disturbing the peace of the Church. What kind of artillery practice would that be which declined to fire for fear of kicking over the gun carriages, or waking up the sentinels asleep at their posts?—Henry Ward Beecher.

5. The Church as a Brotherhood.

The Church is a brotherhood, a school for training in fellowship, a home for the cultivation of the social virtues and the human graces, a society in which men are bound together in sympathy and holy service by a common allegiance to the Son of God. It is a congregation of faithful men, ever striving to learn and live the new commandment, looking unto Jesus for power to understand and practice the law of love. The new commandment is the standard by which all churches must be measured, and in the light of this standard the Church universal knows herself to be poor and blind and naked.

Many city churches are made up of people who do not even know one another, and who do not want to know one another. Too many village churches are composed of people who know one another, and are sorry that they do. The very thing which the New Testament asserts to be the one thing needful, and without which the world cannot be won for Christ, is the thing which is today least abundant. To create an ampler and a firmer fellowship inside the Church of Jesus is the first work for which preachers are ordained, and yet many of them, instead of staying at home and attending to their business, have gone scampering off in wild crusades against the distant Saracens, wasting their strength in frenzied efforts to reconstruct by a furious blowing of trumpets the economic and social order.—Dr. Charles E. Jefferson.

6. The Church as the Custodian of the Most Sacred and Imperishable Institution.

Blessed sacrament that has helped men to live and die for these nineteen centuries of grace! It is the imperishable memorial! Lofty monuments shall yet crumble as the earth shall be riven by earthquakes. The sea shall yet claim large spaces where the monuments of man now lift their tall heads. Massive statues shall disappear forever, and bring down with them into oblivion the great names which they commemorate. Even mighty cities, whose navies go afar to bear their commerce and spread their fame, shall be brought to ruins, as were Tyre and Babylon and Nineveh and Carthage, until there is scarce one stone left on another. All that men have done to establish and perpetuate their memories shall surely disapear in the coming of the new heavens and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, but the name of Jesus shall be kept alive in all the earth and in heaven itself at the memorial supper of the Lord.—Bishop Hendrix.

7. The Church of the Future.

I believe in the Church of the future. I think there is a day, not very far distant, which from the watch-towers of Asia, once the land of lords many, there shall roll out the exultant chorus, "One Lord!" When, from the watch-towers of Europe, distracted by divisions in the faith, there shall roll up the grateful chorus, "One Faith!" When, from the watch-towers of our own America, torn by controversies respecting the initiatory rite into the visible church of our Lord Jesus, there shall roll forth the inspiring chorus, "One baptism!" When, from the watch-towers of Africa, as though the God of all the race were not her God, as if the Father of the entire human family were not her Father, when from the watch-towers of neglected and despised Africa, there shall roll forth the chorus, "One God and Father of us all!" When the sarmamental host, scattered all over the face of this lower creation, shall spring upon their feet, and, seizing the harp of thanksgiving, they shall join in the chorus that shall be responded to by the angels, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all, who is above all, and through all, and in (us) all; to whom be glory, dominion and majesty, and blessing forever."—Alfred Cockman.

H. H. Smith.

Ashland, Va.

Take all of this Book upon reason that you can and the balance on faith, and you will live and die a better man.—Abraham Lincoln.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE ITEMS

The increase in our enrollment is much over one hundred more this semester than last fall semester. In a sense, it may be declared that High Point College has passed through the first critical period of its infancy. Let us hope that coming years will deal with us no more harshly.

Historical Corner

Since we now have more than the 8,000 volumes required for A-grade rating in our library, we are desirous of establishing an historical corner here. There should be assembled and kept in an accessible place in the bounds of our conference such historical literature. Here it may be safely kept and be accessible to any interested member of our church in the state.

In order that this may be completed, we are asking all our friends who have books of rare interest on the history of the Methodist Protestant Church, either to donate them or to loan them to the college for the use of the church. Such books will not be used a very great deal by any one, but as they now are, they are possibly not being used at all; when if they should be here, and it should be known that such books were here, doubtless many people might use them.

The College Assessment

We thank those pastors and churches who have taken the offerings for this cause. You may be interested to know that of the $5,000 laid on the district about $2,200 has been sent in. We do not think this represents the interest of our people in High Point College any more than it represents their interest in the education of our youth, and yet it might be so interpreted.

High Point College is this year aiding between thirty and forty young people by free tuition, who are either children of ministers or they are preparing themselves for religious work; at least half of them are making this preparation. We are glad to do this because we know that this gift will bear rich returns to both the church and to the college in the years to come. But in doing this the college is making a contribution it can ill afford to make at this time.

It has been our hope that this year our churches would go over the top in this assessment. However it is useless to argue about the matter. Our plea is that you consider the results of the three years of the activities of the college—the contribution it is making. If this does not convince you no array of formal logic would do it.

Cordially yours,

R. M. Andrews.

UNANSWERED PRAYER

Unanswered yet? The prayer your lips have pleaded
In agony of heart these many years?
Does faith begin to fail, is hope declining,
And think you all in vain those falling tears?
Say not the Father hath not heard your prayer,
You shall have your desire sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith cannot be unanswered,
Her feet are firmly planted on the Rock,
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock,
She knows the Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, "It shall be done, sometime, somewhere!"

The WORK and the WORKERS

During this last week we were with Rev. W. H. Neese and his people at Level Cross in a meeting. In many ways it was a good meeting, but so far as visible results, in open confession of Jesus Christ, there were none. In some way the progress of the Kingdom is very greatly hampered in this community. And not knowing any way out of it except through prayer, a group of 33 people covenanted together to "Pray daily that God, our Father, will in His own way break down and destroy the agencies of sin in this community, which stand in the way of the progress of His Church." All Christion people who read this will please join this faithful band of God's children in earnest prayer for His blessings upon the Level Cross community.

Campaign for Methodist Protestant

Mr. Charles Reiner, Jr., has communicated with every pastor in the Conference asking that during the month of October we double our subscription list to the Methodist Protestant. This should be easy to do since our list is so small.

Committees

It was my purpose to publish a full list of Conference Committees this week, but pressure of work has prevented. And perhaps it is well since several pastors have not sent to Brother Bates names and addresses of delegates. Please do this at once so the list of committees may be complete when published next week. I cannot tell why, but somehow in appointing chairmen of committees I omitted the Committee on Rural Church Life. I am hereby asking Rev. E. A. Bingham to act as chairman of that committee. And since Rev. P. E. Lindley, because of double work, has asked to be relieved from the Committee on Young People's Work, I am asking Rev. E. L. Ballard to take his place.

Quarterly Report Blanks

These blanks for fourth quarterly reports will be mailed out next week. Please be prepared to mail them back at the earliest possible moment.

Pastors' Salaries

The fourth quarterly conferences are being held in many of the charges, and many of our pastors are serving on salaries far too small. Such salaries frequently make it embarrassing for pastors with families. So we are asking our thinking laymen to seriously consider, at the proper time, the matter of increasing salaries for next year.

Election of Church Officers

Let every pastor and every church take notice: All church officers for next year should be elected before going to Conference. Please see that this is done.

Appointments

October 12, Haw River Mission, quarterly conference.

October 13, Tabernacle, quarterly conference.

October 15, Kernersville, afternoon, quarterly conference.

October 15 and 16, Forsythe, quarterly conference and dedicate church.

October 21, Davidson, quarterly conference.

October 21, Denton at night, quarterly conference.

Faithfully yours,

A. G. Dixon.

BOUNDARY CHANGES

If, in your judgment, there are boundary changes which should be made in the circuits of our conference in the interest of Kingdom progress, please write me, giving full particulars. I am not seeking to make changes, but as chairman of the Boundary Committee I should like to have in writing any facts that the committee should know. The committee will likely hold one meeting before Conference, so write soon, and be sure to say what backing your proposition has.

Church Extension

If your church is asking for help from the Board of Church Extension for next year please put that in writing now and mail to Mr. M. A. Coble, Burlington, N. C. Please cut your request to the minimum, remembering that each year the Board gets requests amounting to $10,000 or more, when it really gets around $3,500 for distribution. The Board can only distribute what it gets.

Please heed this request promptly, and to the letter. The Board must hold a meeting before Conference, and these requests should come in writing before Conference rather than come through delegations at Conference. Thank you for this co-operation.

A. G. Dixon.

Another Version of the New Testament

Some familiar passages of the New Testament have a strange sound from the pages of this new version. John's Gospel thus begins:

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was toward God, and God was the Word. This was in the beginning toward God. All came into being through It, and apart from It not one thing came into being which has come into being. In It was life, and the life was the light of men. And the light is appearing in the darkness, and the darkness grasped it not."

Instead of "God glorifies his Son Jesus" in Acts 3:13 we read, "God glorifies His Boy Jesus."

No doubt one would soon become accustomed to the new style of this version and cease to be prejudiced against it. The main question is as to its value in aiding the reader to understand the New Testament. This question can be finally answered only by trial. A man who has put so much effort into the work of preparing this new version should have the consideration of a fair examination of the book he has produced.

The translator of this work is A. E. Knoch, of California. The book may be ordered of The Concordant Publishing Co., East Sixth St., Los Angeles, California.

—As we approach the meeting of the Annual Conference we should feel a deepening concern that all its work may be well done. It is all too important to be slighted and certainly too important to be done badly. Let us pray that divine guidance may keep us from the errors we may be prone to make in our ignorance of many related facts. Let us labor and pray for a conference that will greatly promote the work of our church everywhere and retard it nowhere. In the spirit of Christ all difficulties can be overcome with surprising ease. If the opposite spirit should find place in our hearts we might make difficulties where there are none.

A TEN DOLLAR BILL FROM HEAVEN

"About fifty years ago, I was a member of the West Virginia Conference, and stationed at Point Pleasant," writes George Cleaton Wilding, in The Methodist Protestant. "We had formed a Conference Insurance Society of a very simple type. There were about 100 members in the society, and each one, upon the death of a member, was obligated to promptly send ten dollars to the secretary for the widow.

"One morning in the early autumn, I was planning to go out to Hickory Chapel to begin a protracted meeting, to be away from home for possibly two weeks or more. My little bay horse was hitched at the parsonage gate while I went to the post office for my mail.

"As I looked over my letters, I found one from the secretary of our Conference Insurance Society, informing me of the death of my good friend, Brother Hartley, and requesting me to send my ten dollars for Mrs. Hartley. I opened my purse and counted my pile. It was all there. I had no bank account behind it. All told, I had ten dollars and forty cents, all I had in the world.

"I did not hesitate for a moment. Sister Hartley must have her money. My promise must be made good. I stepped up to the post office window and bought a money order for ten dollars, bought a stamped envelope, and begged a sheet of writing paper.

"I went to the desk and wrote a letter, enclosed the money order, addressed the envelope to the secretary, and dropped it in the slot. I walked out of the post office feeling that I had done the right thing. I had about thirty cents left.

"As I walked up the street, I fell to wondering where I could borrow some money to leave with my wife for family supplies while I was away out in the country.

"I had just concluded that I would stop in at Brother Cable's hardware store and approach him for a loan. As I drew near this store, I met Judge Redmond. The judge was a good Presbyterian, who lived out in the country at Pleasant Flats. They had a pretty, white church, out in that fertile farming region, but were without a preacher. I had been preaching for them on Sabbath afternoons, twice a month for several months.

"As I drew near the judge, he stopped and shook hands with me. Then he drew forth from the inside pocket of his coat a large, plump wallet, saying, 'I have had a peculiar experience. Just as you stepped out of the post office a voice seemed to say to me, "You Presbyterians are not treating that young Methodist preacher right. Those voluntary collections taken at the church have amounted to but little. If you had a pastor, his services for this length of time would have cost you quite a sum." So I'd better pay my quarterage. I think that is what you Methodists call it.'

"He unstrapped that fat wallet and drew forth a ten-dollar bill and handed it to me. I gasped for breath as I managed to thank him for his thoughtful kindness. Then I explained to him just what had taken place in the post office. We both agreed that it was well-nigh miraculous. Note that he did not give me five, nor seven, nor eleven dollars, but ten dollars, the exact amount that was at that moment reposing in my letter in the box at the post office.

"Whose voice was it that spoke to the judge? I have always spoken of this gift as a 'ten-dollar bill from heaven.'" —Selected.

THE CHURCH'S INFERIORITY COMPLEX

I do not like the word "apologetics," and yet this is an honorable word, so far as the practice of the Church in its use is concerned. In every age the Christian Church has had its apologists.

In our day the apologists are busy explaining how religion can continue to hold up its head in an age of science. The arrogance, the self-complacency, the dogmatism, the superiority of the scientists are offensive to good taste, and they are particularly offensive to one who is devoted to religion and who believes in its absolute supremacy.

The scientists tell us about their marvelous achievements and about the power and energy that undergird the physical universe. For example, they inform us that there is enough energy in a speck of radium which can be held on the point of a pin to lift the British navy to the top of the Himalayan Mountains, to the highest peak of these mountains, and they expect us to be startled by such a pronouncement of the scientific world.

What I hope to see is a changed attitude on the part of the Church and religious leaders, an attitude of superiority rather than of inferiority in comparison with the dogmatists of the scientific realm, and I am absolutely convinced that the herald of religion has perfect right to develop in himself a superiority complex with reference to any other force or factor in the ken of human knowledge. The Gospel has more power than any other instrumentality or agency conceivable. Its power is exercised in the spiritual realm.

Here is a man who has dissipated and groveled in his sin until he has become a nuisance. The Gospel has the power to transform such a man and to make him into a new creature, capable of standing upright among his fellows and living a clean, pure, helpful and uplifting life. Talk about the mysteries of chemistry, the discoveries of biology, and the power of physics! They are nothing compared with an agency possessed of such power, a power that resides in the mysteries of God.

Herein resides the distinct source of superiority of the Church—it is the custodian of the mysteries of God. Let us cease apologizing for the Church; let us cease always remaining on the defensive; let us become positive and aggressive in our attitude; let us abandon our inferiority complex, and let us go forth imbued with the spirit of genuine and abiding superiority. When the Church takes this attitude, the Church will prosper and the kingdom will grow.—W. A. H., in Christian Sun.

REVERENCE FOR LAW

Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country and never to tolerate their violation. . . . Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the law be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling-books, and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed from legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. And, in short, let it become the political religion of the Nation, and let the old and young, the rich and poor, the grave and the gay of all sexes and tongues and colors and conditions sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars.—Abraham Lincoln.

FOREIGN MISSIONS—KALGAN IS CAPTURED

Such was the heading of the following in the Columbus Evening Dispatch dated October 3: "The important city of Kalgan, the largest commercial center north of Peking, has been captured by Shansi province troops from the northerners, official foreign quarters were advised today." And yet in a letter received from Rev. C. G. Soderbom written just shortly before he and Mrs. Soderbom set sail for the United States on September 4, he writes: "The Nationalist or Southern army have lately met bad reverses and General Feng Yu Hsiang plans have also been upset by the Northern forces. Although it is impossible to make any forecast of the situation, it seems likely that North China, or our part of the country, will have no change of military government for some time and the outcome will depend on the fight in Central and South China." What this capture of Kalgan by the Southern army will mean for our work and its future I am not able to say. But we all do know that conditions in China are in such an unsettled state that no one can even predict what a day will bring forth. In one short month the whole situation in and about Kalgan has completely changed.

In this capture of Kalgan we are all greatly interested and concerned. It is where all our missionary work in China is located. Hitherto, there has not been a great deal of fighting going on there. That part of the country has been infested with bandits that made it very dangerous but with this capture of Kalgan it puts our work, at the present time, right in the heart of the great warfare. Naturally, we will all wait and pray anxiously for the outcome.

At the time of the Soderboms' departure from Kalgan he writes: "As the outlook is now brighter we have decided to open the primary and grammar school this autumn at the regular time. The Girls' School will also open again on September 15. As conditions are more hopeful than they have been for some time we also hope that all the work can soon be taken up more fully again."

You will recall that at our last Union Board meeting it was decided to have Horace S. Williams to go to Japan to teach English in the Nagoya College until conditions became more settled in China. But upon receipt of this word Mr. Williams sent the following cablegram: "Conditions are more hopeful. Have decided to remain." It was the consensus of opinion of the workers over there that his leaving at this particular time would be disastrous to our work there. So Mr. Williams is still in China, having full charge of the men's department of the work, while the women's work has been put in charge of Mrs. Larson.

In the meantime gracious revivals are taking place in different parts of this war-ridden country with its teeming millions. Those who have had the privilege of reading the recent account by George T. B. Davis of the wonderful revivals that are breaking out, almost spontaneously, and yet in answer to fervent prayer, in so many different sections of this thickly settled land will have your hearts stirred with praise and thanksgiving for this wonderful manifestation of the Spirit of the Master in turning the hearts of so many to Him and in so providentially taking care of His faithful workers. And wherever this revival spirit is entering God's Word, as a daily companion to those who accept, in free distribution, goes also, and these new converts are feeding upon it. Let our prayers ascend daily for China in these critical but opportune moments!

The Soderboms in America

According to schedule, Rev. and Mrs. Soderbom, ere you shall read this, should be safely and comfortably resting in the home of Mrs. Soderbom's sister, Mrs. Dr. George S. Coon, 1623 Everett Avenue, Louisville, Ky. They were scheduled to reach Vancouver October 4 and then go directly to Louisville, Ky., where they will have their home during their furlough of six months in America. While here they will be glad to do all the deputation work possible. So let our churches be free to call on them for service.

BOARD OF EDUCATION INTERESTS

Dean J. G. Willis sends in an encouraging report from Westminster College, Tehuacana, Texas. There is a splendid increase in the enrollment over last year and every requirement in attendance and faculty standard is met. Mr. Paul Howell, one of the ministerial students, spent much of the summer working for students and the results are very satisfactory.

November 1st is the date set when Rev. G. O. McMillan will be officially inauguarated president of Westminster College. Rev. H. H. Price, D. D., pastor of the Knoxville church, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and a former president of Westminster, will deliver the main address. President McMillan will, of course, make the response and there will be brief felicitations from Dean Willis and the Secretary of the Board of Education.

Rally Day orders received to October 8 totaled 475, a substantial increase over last year. Reports of offerings in most cases show an increase also, while the success of the programs is everywhere apparent. It is the desire of the Board of Education to render such assistance in the observance of the day that it will be constantly more helpful, giving added interest and impetus to the work of the local church. We hope too that more interest in the educational work of the denomination will be stimulated.

The campaign for Adrian College is moving forward encouragingly in the Illinois conference. Friends are being discovered in unexpected places and some generous gifts being made. With only partial reports in for the third week nearly $18,000 of the $30,000 had been secured. In spite of some problems it looks as though Illinois would do her part splendidly. Of the $500,000 set for this area $350,000 has been subscribed.

The steady improvement at Adrian is the cause of the greatest satisfaction to her many friends. Another increase in the enrollment, further improvement in the faculty, improved equipment ond the success of the campaign for the endowment all make for encouragement and a growing vision of still better things.

There are twelve ministerial students at Adrian this year compared with nine last year, of which two graduated. Five new "theologs" give a net increase of three. Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kansas, Missouri and Pittsburgh conferences are represented. The reports from the other schools have not been received.

The Secretary of the Board of Education is planning to spend most of November and parts of October and December in the Southwest working with President McMillan in behalf of Westminster College. Extra funds must be secured if this school is to be made permanent and more useful. The attitude of the Methodist Protestant people of that area is encouraging and their response to the "Westminster 500 Club" really inspiring. A large number of consistent givers will underwrite the college and remove it permanently from the fog of uncertainty.

The Board of Education is already obligated to 35 ministerial students for financial assistance and to eighteen non-ministerial students. This will require approximately $10,000, less than $3,500 of which comes from our invested funds. The rest must be secured from former beneficiaries in the shape of return payments and in the way of gifts from interested friends. Last year return payments came to $4,622, which would leave over $2,000 to provide for.

Some of our beneficiaries, many, if not a majority of them, are making a real struggle to secure their education. They do not borrow funds until compelled to so that in most cases the loans made by the Board of Education enable over fifty Methodist Protestant young people to attend our colleges or seminary and who otherwise could not attend. There is nothing spectacular about this service but it is as important as anything being done by the denomination.

A new departure at Adrian this year is the establishment of an employment bureau. Contact is made with the employers of the community and the students placed wherever opportunities arise, thus enabling those who wish work to secure it. This not only helps the student who wishes to secure work, but is a real convenience to those needing help. It widens the field for those students who must do outside work if they are to enjoy a college education.

FRANK W. STEPHENSON,
Executive Secretary, Board of Education.

"MY TORCH"

This God-lit torch of mine
I lift, that it may shine
With light divine,—that I have found
An all round
To brighten life's short way.

I lift my torch on high
That other travelers may descry
The God-ward path,
And, following on,—life's aftermath
To them may Glory be.

I lift my torch 'mid strife,
That o'er the darkening paths of life
Its flickering gleam
May shed abroad a friendly beam
On every striving soul.

Aloof I hold my torch
That every morrow's opening porch
May entered be
By others, who may clearly see
The upland path.

My torch when lifted high
Gives service sweet afar and nigh,
Dispelling night,
And lighting others from my light,
My own is none the less.

Oh, may I never fail
With upraised torch to blaze the trail,
Or pass it on
To someone, who with love anon
Would grasp my ended task.

SOULS ARE BUILT AS TEMPLES ARE

Souls are built as temples are—
Sunken deep, unseen, unknown
Lies the sure foundation stone,
Then the courses framed to bear
Lift the cloisters pillared fair,
Last of all the airy spire,
Soaring heavenward higher and higher,
Nearest sun and nearest star.

Souls are built as temples are—
Inch by inch in gradual rise
Mount the layered masonries.
Warring questions have their day,
Kings arise and pass away,
Laborers vanish one by one,
Still the temple is not done,
Still completion seems afar.

Souls are built as temples are—
Here a carving rich and quaint,
There the image of a saint;
Here a deep-hued pane to tell
Sacred truth or miracle;
Every little helps the much,
Every careful, careless touch
Adds a charm or leaves a scar.

Souls are built as temples are—
Based on Truth's eternal law,
Sure and steadfast, without flaw,
Through the sunshine, through the snows,
Up and on the building goes;
Every fair thing finds its place,
Every hard thing ends a grace.
Every hand may make or mar.

DIAMETER OF THE UNIVERSE

News dispatches recently bore the tidings that science at last has measured the sidereal universe. Through delicate instruments, three astronomers have computed the diameter of the starry universe, of which our solar system is a tiny part, to be a hundred and ninety quadrillion miles. The earth is physically a dot in swirling space.

The astronomers concerned were Allan Douglas Maxwell and James M. Goewey, of the University of California, and W. H. Wright, of the Lick observatory. The conclusion was reached as a result of study of the destiny of stars near the outer rim of the sidereal galaxy where our world is found.

The problem of the astronomers was to discover how far into space the farther stars of the Milky Way extend and what their distance is from the earth. Photographs were successfully made of stars 95,000,000,000,000,000 miles removed from the world. At that distance the Milky Way begins to thin out, and it is believed that the sidereal universe ends not far beyond.

The measurements were made indirectly by means of light brilliance. It is known that a light moved twice as far away from an observer appears to be only one-fourth as brilliant. The distance of the stars was computed by obtaining a measure of their brilliance as seen from the earth and their absolute brilliance at a standard distance from the earth. The difference gave sufficient data to determine their distance.

The sidereal universe, the astronomers declare, is 10,000 parsecs in diameter, and is composed of more than a billion stars occupying such positions in space that the universe assumes the shape of a thin watch. A parsec is a unit roughly equivalent to nineteen trillion miles.—The Christian Sun.

OUR STORY PAGE

THE JEWELERS

They were playing jewelry store, Edith and Corinne, when Mrs. Barr called from the back door. Edith ran up at once.

"Hadn't you better invite Mrs. Mills' granddaughter over to play with you?" her mother asked.

Edith scowled. "We don't either of us know her," she said.

"It won't take long to get acquainted. She looks lonesome."

"Well," yielded Edith

The two little girls talked together in whispers for a minute; then Edith slowly crawled through the place in the fence where the pickets were off, and walked toward the little girl on the big old-fashioned garden.

"Would you like to come and play with us?" she asked. "We're going to have a jewelry store; we're making the jewelry now."

"Oh, thank you! I'd love to!" cried the other. "I'll run right in and ask grandma. You will have to teach me how to play it; I never did," she said.

"Oh, we're stringing snowberries for pearl necklaces and making pins out of asters, and doing things like that. When we get enough we'll ask the other children to come and buy."

"It must be fun!" and Laura Mills' face glowed with pleasure.

The bench, which was now a counter for the display of jewelry, showed several necklaces.

"How pretty!" cried Laura. "Oh, I know what I'll make," and she ran back into her grandmother's garden.

"I don't think that very polite—to go off first thing," said Edith, as the visitor did not return.

"Let's tell her she can have a store by herself," suggested Corinne. "Probably she won't make anything nice."

So Edith called through the fence: "If you want to, you can have your things on your side."

"All right!" came back to them from behind the flowerbeds; but it did not have a joyful sound.

For a long time the three worked quietly. Finally Edith and Corinne were ready for customers. "We'll have to go and tell her," whispered Edith.

Together they approached the fence.

"Oh, what a lot!" exclaimed Corinne.

"Why, it's just like a real jewelry store!" cried Edith.

"Aren't they pretty?" said Laura, smiling.
